FALSE AND VEXATIOUS LITIGATION IN ANCIENT HINDU LAW

N. PHALALOGHAN RAO, B.A., LL.B., ADVOCATE, MASULIPATAM.

The idea of punishing and discouraging false and vexatious claims or defences by awarding compensatory costs to the successful party is not a new or modern one. Even in our ancient legal system we find such a practice in a more well defined and detailed fashion.

A false or vexatious claim पक्षमास has been described thus.

“अप्रसिद्धं, निराबाधं, निरर्थं, निष्प्रयोजनम् ।

असाध्यं वा विरुद्धं वा, पक्षमासं विवर्जयेत् ॥”

(1) अप्रसिद्धं = Unnatural, unusual or unknown, e.g., Defendant has taken away the horns of the plaintiff's hare.

(2) निराबाधं = Harmless, trivial, e.g., defendant is doing his business in his house with the aid of the light in plaintiff's house.

(3) निरर्थं = Meaningless, unintelligible.

(4) निष्प्रयोजनं = Useless, e.g., the defendant has been singing near plaintiff's house.

(5) असाध्यं = Improbable, impracticable, e.g., the defendant has derided or ridiculed the plaintiff with a frown (धूमरेण)

(6) विरुद्धं = Unnatural, e.g., the plaintiff has been scolded by the defendant (who is dumb).

Kinds of Defences to an action

Katyayana has enumerated four kinds of defences:—

“सखं मिथ्योत्तरं चैव, प्रत्यवस्कन्दनं तथा ।
पूर्वन्यायविधिश्चैवमुत्तरं स्याच्चतुर्विधम् ॥”

(1) संप्रतिपत्तिः (2) मिथ्या^{or} निहव^{or} अपहव^{or} (3) प्रत्य-वस्कन्दनं (4) प्राङ्न्यायः.

(1) Cognovit or defendant admitting the claim. (2) Denial of claim. (3) Plea of discharge. (4) Plea of res judicata.

It is unnecessary to discuss the cases where the defendant admits the suit claim. The rest alone need to be dealt with.

(2) निहव Where the defendant denies the debt or the suit claim. If the plaintiff successfully proves his case, the defendant besides paying the suit amount will have to pay an equal amount to the King as a sort of fine for setting up a false defence (मिथ्योत्तर or निहव)

“निहवे भावितो दद्यात्, धनं राज्ञे च तत्समम् ।

मिथ्यामियोगी द्विगुणं, अभियोगाद्धनं हरेत् ॥”

If the plaintiff fails to prove his case where the defendant denies the debt or claim, then the plaintiff will be mulcted with a payment of twice the suit amount to the king, as the plaintiff is guilty of advancing a false claim (पक्षमास)

(3) & (4) प्रत्यवस्कन्दनं, and प्राङ्न्याय Plea of discharge and plea of res judicata. The same rule applies to these two cases also. But when the defendant fails to establish that the suit is barred by res judicata or fails to prove that he had already discharged the debt, he has to pay the suit amount to the plaintiff and twice of it to the King.

“अथ प्रत्यर्थी प्राङ्न्यायं, कारणं वा भाषयितुं न शक्नोति तदा स एव मिथ्यामियोगीति राज्ञे द्विगुणं धनं दद्यात् ॥”

Vignaneswara.

Even when the plaintiff is not able to state his case properly he will be considered to be a false claimant and he has to pay twice the suit amount to the king as fine.

“अथ अभियोक्ता अभियोगं वक्तुं न शक्नोति तदा मिथ्यामियोगीति प्रतिपदोक्तं धनं दण्डं द्विगुणं दद्यादिति विधीयते ।”

Vignaneswara.

INCONSISTENT PLEAS or हीनवादिः Parties are not allowed to take up inconsistent positions or raise inconsistent pleas during the course of the trial; and if they do so they will be fined. Thus we see that the principle in the maxims 'Ordine placitandi servato servatur et jus' i.e., the order of the pleading being preserved the law is preserved; and 'Nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam,' i.e., no one can change his mind to the prejudice of another's right' was observed even in those days also. Narada describes हीनवाद thus.

“पूर्वपादं परिस्रज्य धोऽन्यमालम्बते पुनः ।

पदसंक्रमणाज्ज्ञेयो हीनवादी स वै नरः ॥”

- For example, if the plaintiff at the time of the complaint stage (आवेदनसमये) states, that the defendant borrowed the suit amount from him, and subsequently changes his case at the time of giving evidence (साक्षात्समये) that defendant has stolen the amount, the plaintiff is liable to be punished as हीनवादिन्; but only with a fine and not with an amount equal to the suit claim.

हीनवादी दण्ड्यो भवति न प्रकृतार्थादीयते ।

हीनवाद is also described by another sage thus:

“अन्यवादी, क्रियाद्वेषी, नोपस्थाता निरुत्तरः ।

आहूत प्रपलायी च हीनः पञ्चविधः स्मृतः ॥”

- (1) One who changes his case during trial or a prevaricating witness. (2) A hostile witness. (3) A party who does not stand in front of the Judge. (4) One who refuses to give evidence. (5) One who absconds when summoned.

Vague and indefinite replies or defences etc.

Vague and indefinite replies or defences were discouraged and punished. Cf. 'causa vaga et incerta non est causa rationabilis' i.e., a vague and uncertain cause is not a reasonable cause. The following are some of the typical instances of such vague and indefinite defences.

- (1) सदिग्ध e.g., Patent ambiguity—when the suit is laid for the recovery of 100 gold coins सुवर्णाः, defendant's answer is, he might have borrowed 100 सुवर्णाः or 100 माषाः—.

- (2) प्रकृतादन्यत् e.g., when the suit is for 100 सुवर्णाः, defendant says that he once borrowed 100 पण्यः.

- (3) अल्पम् (4) अतिभूरि

- (5) व्यस्तपद Irrelevant reply e.g., when the plaintiff claims 100 सुवर्णाः the defendant pleads that he was beaten by the plaintiff.

(6) निगूहार्थ—When the plaintiff claims 100 सुवर्णाः defendant replies that he does not owe anything to this plaintiff.

(7) आकूळ Absurd defence—To say that he has borrowed the amount from the plaintiff but he does not owe him anything (without pleading discharge).

(8) व्याख्यागम्य Ambiguous or unintelligible replies.

(9) असार Meaningless and silly replies e.g., when the suit is for principal and interest, defendant pleads that he has already paid the interest but the principal amount was not borrowed by him.

(10) संकरोत्तर Confusion of pleas or replies e.g., admitting the suit claim in one place, denying it in another and pleading discharge in a third—

Punishment for giving false evidence

Witnesses were also punished for giving false evidence. Yagnavalkya says.

“पृथक् पृथक् दण्डनीयाः कूटकृत्साक्षिणस्तथा ।

विवादाद्विगुणं दण्डं विवास्यो ब्राह्मणः स्मृतः ॥”

Each one of the false witnesses should be fined with double the suit amount; and in the case of a Brahmin he should be exiled.

“यः साक्ष्यं श्रावितोऽन्येभ्यो निबुते तत्तमोवृतः ।

स दायोऽष्टगुणं दण्डं, ब्राह्मणं तु विवासयेत् ॥”

Ibid.

When a witness, having agreed to give evidence and having received instructions also along with the other witnesses, denies everything at the time of giving evidence, he is liable to be fined with eight times the suit amount; and if he is a Brahmin he should be banished.

Punishment for Kings and Judges:

Not only false and vexatious litigants and witnesses were punished but also Kings and Judges, who did not properly administer justice out of fear, favour or malice. Manu says:

“अदण्ड्यान् दण्डयन् राजा, दण्ड्यांश्चैवाप्यदण्डयन् ।

अयशो महदाप्नोति नरकं चैव गच्छति ॥”

Punishing the innocent and acquitting the guilty, the King suffers from infamy and goes to hell. He should administer justice without malice.

“धर्मशास्त्रानुसारेण क्रोधलोभविषर्जितः ।

रागीहोमाद्व्यापि स्मृत्यपेतादिकारिणः ।

सम्याः पृथक् पृथक् दण्ड्याः, विवादात् द्विगुणं दमम् ॥”

Out of affection (sympathy or love) or out of covetousness (avarice) or out of fear if Judges decide cases in derogation of law, they are each liable to be fined with twice the suit amount—

There used to be four grades of courts.

(1) नृपाधिकृताः (2) पूगः (3) श्रेणी (4) कुळ.

नृपाधिकृत acted as the highest appellate tribunal, but further appeals lay to it from its own decisions with a change of advisors or Judges. If the appeal failed the defeated appellant was punished and if it succeeded the erstwhile Judges who wrongly decided the appeal previously were punished.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

MYERS v. ELMAN, (1940) A.C. 282 (H.L.).

Solicitor—Negligence in leaving conduct of case to managing clerk who caused to be filed false and inadequate affidavit of documents—Jurisdiction of Court to order solicitor to pay costs personally.

A solicitor through his managing clerk (to whom he left the conduct of a case) “as a result of a deliberate policy adopted in his office, in the conduct of the defence and in relation to discovery increased the plaintiff’s difficulties, added to the expense, and obstructed the interests of justice” by filing wholly inadequate and false affidavits and documents,

Held [reversing the majority view of the Court of Appeal in (1938) 3 All.E.R. 498], the Court has jurisdiction to order the solicitor to pay costs. The primary object of the Court is not to punish the solicitor, but to protect the client who has suffered and to indemnify the party who has been injured. The solicitor cannot escape his liability by dissociating himself from the acts and defaults of his managing clerk whose acts are to be treated as the acts of the principal. It is immaterial that no professional misconduct is attributed to the solicitor personally.

SCOTT v. FRANK F. SCOTT (LONDON), LTD., (1940) 1 Ch. 217.

Companies—Articles of association not in accordance with intention of signatories—Rectification—If can be made by Court.

The Court has no jurisdiction to rectify articles of association, even although it should be proved that the articles of association do not accord with what is proved to have been the concurrent intention of the signatories at the moment of their signature.

BISMAG, LTD. v. AMBLINS (CHEMISTS), LTD., (1940) 1 Ch. 225.

Trade Marks Act (1938) (c. 22), S. 4—Use by defendant of plaintiff's trade mark in relation to plaintiff's own goods—If infringement.

Plaintiffs had registered "bisurated" as trade mark in respect of (1) their patent medicine and (2) chemical substance for use in pharmacy. Defendants carrying on business of manufacture and sale of medicinal preparations issued pamphlets showing the exorbitant cost of patent medicines and their analysis and offering the same prescription at much less cost.

Held, this did not constitute an infringement as the defendants do not by any means seek to describe goods of their own manufacture by the plaintiffs' mark. On the contrary they emphasise the distinction between their own and the plaintiffs' goods.

[See on Appeal in (1940) 2. All. E.R. 608.]

In re ZAKON : Ex parte THE TRUSTEE v. BUSHELL, (1940) 1 Ch. 253.

Bankruptcy—Trustee under abortive deed of assignment for benefit of creditors—If entitled to retain from profits of business expenses incurred against trustee in subsequent bankruptcy.

On November 12, 1938, the bankrupt executed an assignment of his properties to the respondent as trustee for the benefit of his creditors. On November, 17, 1938, the respondent procured the deed to be registered and incurred expenses. On November 18, 1938, a meeting of creditors was held and the majority of creditors were not in favour of the deed. On November 24, 1938, a creditor presented a bankruptcy petition and a receiving order was made on January 5, 1939 and on February 1 the bankrupt was adjudicated. On January 25 the applicant was appointed trustee of the debtor's property. When the respondent was called upon by the trustee in bankruptcy to hand over the collections he had made, the respondent sought to retain from the profits of the business, the amount which he was out of pocket in carrying on the business.

Held, the respondent expended the money entirely at his risk and the trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to the whole amount.

In re HODGE : HODGE v. GRIFFITHS, (1940) 1 Ch. 260.

Will—Gift burdened with a condition—Devisee paying for some time the surplus amounts directed to be paid under the will—Personal liability—If imposed—Gift if can be disclaimed after acts indicating acceptance.

A wife appointed her husband and mother executors and trustees of her will and devised a freehold thus : "I give and bequeath the freehold to my husband A.H. in consideration of his paying to my sister C.M.G. the sum of 2l. per week during her life and I further direct that in the event of my said husband disposing of the whole property the annuity of 2l. per week shall cease and in lieu thereof he shall invest the sum of 2,000l. in authorised trustees securities in the name of C.M.G., A.H. and the other executor. and as to the remainder of my estate I give to A.H. my husband absolutely."

The surplus income was insufficient to provide the 2l. a week to C.M.G. and A.H. paid for 4 years the 2l. making up the deficiency from his own pocket. A.H. took out a summons to determine whether any personal liability was imposed on him to pay C.M.G. irrespective of the testatrix's interest in the property.

Held, in the circumstances A.H. had accepted the gift by his conduct and the obligation to make the weekly payments or provide 2,000l. has become binding upon him and it is not open to him to disclaim the gift.

ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, LTD. v. ODHAMS PRESS, LTD., (1940)*1 K.B. 440 (C.A.).

Tort—Libel and slander—Headline in newspaper literally true—When capable of an innuendo—Manner and occasion of the publication—Effect.

Plaintiff, a co-operative society, though there was no question whatever as to any moral guilt at all or any fraud, was charged as a test case with making a "false return" in that a particular entry was wrong. Plaintiff's auditors and legal advisers had given the opinion that a certain accession to the wealth of the society can be treated as 'capital' and the public auditor contended that it should be treated as profits. The plaintiffs were fined on the charge. The defendants, a newspaper, published a report with a prominent headline in bold types "False Profit Return—Charge Against Society," followed by an account of the proceedings which were in their natural meaning an accurate statement of facts with some portions printed more prominently than others. The plaintiffs pleaded an innuendo that the words were meant and understood to mean that the plaintiffs had deliberately falsified their accounts and that they had published a return of annual profits which they knew to be wrong and that they had done so with a view to deceiving their constituents and the general public as to their true position and that they were insolvent or unstable and a society which investors should avoid and that they carried on their business by dishonest methods. Defendants objected to the innuendo on the ground that the words in their natural and ordinary meaning were incapable of the innuendo.

Held, having regard to the ambiguous if not the primary meaning of the word "false"—namely that it connotes something of a fraudulent nature and the mode and occasion of the publication the words are capable of the innuendo and the plaintiffs are entitled to more than nominal damages. A new Trial on the issue of Damages was ordered.

BRITON FERRY STEEL CO., LTD. v. BARRY, (1940) 1 K.B. 463 (C.A.).

Income-tax—Finance Act, 1926, S. 32 (2)—Merger of manufacturing parent and subsidiary companies—Liability of parent company to tax as successor to business of subsidiary company.

On the liquidation of six wholly owned subsidiary companies the business was transferred to the parent company and the parent company instead of manufacturing and supplying steel bars to the subsidiary companies to be made into tin plates began to make the tin plates themselves.

Held, on the facts the parent company had succeeded to the business of the six subsidiary companies and were liable to tax as such.

ROUSE v. GRAVELWORKS, LTD., (1940) 1 K.B. 489 (C.A.).

Easements—Natural right to support of land—Water collecting in quarrying pits blown over neighbour's land by wind—Liability.

The defendants by digging gravel on their property allowed water to collect in the extensive pit and the water was blown over the neighbouring (plaintiff's) land washing away the boundary and causing damage by erosion.

Held, the defendant had used the land naturally and is not liable for the destruction of the natural lateral support of the plaintiff's land by operation of natural forces. The plaintiff had no cause of action.

ALDEHAM v. UNITED DAIRIES, (1940) 1 K.B. 507 (C.A.).

Tort—Negligence—Pony attached to carriage left unattended—Injury to plaintiff attacked by such animal—Owner's liability for damages.

The jury found that the defendant was negligent in leaving a pony attached to a carriage unattended and plaintiff was injured by the pony.

Held, a driver who knowingly leaves a restive pony unattended is justly held guilty of negligence. The facts in the case fully justified the inference that the plaintiff's injuries were directly caused by the negligence of the defendant's servant in leaving an impatient horse unattended for too long a time.

Cox v. Burbridge, (1863) 13 C.B.N.S. 430 distinguished and (1939) 3 ALL.E.R. 478 reversed.

WAY v. PENRYNBER NAVIGATION COLLIERY CO., LTD., (1940) 1 K.B. 517 (C.A.).

Workman's Compensation—Accident arising in the course of Employment—Payment of compensation after notice of accident—How far evidence of accident.

Slessor, MacKinnon and Goddard, L. J.J. (Slessor, L. J., dissenting).—
In the absence of any evidence from employers, the fact of their paying compensation under the Act, is some evidence that they admitted that there was an accident.

.. Per Slessor, L. J.—It can amount to no more than an admission that on that date having received notice of accident, the employers paid to the workman a certain sum of money possibly equivalent to the sum which he would have been entitled to receive if he had a right to compensation.

CHAPELTON v. BARRY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, (1940) 1 K.B. 532 (C.A.).

Contract—Hire of deck chairs—Ticket or receipt for the hire with conditions on it—If contract subject to the conditions.

A person who hired a deck chair on the beach suffered injury by the chair giving way. He sued the defendants for damages for negligence in providing a chair which was unfit for use. The defendants relied on conditions excluding liability printed on the tickets.

Held, the cases dealing with railway tickets, cloak room tickets, or documents issued by bailees when they take charge of goods have no analogy to this case. The plaintiff paid ad. in order to have the right to sit on a chair on the beach. He was asked to take a receipt in the form of a ticket. The plaintiff cannot be deemed to have entered into a contract in the terms of the words printed on the back of the receipt. Defendants were liable for damages.

LIFFEN v. WATSON, (1940) 1 K.B. 556 (C.A.).

Tort—Damages—Personal injury disabling plaintiff—Loss of boarding and lodging from employer during disablement—If to be included in damages—Provision of board and lodging by father—Effect.

Plaintiff who was injured while a passenger in a taxicab owing to the negligent driving by the defendant was unable to continue in her employment as a domestic servant. She claimed damages for (1) loss of wages and (2) loss of board and lodging. The trial Judge awarded damages for loss of wages but refused damages for loss of board and lodging on the ground that plaintiff's father provided the boarding and lodging and there was no evidence of any promise by the plaintiff to pay her father. On appeal, Held, it does not matter whether after the accident the plaintiff was taken in by her father. The only consideration is what the plaintiff lost. She lost the value of the board and lodging just as she lost her wages and she is entitled to be compensated for that loss.

SOTHERDEN v. SOTHERDEN, (1940) P. 73 (C.A.).

Divorce—Desertion—Deserted spouse in mental hospital at commencement of desertion and during part of the three years prior to petition—Effect on the period of desertion.

In August, 1931, the wife who suffered from mental infirmity had to go to a hospital whence she was transferred in February, 1932, to a mental hospital where she remained till September, 1936 when she was able to leave the hospital. About July 25, 1932, the husband went off and never saw his wife or offered her a matrimonial home. The wife filed a petition on November 23, 1938, for divorce, on the ground of desertion for three years.

Held, the fact that the wife was in the mental hospital during part of the three years period does not prevent her from alleging that her husband deserted her for the statutory period.

MACKENZIE v. MACKENZIE, (1940) P. 81.

Divorce—Desertion—Clause inserted by inadvertence by the clerk in maintenance order by Magistrate against husband that wife not bound to cohabit with husband—Effect on desertion.

In the usual printed form of maintenance order by a Magistrate in favour of the wife by inadvertence, the clause "that the complainant be no longer bound to cohabit with her husband the defendant" was not scored out and the order served on the husband. Subsequently in the wife's petition for divorce alleging desertion, Held, the order so existing at all material times, the petitioner (the wife) cannot satisfy the requirements of the statute as to the period of desertion when the order subsisted.

CAMPBELL v. CAMPBELL, LEWIS AND KEITH, (1940) P. 90.

Divorce—Practice—Discovery—Respondent in her cross-petition alleging husband's association with named woman as conducing to her adultery—Respondent disclosing some documents and asking for further affidavit of documents from the husband—If discovery to be ordered.

In a husband's petition for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery the wife in her cross-petition alleged that the husband had conduced to her adultery by neglecting her and by association with a married woman. She disclosed in her affidavit of documents several documents bearing on the alleged association and applied for a further and better affidavit from her husband.

Held, the wife's allegation is not on the face of it an allegation of adultery, nor is it necessary that it should be so. As the matter is relevant on the question of conduct conducing to adultery the order for discovery should be made.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS

CHAIRMAN YENGEYO MUNICIPALITY v. AKASA RAMA IYER*

A sketch by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wadsworth, broadcast Madras Station of All India Radio.

Peon : Silence !

Clerk : S.C. No. 999 of 1938.—Chairman, Yengeyo Municipality versus Akasa Ramayyar.

Pliff's Counsel : May it please your honour. This suit, is preferred to recover a sum of Rs. 19-15-11, due from the defendant by way of profession tax to the municipality. The defendant admits that the amount was demanded, that it is the correct amount according to the prescribed scale and that it has not been paid. I submit that it is for the defendant to establish the rather unusual defence which he has seen fit to plead.

Judge : Yes, Mr. Charjam Ayyar. I agree that the burden is on the defendant. Will you begin, please, Mr. Mekha Row ?

Def. C. : As your honour pleases. I do not think that any lengthy opening is necessary. As my friend has said, we admit the non-payment of the tax demanded. But what we do not admit is the right of the plaintiff to demand that tax. Putting it briefly, my case is that the Yengeyo municipality is not entitled to collect taxes because it has ceased to function as a municipality. The defendant alleges that the municipal council has degenerated into a mere battlefield for the local factions and has become a centre of corruption and intrigue. We are prepared to prove that, far from being the guardian of the welfare of the citizens of the town, the municipality has been engaged in activities which are prejudicial to the well-being of the townfolk in general and of the defendant as one of them. It is not therefore either in law or equity entitled to require the defendant to contribute to his own detriment. I will now call the defendant. Mr. Akasa Ramayyar !

Crier : Akasa Ramayyar ! Akasa Ramayyar !

(Oath.)

Def. C. : You are the defendant in this suit and you admit that the technically correct amount of profession tax was demanded from you and that you refused to pay it.

Akasa Ramayyar : Yes and what is more I am not going to....

LP2341

Def. C.: Please, Mr. Ramayyar, confine yourself to answering the questions. You say in effect that there is no longer any lawful municipality entitled to levy taxes. Will you tell the Court why you have come to this conclusion?

A. R.: Well, I take it that the function of a municipality is to provide for the health, amenities and education of the townsfolk. This municipality does nothing but encourage dirt, disease and disputes.

(Uproar. Shouts of "Silence." Uproar gradually subsides.)

Judge: Unless silence is observed, I shall have to clear the Court. Go on, Mr. Mekha Row.

Def. C.: What do you mean by saying that the municipality encourages dirt? Please illustrate your accusation.

A. R.: They let the drains get blocked up till they are nothing but stinking cess-pools, they don't clean or repair the streets, they don't collect any taxes from the councillors or their relatives and those taxes they do collect are embezzled or frittered away. What I mean is that by their corruption and indifference, the staff is encouraged to neglect the sanitation of the town and so to cause filth and disease.

Def. C.: So much for dirt and disease; but what about disputes? How can you say that the municipality encourages factions?

A. R.: I mean that the whole running of the municipality is in the hands of the factions and it helps them to grow. The parties fake the voters' lists and corrupt the electors. They intrigue to get their partisans into municipal offices and when the council actually meets, its proceedings consist of nothing but rows, points of order, irrelevant resolutions and walkings-out by way of protest. That is not local self-government, it is local anarchy.

Def. C.: I see; and your point is that an agency for promoting local anarchy is.....

A. R.: Is not entitled by law or common sense to require me to pay for its activities.

Def. C.: Thank you, Mr. Ramayyar. That is all I have to ask you.

Plff's C.: Mr. Ramayyar, I think you were an unsuccessful candidate at the last municipal election?

A. R.: I was, I am ashamed to say, and I am very glad that I didn't get in.

Plff's C.: I put it to you that you are disgruntled because you have lost the opportunity to take part in those activities for which you blame the present council.

A. R.: Nothing of the kind. I wouldn't have anything to do with such a crowd. They aren't town councillors—they are town scoundrels!

(Uproar. Shouts of "Silence.")

Judge: Mr. Ramayyar, You must not let your enthusiasm for the purity of the local administration lead you into verbal excesses.

A. R.: I'm sorry, Your honour, but I feel very strongly on these matters.

Judge: Quite! Proceed, Mr. Charjam Ayyar.

Plff's. C.: Mr. Ramayyar, you have a cousin who deals in kerosine oil?

A. R.: Well, what if I have?

Plff's. C.: I suggest that he tendered unsuccessfully for the municipal lighting contract?

A. R.: How do I know? I don't run my cousin's business.

Plff's. C.: Of course you don't know. But you do know that you have a nephew called Velaiyillathavan, who is now unemployed?

A. R.: Yes, but.....

Plff's. C.: One moment, Mr. Ramayyar. I suggest to you that he applied for a post as attender in the municipal office and that his application was rejected?

A. R.: Nothing of the kind. He is staying at home because he is reading for the I.C.S.

Plff's. C.: Really! And what are his qualifications for that distinguished service?

A. R.: He has passed one part of the intermediate exam. and he knows typewriting.

Plff's. C.: Excellent! He is sure to be made a Collector in a year or two. I suggest to you that your real reason for not paying this tax is that you hadn't got the ready cash.

A. R.: That isn't true. I'm not a penniless waster like most of your clients.

Plff's. C.: Well, Mr. Ramayyar, since you are determined to be impertinent, I don't think I need ask you any more questions.

Def. C.: I call Mr. Newspaperwalla.

Clerk: Please repeat after me.

(Clerk and witness both gabble the oath together.)

Def. C.: The Newspaperwalla, what are you?

N.: I am the editor of the Yengeyq Gazette.

Def. C.: In that capacity, do you attend the meetings of the municipal council?

N.: Yes—when I can't get anyone else to do it for me.

Def. C.: Did you attend the meeting of 6th January?

N.: Yes I did, for my sins!

Def. C.: What business did the council transact at that meeting?

N.: None at all. As soon as the meeting began, one member rose on a point of order. A wild altercation followed. There were scenes of disorder lasting for two hours. Two members retired with bleeding noses and the proceedings terminated without any resolution being moved or passed.

Def. C.: I think you attended the meeting held on 8th February. Can you tell us what business was done on that occasion?

N.: The proceedings began with a resolution calling attention to the ill-treatment of dhobies' donkeys by Italian volunteers attached to General Franco's army. The council spent three hours discussing whether the resolution should be confined to dhobies' donkeys or should cover donkeys generally. The majority favoured the view that the council had a duty towards all donkeys and the resolution was amended accordingly and passed. There was no time for the rest of the agenda which was adjourned to the next meeting.

Def. C.: I understand that you also attended the next meeting held on 14th March?

N.: Unfortunately I did.

Def. C.: Why was it unfortunate?

N.: Because it was a waste of time. The meeting started an hour late. It began by the Chairman asking for sanction for Rs. 200/ for repairing Kachikkaran Lane—where his own house is. A member of the opposition protested against this expenditure when nothing had been done to supply gramophones to prisoners in the Central Jail. When the Chairman ruled that this protest was irrelevant the opposition walked out in a body and the meeting was adjourned for want of a quorum.

Def. C.: At these three meetings which you attended, would you say that the municipal council performed any of the functions for which it was elected?

N.: Emphatically not.

Def. C.: Thank you, Mr. Newspaperwalla.

Plffs. C.: Am I right in supposing, Mr. Newspaperwalla, that you are not only the editor of your widely-read journal, but also the sub-editor, the reporter, the printer and the advertisement manager?

N.: Well I must admit that I am rather a Jack-of-all-trades.

Plffs. C.: You used to receive advertisements from the Yengeyo municipality?

N.: Yes.

Plff's. C.: Am I right in saying that they have now been taken away from you and given to the Yengeyo Morning Post?

N.: I don't know. I never read that rag. We aren't getting the advertisements now; that is all I know.

Plff's. C.: How annoying for you! Now Mr. Newspaperwalla, I think you have a brother-in-law who is a doctor.

N.: I have.

Plff's. C.: Is it true that he was dismissed from service under the municipality because he was demanding money from patients at the dispensary?

N.: That was the false story they made up. The real reason was that he refused to get up in the middle of the night to poultice a boil on the seat of the Chairman's nephew.

Plff's. C.: Well, that is your version. Now I think you were formerly working as a journalist in Bombay.

N.: Yes.

Plff's. C.: Isn't it true that you left Bombay to avoid being prosecuted for bribery at the municipal elections.

N.: It's a lie! Your honour, I protest at these outrageous accusations! I demand.....

Judge: I'm sorry, Mr. Newspaperwalla, but counsel has to ask these unpleasant questions if he is instructed to do so. Any further questions, Mr. Charjam Ayyar?

Plff's. C.: No, your honour, I don't think I need outrage the witness by any further revelations of his past.

Def. C.: I close my case.

Plff's. C.: Your honour, I scarcely think that any formal opening of the plaintiff's case is necessary. The defendant admits that the tax is legally due, but denies that the plaintiff council is qualified to collect it. I claim that the allegations against my clients are false and malicious and that even if true they provide no defence to the plaintiff's suit. I assert that the Yengeyo municipality, though it may not be perfect, is honestly endeavouring to discharge its legal functions for the benefit of the people of this town. I will call Mr. Zubberdusti Mudaliar, Chairman of the Municipality.

Clerk.: Please repeat after me...

(Repeats oath.)

Plff's. C.: Mr. Zubberdusti Mudaliar, you have been chairman for how long?

Z.M.: For the last three years.

Plff's. C.: While you have been chairman, how many resolutions has the council passed?

Z. M.: I find that the total figure is 597.

Plff's. C.: How many miles of street have been repaired?

Z. M.: 15 miles $7\frac{1}{2}$ furlongs.

Plff's. C.: What amount has been collected by way of taxes?

Z. M.: Just over $1\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs.

Plff's. C.: Is it true that the municipality has been encouraging disease and dirt, leaving taxes uncollected and fomenting faction and disorder?

Z. M.: It is a downright lie and the man who says it deserves to be.....

Plff's. C.: I think we had better leave his honour to say what our opponent deserves. I have no further questions.

Def. C.: Mr. Zubberdusti Mudaliar, you say that you have collected $1\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs of taxes. Can you tell me how much you have failed to collect?

Z. M.: I can't say off-hand. There are always a lot of troublesome people like the defendant who won't pay till they are forced.

Def. C.: Let us leave the defendant's arrears for a moment. He makes no secret about them. But you, Mr. Zubberdusti, can you tell me when you last paid your own property tax?

Z. M.: I pay my taxes as soon as the demand comes.

Def. C.: Precisely—and in your capacity as Chairman you take good care that no demand ever reaches you.

Z. M.: I protest! It is a scandal! I.....

Def. C.: Please don't work yourself into a state of righteous indignation. Let me put it this way. Is it not true that during the whole of your term of office, no single demand for any tax of any kind has ever reached you?

Z. M.: How can I remember? All I know is that I pay my taxes whenever they are demanded, like any other good citizen.

Def. C.: Only, unlike most good citizens, by some strange accident the demands never reach you! Well, we'll leave it at that. I put it to you that no demands for taxes are ever served on any of the members of your party in the council?

Z. M.: It's a lie!

Def. C.: So you say. Now I will turn to another matter. How often during your term of office has it been necessary for the police to intervene at meetings of the council?

Z. M.: Never.

(Shouts of protest. Cries of "Silence.")

Def. C.: You swear that the police have never intervened?

Z. M.: No, I don't say that. I say that it was never necessary for them to intervene. If an officious sub-inspector chooses to butt in at a council meeting, I can't stop him.

Def. C.: I put it to you that you yourself have twice sent for the police to put a stop to free fights amongst the members?

Z. M.: I may have. I don't remember.

Def. C.: I may take it that scenes of disorder are so frequent that they make no permanent impression on your memory. You say that you have repaired over 15 miles of street. That includes the Kachikkaran Lane in which you live?

Z. M.: Yes. That is one of the many streets repaired.

Def. C.: You made a very good job of the Kachikkaran Lane?

Z. M.: Yes, of course.

Def. C.: I suggest that when you take up the repairs of streets in the poorer quarters of the town, the money all goes into the pockets of contractors, maistries and councillors and that the streets are no better than they were before the repairs started.

Z. M.: If you want to give evidence, why don't you come into the box? It isn't true.

Def. C.: I put it to you that the death rate in the town has steadily risen since you became Chairman?

Z. M.: I can't help it if God sends epidemics.

Def. C.: But can you blame God for letting the drains get stopped up and letting sewage into the water supply?

Z. M.: I deny that the drains are stopped up. It's a libel. You've no right to.....

Def. C.: That will do Mr. Zuberdusti. I have no more questions.

Plff's. C.: I call Mr. Bakshi Sahib.

(Clerk administers oath to Bakshi Sahib.)

Plff's. C.: Mr. Bakshi Sahib, you are the overseer of the Yengeyo municipality and your duty is to supervise the sanitary and engineering staff?

B. S.: Yes, Sir.

Plff's. C.: Is it true that the drains of the town have got all blocked up, so that they are no better than cess-pools?

B. S.: No, Sir.

Plff's. C.: Is it true that money allotted for repairs of streets in the poorer quarters all goes into the pockets of contractors, maistries and councillors?

B. S.: No, Sir. It is properly spent on the works.

Plff's. C.: Thank you, Mr. Bakshi Sahib, That is all I have to ask you.

Def. C.: Mr. Bakshi Sahib, when you say that the money doesn't all go into the pockets of contractors, maistries and councillors, do you mean to suggest that a lot of it goes into your own pocket?

B. S.: No I don't. I am a poor man, but I am honest.

Def. C.: You are generally known as Baksheesh Sahib, aren't you?

B. S.: People call me all kind of things, because I am good-natured.

Def. C.: I suggest that you are called Baksheesh Sahib, because no one can get anything done in the town without giving you baksheesh.

B. S.: I tell you, I am an honest man.

Def. C.: And also poor, I think you said. You built a new house for yourself last year, didn't you?

B. S.: No, it was my wife who got it built.

Def. C.: Did'nt she get it built by Cheetum Sahib, a municipal contractor?

B. S.: He does sometimes do contract work for the municipality, but I don't see how that matters.

Def. C.: Of course you don't. The house cost Rs. 7,000 didn't it?

B. S.: It may have. I don't know. It is n't my house.

Def. C.: What is your pay?

B. S.: Rs. 47-8-0.

Def. C.: Is your wife a rich woman?

B. S.: She raised a loan—she borrowed on pledge of her jewels.

Def. C.: I think she borrowed Rs. 2,000 from Panakkaran Chetti and that he is the man who recently got the municipal lighting contract?

B. S.: May be. It's no business of mine.

Def. C.: Didn't you buy 20 acres of wet land in your native village about 18 months ago?

B. S.: No, it was my wife who bought it.

Def. C.: Ah! The rich wife again! I suggest that the money came from your pickings out of the municipal road-mending contracts?

B. S.: It's a lie.

Def. C.: Well, shall we say that one of us two is a liar and leave it to his honour to decide which? Do you know Munian?

B. S.: You mean the man who lives behind the market? Yes I know him.

Def. C.: His three-year-old daughter was drowned last January, wasn't she?

B. S.: I heard so.

Def. C.: Is it not true that she was drowned because she fell into a choked-up drain and was sucked down into the mire?

B. S.: How do I know? I wasn't there. I'm not a nurse-maid to look after all the children.

Def. C.: No and I hope you are not a murderer to kill all the children with your filthy drains. That will be all, Mr. Bakshi Sahib.

Plff's C.: May it please your honour, I do not propose to weary you with any lengthy address. For I submit that the defendant has entirely failed to show any reason why he should not pay the taxes lawfully demanded of him. My learned friend has talked of the mire in the municipal drains, but I venture to say that there has been more mud slung in this Court to-day by my learned friend, than there is in all the drains of this municipality. I feel that I should be failing in my duty to my clients and to the citizens of this town, if I did not protest with all the emphasis of which I am capable, against these scurrilous aspersions on the character of our leading townsmen and against these unjustifiable onslaughts upon the good name of this town, of which I am proud to be a native. I say in all seriousness that my learned friend's cross-examination has been nothing less than a continuous series of defamatory insinuations, which I challenge him to repeat outside the four walls of this Court. If he has the temerity to accept this challenge, my learned friend will soon find himself appearing in Court in a different and less profitable capacity. To my mind it is outrageous that public men, sacrificing their time and talents for the common good, should be rewarded by such scurrility.

(Cheers and groans and cries of "silence.")

But, your honour, suppose I assume, merely for the sake of argument, that there is some shadowy substance in the defendant's unfounded allegations against the conduct of the municipal administration. What is the effect of these allegations on this case? I submit that they are absolutely and entirely irrelevant. The law has invested this municipality with powers to impose and collect taxes. My contention is that so long as the council and its officers follow the procedure laid down in the Act, the tax-payers cannot resist the demand by alleging that the money is being ill-spent or that the local administration is inefficient. I therefore ask your honour with some confidence to give a decree to the plaintiff for the amount of the claim with costs.

Def. C. My learned friend's indignation, your honour, at the aspersions which I have been instructed to make upon his clients and their supporters, leaves me, if I may say so, with great respect to my learned friend, entirely unmoved. It is an old maxim of advocacy, that when you have got a bad case, you should abuse the lawyer on the other side. I have myself a good case so, that it is unnecessary for me, even if I had the inclination to do so, to sink to my learned friend's level. I maintain that I have fully proved that the Yengeyo municipality is not a municipality in the eye of the law, any more than it is in the opinion of the public. I have demonstrated that its meetings are riotous and disorderly and that on the rare occasions when peace is maintained, the deliberations of the council are almost entirely devoted to matters unconnected with the welfare of the town. I have proved that instead of collecting taxes according to the law, which apportions the burden impartially to the means of the citizen, the members of this council have been practising an illegal system, whereby they themselves pay nothing and the whole burden of taxation is thrust upon the shoulders of their unfortunate fellow-citizens, whose interests these step-motherly councillors have been charged by law to protect. I submit that the defendant has adduced sufficient evidence to establish that the whole administration of this town is foul with the canker of corruption. And I maintain that it is not the object of the law to allow these architects of maladministration to build up their structure with funds wrung from the pockets of the poor. I ask your honour's pardon, if I have used language more emphatic than is customary in the dignified precincts of this Court. But fortunately it is not often that this Court has to listen to such a tale of degradation as has been unfolded before your honour to-day. I would respectfully remind the Court that my client is fighting, not merely his own battle, but the cause of the poor, the diseased, the down-trodden. I therefore ask your honour to dismiss this suit with costs.

(Cheers from the back of the Court, gradually subsiding as cries of "silence" are heard.)

Judge. This case has given rise to much excitement and controversy, but the issues which it raises are really very simple. The first question is whether the plaintiff municipality has conducted itself in such a way as totally to change its character and status so that it can no longer be legally described as a municipality in the strict sense of the term. The second question is whether, assuming the allegations of the defendant to be true, they afford a sufficient reason in law to justify the defendant in his refusal to pay taxes. Now, unfortunately the Act with which we are concerned contains no definition of the word municipality and once more it is the duty of the judiciary to supply the deficiencies of the legislature. However,

I think I shall not be far wrong if I define a municipality as a corporation empowered by law to supply the mental, moral and physical requirements of an urban community and to levy taxes for that purpose. The case with which I formulate this subtle definition will doubtless make the public share with me the regret that the laws are made by legislators and not (as they obviously ought to be) by the Judges. Now what are the reasonable requirements of the people of a town? To mention only the most important, I would say good water, good roads, good drains and good government. To what extent have these requirements been supplied by the plaintiffs? We are told that the citizens have been given water polluted by sewage, drains which resemble cess-pools and are a death-trap to little children, roads which are repaired only if they lead to the houses of the favoured few, and a local administration which is a compound of corruption, disorder and irrelevance. Can a council, which devotes hours of public time to discussing the treatment of donkeys in Spain have any claim to be regarded as a municipal council, whatever may be its merits as an international association for the promotion of veterinary science? Is an organisation whose meetings are fraught with disorder, faction and recriminations, one which promotes the mental and moral welfare of the citizens committed to its charge? Can a corporation which collects heavy taxes from the poor and the fatherless, but lets its own rich members go scot-free, which repairs roads for its chairman and his partisans, but leaves its slums roadless, which uses funds raised from the meagre earnings of labourers, for the enrichment of its contractors and underlings—can such a corporation be legally described as a municipality? I have no hesitation in saying that it cannot.

Now the powers conferred by the legislature upon municipal councils are extensive, but they are not unlimited. Granted that our legislators frequently enact measures which reveal singularly little foresight and no skill in draftsmanship, they are not so utterly lacking in common sense as to impose upon our towns the despotic sway of a Hitler or a Mussolini. In legislating for our municipalities, they have prescribed certain powers and set forth, not perhaps in the happiest language, but with sufficient clarity, the objects for which those powers shall be used. Those objects are very wide, but they do not, unless I am grievously in error, comprehend the nurture of General Franco's assets or the maintenance of open cess-pools in the public streets. A municipal council is empowered to collect taxes from citizens according to their means, but it is not empowered to throw all the burden of taxation upon its political opponents. It is authorized to practise the arts of democratic government, not the arbitrary methods of a despot or a pirate. I do not for a moment say that a citizen would be justified in refusing to pay his taxes because of mere allegations of inefficiency. But would he not be justified in resisting the demand for taxes, when the municipality has ceased to discharge those functions for which it was created and has given itself up to activities which are pernicious and anti-social? I consider that he is so justified. What is more, I say that the citizen who acquiesces in local misgovernment, is an accessory of disorder, failing in his duty to the state and to his fellow-citizens. It may be that the defendant and his supporters are inspired by motives unworthy of the cause which they have championed. But as an even greater judge than myself once remarked, "God alone knoweth the mind of man." This Court, not being endowed with divine omniscience, can only look at men's actions and say whether they be good or bad. Looking at the acts of the defendant and not seeking to delve into his motives, I find myself full of approbation for the courageous stand which he has taken against the twin evils of corruption and misgovernment. It is therefore with a firm conviction of the correctness of my decision, that I dismiss the plaintiff's suit; and I further direct that the defendant's costs be paid by the Chairman from his personal estate and not from the municipal funds. I would add that if ever this municipality is reconstituted as a true organ of local self-government, its first act should be to dismiss the overseer, Bakshi Sahib.

(Cheers and cries of "Silence.")

Some Quant Obiter Dicta.—An old judge quoted by the late Augustine Birrell, who by the title of his two early volumes of essays gave a new and delightful significance to the expression "Obiter Dicta" explained that "an obiter dictum in the language of the law, is a gratuitous opinion, an individual impertinence which, whether it be wise or foolish, right or wrong, bindeth none, not even the lips that utter it." No bad definition, it will be agreed, but doubtless the old judge who coined it was thinking merely of expressions of opinion thrown out in the course of the legal argument, and not strictly germane to the precise question which called for decision. Obiter dicta cannot, however, at all events for the present purpose, be limited to views thrown out from the bench as to the law involved in the particular case; they may roam over, and in fact do cover, an extensive area, indeed the whole range of thought. Thus we cannot forget that dictum addressed to a member of the bar whose submissions were interrupted by the judge in the words: "Mr. A., I never listen with any pleasure to the arguments of counsel whose legs are encased in light grey trousers." Those were the days when members of the bar were expected to be punctilious in the observance of the strict sartorial rules, days which have gone and given place to a laxity which would have astounded and pained our grandfathers and fathers. Again, in a very different sphere, we recall the cutting observation of Lord Justice Knight Bruce, named in his day as the prince of judicial wits, who at the conclusion of an administration suit quietly remarked that "the estate will be distributed in the usual way among the parties' solicitors," thus following what has been called the true order of procedure in legal matters—costs first, then practice, and finally merits 1.—L.T., 1940, p. 43.

Bowen's Witty Obiters.—What may with justice be included among judicial obiter dicta or rather obiter scripta was the letter sent down from the bench by Bowen to Buckley, Q.C., whose name was inseparably linked to his classic treatise on company law, a subject on which he was a past master. The story goes that Buckley was appearing before Bowen, and in the course of the day Bowen sent down a note to Buckley asking him to dinner. Buckley replied thanking the judge for the invitation but expressing regret for his inability to accept it inasmuch as he was hourly expecting an addition to his family. To this came a second note from the bench couched in these terms: "I congratulate you on the projected issue of a new memorandum of association" 1. No one but Bowen could have utilised the occasion for so appropriate a reply; but he was indeed one in a thousand, a master of language and a cheery wit. Again, no one will forget his suggested emendation of the address by the judges to her late Majesty, Queen Victoria, on the occasion of her jubilee. The draft contained the sentence, "Conscious as we are of our imperfections." To this Bowen demurred and suggested that it might, however, be thus amended: "Conscious as we are of each other's imperfections." A great classical scholar and a master of his native tongue, he doubtless looked with little favour on the judicial utterances of his brother judge, A. L. Smith, a great lawyer and great judge, no doubt, but Bowen put his finger on the lack of distinction in that colleague's pronouncements when he said, "There is a distressing nudity about A.L.'s judgments." A.L. was certainly not a master of clear expression and did not in this sphere resemble John Bright, the clarity of whose speeches Kinglake accounted for by the fact that he never had enjoyed the disadvantage of a classical education.—L.T., 1940, p. 44.

Lord Darling's Obiter.—To write of obiter dicta and to leave out the late Lord Darling as a prolific producer of witty touches which contributed much to the delight of visitors to his court as well as of all save perhaps those who may have been the victims of his wit, would very much resemble presenting the play of Hamlet and leaving out the title role. His jokes were many, possibly too copious, but the great majority of them were of excellent calibre sparkling like gems.

Thus, we have his very witty comment on the ancient maxim, "Nator ultra crepidam," namely, that it has no application to those exercising judicial functions; it applies only to sutors. With a sense of sadness we also recall his enquiry of the late lamented J. R. Matthews whose exuberance and rapidity of diction were probably without parallel. It seems that the judge noticed J. B. coming into the court and taking his seat in the front row, whereupon, in his most dulcet tones, he said, "Oh, Mr. Matthews, can you, without undue prolixity, tell me, are you in the next case?" In one of his early incursions into the field of political science he remarked, with his accustomed wit, that "what recommends party government is that it enables us to slander our rulers without sedition, and overthrow them without treason."—L.T., 1940, p. 44.

At the Bar.—We usually and properly regard an obiter dictum as an utterance from the bench, but occasionally we find one coming from some member of the bar in addressing the judge, though in these circumstances it lacks even the slight authority the dicta of a judge may carry. Of witty utterances in this genre from the bar we may certainly include the definition of an affidavit given by a distinguished Chancery silk, namely, that "it is a document skilfully drawn by counsel, to the truth of which the deponent more or less willingly swears." Even in the reports, which are usually accounted very sedate productions offering no scope for frivolity, we occasionally light upon a bright patch which may well be designated an obiter scriptum, such as that footnote appended by MacQueen to his report of Reid v. Bartonshill Coal Company and McGuire v. The same company, namely this, "Reid and MacGuire were victims of the same accident, which, though melancholy, has settled the law." In the same line of country we find Sir Gregory Lewin annotating his reports in this fashion: "Possession in Scotland evidence of stealing in England," and "A party is bound to retreat by a back door to avoid a conflict."—L.T., 1940, p. 44.

House of Lords Appeals.—Despite the partial embargo which in recent years has been placed upon the right of a litigant to go from the Court of Appeal to the House of Lords, there seems to be very little, if any, diminution in the number of cases which find their way to the Lords to hear the last word on the subject of the litigation. In this we have another illustration of that hope which the poet assures us, springs eternal in the human breast. The sittings of the House in its judicial capacity were resumed recently with a list of twenty-two cases, four coming from Scotland. These sittings were particularly interesting in that the Lord Chancellor, Viscount Caldecote, presided for the first time at the hearing of the appeals. For some time he has been presiding in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, but not until this term did he make what may be termed his judicial debut in the Lords. In accordance with precedent, he wore his robes and full-bottomed wig, whereas it is not the practice of the Lords of Appeal in Ordinary to appear otherwise than in civilian dress.—S.J., 1940, p. 85.

Legal Representation before Hardship Tribunals.—A recent writer to The Times, speaking from his experience as a chairman of an exemption committee during the last war, provides an interesting commentary on the remarks made by Mr. Randle F. W. Holme, President of the Law Society, at the recent special general meeting of that body, reported in our last issue. The writer heard between 2,000 and 3,000 applications for exemption, and states that he can well remember that the labours of the committee were lightened and shortened when the applicant had legal assistance. His case was put before the committee better than, in most instances, he could put it himself. An application to a hardship committee, the same writer urges, is in the majority of cases an important event in a man's life. He has probably never appeared before any tribunal, and it is difficult for him to put his case himself. Often he is tongue-tied, or very apt to introduce matters which he thinks helpful to his application but which are really irrelevant. The writer often found on careful examination of the applicants appearing in person that the most meritorious cases were those where the applicants themselves were least able to state them. That all took up time, which the help of a lawyer would have avoided. "Further," the letter continues, "I do not see the object of preventing an applicant having a lawyer to represent him should he wish it. The expense does not fall on the State. If the applicant is to have any help at all, I cannot see that the trade union official or a relative or a personal friend is better qualified than the applicant's own solicitor or counsel." It is urged, moreover, that the difficulty of deciding these hardship cases increases when the older men are called up, particularly those of between thirty and forty years of age who are married, with children, and have businesses of their own—all factors that a hardship tribunal has to take into account when listening to an application. The writer concludes by expressing the hope that it is not too late for para. 18 of the National Service (Armed Forces) Miscellaneous Regulations, 1939, (which provides that no applicant to a hardship tribunal may be represented by counsel or solicitor), to be reconsidered.—S.J., 1940, p. 85.

Relating to Children.—A notably superfluous passage in an affidavit read recently in the Chancery Division caused Mr. Justice Farwell to remark: "It seems a little unnecessary for a lady to say that she was present at the birth of her own infant. One assumes that usually. It is difficult to see how she could have been anywhere else." Oddly enough, this point is not free from authority, for no one has put the principle underlying the matter more eloquently than O'Brien, J., in the concluding passage of his judgment in Walker v. Great Northern Railway Co. of Ireland, 28 L.R. Ir. 69, at p. 83: "In law, in reason, in the common language of mankind, in the dispensations of nature, in the bond of physical union and the instinct of duty and solicitude on which the continuance of the world depends, a woman is the common carrier of her unborn child, and not a railway company." In this connection one is reminded of the lady who, when asked in a court of law how many children she had had, replied: "Four, to the best of my knowledge, information and belief." Then there was the case of the man who was being tediously cross-examined before Mr. Justice Darling. He had been asked how many children he had had, and replied two. Later on he was asked the same question again, and the judge intervened: "He told you he had two children a few moments ago. There are hardly likely to have been any fresh arrivals since."—S.J., 1940, p. 93.

Particularity.—Pleadings and affidavits now and then produce oddities of assertion. The Court of Appeal was once considerably amused by a paragraph in a defence signed by Edward Buller: "The defendant denies that he is the father of the said twins or of either of them." He explained that that particular gem of precision was due to an accident in his pupil-room, but the style of the master hand was clearly recognisable. The late Sir Arthur Underhill, in his memoirs, recalled how once in the Court of Vice-Chancellor Bacon a particularly solemn silk read out an affidavit which began: "I am eighty-two years of age and have had eighteen children and no more." At that point the judge interrupted the reading, exclaiming: "Give him time, Mr. Horton-Smith, give him time."—S.J., 1940, p. 93.

Judges and the Poetic Muse.—Although we instinctively regard members of the Bench as concerned almost exclusively with the consideration and solution of the many legal conundrums which are submitted to them, rather than with such an apparently antithetical matter as courtship of the poetic muse, it is nevertheless interesting to discover that not a few of our judges have dallied with verse, and have given forth some happily inspired lines oftentimes glinting with an exquisite humour. Even Baron Parke, a great master of the common law and so absorbed in it as, according to the legend, to have taken a "beautiful demurrer" to the bedside of a sick friend to cheer him into convalescence, and who, on being asked if he had written any books, answered with becoming gravity that his works were to be found enshrined in the serried row of volumes for which Messrs. Messon and Welsby were responsible, could at times unbend and pen some witty lines. When, for example, his old friend Sir David Dundas was appointed Solicitor-General, Parke sent his congratulations, and with these an invitation to dinner for a certain evening. Sir David replied thanking Parke for his kind letter, but expressing regret that he would be unable to accept the invitation seeing that he had been already invited by no fewer than seven peers for the same evening. This evoked from Parke the neat rejoinder :

“Seven thriving cities fight for Homer dead
Through which the living Homer begged his bread,
Seven noble lords ask Davie to break bread
Who wouldn't care a d—were Davie dead”!

To those of us who know Parke only in his judgments packed with learnings such as few of his colleagues could boast, it comes with something of a surprise, but a pleasant one, that he could throw off piquant lines such as those indited to his friend Dundas.—L.T., 1940, p. 102.

BOOK REVIEWS.

MUHAMMADAN LAW by Faiz Badruddin Tyabji, M.A., Barrister-at-Law. Published by N. M. Tripathi & Co., Bombay (III. edition), (1940). 1056 pages. Price Rs. 20.

Mr. Tyabji's book has for long been regarded as an exhaustive and standard treatise on the law applicable to Muslims in India. Its scheme is to treat the whole subject in the form of the sections of an enactment containing the statements of law as established by the texts and judicial decisions succinctly, and to give their exposition elaborately under each section. The task of the learned author has been rendered particularly difficult in view of the existence of several superior Courts of co-ordinate status in the country and the conflict of decisions consequent thereon. In the circumstances therefore the citation of cases had, as the author has pointed out, to be selective rather than exhaustive.

The legislature has during the last decade passed a number of important enactments affecting the Muhammadan Law, modifying the pre-existing law. The Bengal Wakf Act of 1934, the Shariat Act of 1937, the Cutchi Memons Act of 1938, and the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act of 1939 are a few of such enactments. Almost all these have been noticed by the learned author and their principles incorporated in the statement of the law relating to the concerned topics. The full text of seven such enactments has been given as an appendix, thereby adding to the utility of the work. It should certainly have conduced still further to the exhaustive character of the treatise if the provisions of the Bengal Wakf Act of 1934 and those of Acts like the Child Marriage Restraint Act had also been referred to.

On some points the information given could have been made fuller. On p. 62 it is mentioned that till the passing of the Shariat Act in 1937, several families of the Mapillas of North Malabar were subject to the Marumakkattayam customs, though they were all Muslims. The statement overlooks the fact that ever since the passing of the Mapilla Succession Act, 1918, the Mapillas are governed in matters of succession by the Muslim law and similarly from 1928 when the Mapilla Wills Act came into force it was the Muhammadan Law of Wills that applied to that community. On p. 112 it has been stated that the husband has a right under Muhammadan Law to chastise his wife moderately, though the right will have to be exercised with circumspection. The decision in In re Subbiah Goundan, 165 I.C. 330=A.I.R. 1936 Mad. 788, laying down that no such right is now-a-days recognised by law and that wife-beating is not eo nomine one of the exceptions in the Chapter mentioning the General Exceptions in the Penal Code, seems to have escaped notice.

The author states on p. 99 that "the salutary rule laid down in Hassan Kutti's Case (52 Mad. 39), will, it is hoped, not be questioned when similar cases arise again," the rule being that the marriage of an adult virgin governed by the Shafi Law, contracted by her father without her consent is not valid. The author's hope has to some extent been realised by the same view being taken by the Bombay High Court in 41 Bom.L.R. 1020=A.I.R. 1939 Bom. 489, a decision which does not seem to have been noticed in the book.

The exposition of law is throughout lucid and illuminating. Copious references have been made to the original textual authorities and to the way in which many of the points have been dealt with in other systems of law. The book should prove greatly useful to lawyers and students alike.

PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT AND ADVOCACY.*

We have great pleasure in commending to the legal profession a recent valuable publication by the Madras Bar Council on Professional Conduct and Advocacy. The book is a reproduction of a series of lectures delivered on the invitation of the Bar Council, in November 1939, to the Apprentices-at-Law of the year, by Rao Bahadur K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar, a leading member of our Bar and a member of our Editorial Board. The book has every claim to be regarded as an authoritative exposition of the various problems pertaining to the practice of the legal profession.

The lecturer has carefully avoided the role of a pulpit-orator delivering a sermon but has proceeded throughout as a true guide to the new entrants into an already overcrowded profession. The plan and arrangement of the subjects are well laid out and the treatment is clear and lucid. In the analysis of the intricate problems which must be faced by the young lawyer the lecturer has displayed a clarity of vision and a mastery of detail born of his rich and varied experience. His answers and wise guidance in regard to many points may be said indeed to be the last word thereon.

The young lawyer is given a practical outlook on his profession with a keen eye to his moral and material well-being. The book can well be regarded as the young lawyer's 'Bible.' If indeed the young lawyer imbibes the ideas and ideals of the lecturer, he cannot fail to make a mark in the profession.

On some of the difficult questions of professional propriety the lecturer has given practical answers, though different views may be possible. On the question as to the stipulation of a contingent fee the lecturer has expressed himself against it, though Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar would make an exception in the case of poor clients with heavy causes. In the higher interests of the profession the lecturer has not hesitated to differ from the learned Judge. The question as to whether a lawyer can defend a criminal whom he knows or has reason to believe to be guilty of the charge against him is as old as the profession itself on which different views have been expressed. The lecturer rightly takes the view that public interest demands that no practitioner shall decline to accept a retainer offered on behalf of the accused, though as regards civil cases the better opinion, according to him, is that the practitioner is under no similar obligation unless the refusal of the retainer would lead to injustice.

The recent decision of the House of Lords in *Myers v. Elman*¹, seems to introduce complications in the distinctive relations of a lawyer towards his clients on the one side and the Court on the other, and requires careful examination.

The charm and simplicity of the style is another remarkable feature of these lectures.

REFLECTIONS ON MYERS V. ELMAN, (1940) A.C. 282.

[We pointed out in these columns sometime back that a careful examination of Myers v. Elman was necessary for elucidating the possible complications which the speeches of the learned Law Lords in the case might give rise to in the matter of the distinctive relations between counsel and client on the one hand and between counsel and court on the other. We are glad to publish hereunder an exposition of that case by Rao Bahadur K. V. Krishnaswami Aiyar.]

I

The recent pronouncement of the House of Lords in *Myers v. Elman*¹, has important bearings on Professional Conduct and calls for studied appreciation and careful understanding.

In that case, after the successful termination of an action founded upon conspiracy and fraud of the defendant, in which the plaintiff obtained a decree for a substantial amount, the plaintiff, who could recover nothing towards his decree from the defendant, applied to the court to order and direct the solicitor for the defendant to pay him his costs of the action on the ground that the solicitor had been guilty of professional misconduct. The applicant laid two charges against the solicitor; one, that he "delivered defences which he must have known or suspected to be false" and the other, that, he prepared and permitted his client, the defendant "to make affidavits of documents which were inadequate and false." Various points were raised in support of the defence; but the principal amongst them were (1) that while there were rules of court giving jurisdiction to make orders relating to costs as between a solicitor and his client, there was no jurisdiction under which a party could ask for an order relating to costs against the solicitor appearing for the opposite party, and (2) that in the particular case, the solicitor had left the conduct of the proceedings largely to his managing clerk, who was a solicitor's clerk of ability and experience and that he was personally innocent of the accusation.

The trial judge, Singleton J., held that the solicitor was not guilty of professional misconduct in filing defences which put in issue the charges of fraud and conspiracy against his client. But the learned judge found that the solicitor and his clerk "knew a great deal about the matters in question," and "as a result of a deliberate policy" adopted in the solicitor's office "in the conduct of the defence and in relation to discovery," the solicitor "increased the plaintiff's difficulties, added to the expense and obstructed the interests of justice," and that he was in consequence guilty of "professional misconduct as a solicitor and an officer of court" and directed that he should pay to the plaintiff a share of the costs of the original action and the entire costs of the application.

On appeal, the Court of Appeal, Greer and Slesser L.JJ., Mackinnon L.J., dissenting, reversed the order of Singleton J. They observed that, assuming that the solicitor could be held liable for professional misconduct if he had done the act complained against personally, he was not liable in this case "inasmuch as he had appointed a fully qualified clerk to do such business and the act had been done not by the solicitor himself but by his clerk."

Before the House of Lords the appeal was heard by Viscount Maugham, Lord Atkin, Lord Russell, Lord Wright and Lord Porter. All the noble and learned law lords, except Lord Russell, agreed in reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal and restoring that of Singleton J. But Lord Russell differed on the question of fact, whether the evidence tendered established the charges. On the question of the existence of the jurisdiction to make the order and the duties and obligations of solicitors in acting for parties, he agreed with Viscount Maugham.

Viscount Maugham dealt first with the nature and scope of the jurisdiction. He held that the jurisdiction of the court to order a solicitor to pay costs personally was very different from the jurisdiction to strike him off the rolls or to suspend him, a jurisdiction which was strictly personal and related to the solicitor himself and his fitness to practice, and that in the former case, the court was merely exercising its jurisdiction over an officer of court and enforcing his duty to the court. The order to pay costs had also a twofold purpose to serve. It was not merely to punish the solicitor but also "to protect the client who has suffered and to indemnify the party who had been injured," and misconduct or default or negligence in the course of the proceedings was in some cases sufficient to justify such an order. The learned Viscount went on to say that if the solicitor's negligence in the discharge of his duty as an officer of court was sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction, he could not shelter himself, behind a clerk, for whose actions within the scope of his authority, he was liable. He concluded with the expression of his concurrence with Singleton J., that the solicitor was guilty of "pro-professional misconduct in not insisting on his client disclosing the relevant documents" and "in preparing and putting on the file affidavits of documents which he knew to be very inadequate."

Lord Atkin said that the words "professional misconduct" themselves are not necessarily confined to cases where the solicitor himself is personally guilty. After all they only mean misconduct in the exercise of the profession; and they cover cases where a duty is owed by the solicitor to the court and is not performed owing to the wrong doing of the clerk to whom that duty has been entrusted. The confusion in the Court of Appeal, had arisen from the fact, that charges of professional misconduct have been generally brought up by a special procedure. He added, "It seems to be quite incorrect to suppose that the cases in which solicitors have been ordered to pay costs where there has been no personal complicity are cases in which, the court is exercising a kind of summary jurisdiction in contract or tort by way of awarding damages for breach of warranty of authority. The court is not concerning itself with a breach of duty to the other litigant but with a breach of duty to itself." He then put to himself the question "what is the duty of the solicitor" and answered it thus: "He is at an early stage of the proceedings engaged in putting before the Court on the oath of his client information which may afford evidence at the trial. Obviously he must explain to his client what is the meaning of relevance: and equally obviously he must not necessarily be satisfied by the statement of his client that he has no documents or no more than he chooses to disclose. If he has reasonable ground for supposing that there are others, he must investigate the matter; but he need not go beyond taking reasonable steps to ascertain the truth. He is not the ultimate judge, and if he reasonably decides to believe his client, criticism cannot be directed to him. But I may add that the duty is specially incumbent on the solicitor where there is a charge of fraud; for, a wilful omission to perform his duty in such a case may well amount to conduct which is aiding and abetting a criminal in concealing his crime, and in preventing restitution."

Lord Wright said: "Alongside the jurisdiction to strike off the roll or to suspend, there existed in the Court the jurisdiction to punish a solicitor or attorney by ordering him to pay costs, sometimes the costs of his own client, sometimes those of the opposite party, sometimes, it may be, of both. . . . The matter complained of need not be criminal. It need not involve peculation or dishonesty. A mere mistake or error of judgment is not generally sufficient, but a gross neglect or inaccuracy in a matter which it is a solicitor's duty to ascertain with accuracy may suffice. . . . It need not involve personal obliquity. The term, professional misconduct, has often been used to describe the ground on which the Court acts. It would perhaps be more accurate to describe it as conduct which involves a failure on the part of a solicitor to fulfil his duty to the Court and to realise his duty to aid in promoting in his own sphere the cause of justice. The jurisdiction is not merely punitive but compensatory." The noble and learned Lord then proceeded: "The solicitor cannot simply allow the client to make whatever affidavit of documents he thinks fit nor can he escape the responsibility of careful investigation or supervision. If the client will not give him the information he is entitled to require or if he insists on swearing an affidavit which the solicitor knows to be imperfect or which he has every reason to think is imperfect, then the solicitor's proper course is to withdraw from the case. He does not discharge his duty in such a case by requesting the client to make a proper affidavit and then filing whatever affidavit the client thinks fit to swear to."

Lord Porter said that he rejected the contention that the summary jurisdiction of the court extended to relief only in cases of personal misconduct and neglect of duty. "It is misconduct in the way in which the work entrusted to his firm is carried on, not the personal misdoing of the individual, which gives rise to the exercise of the jurisdiction. The Court is not enforcing a civil right but exercising its authority over the conduct of its officer." The noble and learned Lord concluded: "In any case I do not consider that the solicitor or his clerk has fulfilled the obligation of supervising to the best of his ability the swearing of a full and complete affidavit of documents." Lord Russell of Killowen who disagreed with the majority on the finding of the facts said: "It is, I think, immaterial that no professional misconduct is attributable to Mr. Elman personally. He would nonetheless have failed in the discharge of the duty which he owed to the Court."

On the pronouncements above quoted, understood with reference to the facts of the case, there can be no difficulty in appreciating the rule of conduct enunciated by the House. Though the case related to a solicitor, the principles apply equally to a practitioner in this country who in addition to pleading in Courts acts for the party and therein performs the functions of a solicitor. But the decision itself enunciated no new standards of professional conduct which the legal profession did not have for their guidance earlier. The obligations of a practitioner to the Court enunciated in the pronouncements, were never understood to be in any way different and are as old as the profession itself. *Hill's case*¹, where a solicitor was punished for having put in for his client "a long insufficient demurrer to a bill exhibited against his client in which supposed demurrer were many matters of fact and other things frivolous and vain" furnishes adequate proof.

Nor is the jurisdiction a novel or new creation of the House of Lords. Viscount Maugham's judgment and the citations that he makes amply show that the jurisdiction to order costs against a solicitor is founded on his duty to the Court. Referring to the obligations of solicitors, Lord Hatherly said in In re Jones,¹ that they have not merely to "perform their duties towards their own client but also towards all those against whom they are concerned" referring thereby to their duty to the court. The jurisdiction did not depend on disgraceful or dishonourable conduct of the solicitor but on a mere negligence of a serious character the result of which was to occasion useless costs to the other party. It is obvious that occasions for the exercise of such jurisdiction will be rare and Myers v. Elman properly reminds the profession of the existence of the jurisdiction and its implications.

It would be of interest to know that in *Maharajah of Vizianagaram v. Lingam Krishna Bhupati*², counsel for the petitioner was directed to pay the costs of the opposite side thrown away by his neglect in the lower court. The foundation of the jurisdiction was not, however, explained in the judgment and it was not stated in terms that the practitioner was either guilty of professional misconduct or that he failed to discharge his obligations as an officer of court.

II

The jurisdiction of the court to deal with the solicitor as for professional misconduct and direct him to pay the costs of the opposite party, is, as has been explained, founded upon the obligations which he owes to the court as its officer and his failure to discharge those obligations properly. This necessarily leads us to consider how far those obligations reach and to what extent they impinge upon his other duties which he has to perform for and towards the client for whom he acts and whom he represents. The decision of the House of Lords itself recognises a distinction between the obligations of the solicitor in making certain forms of pleadings or raising certain issues and his obligations in making and presenting an affidavit of discovery. The solicitor in Myers v. Elman was also charged with professional misconduct in that "he had delivered defences which he must have known or suspected to be false." Singleton J., held that the solicitor was not guilty of professional misconduct in allowing the defences to be delivered. The Court of Appeal affirmed that view and stated that "it was not professional misconduct in a solicitor to prepare and deliver on behalf of his client a defence which he might himself suspect contained misstatements or raised false issues and put the plaintiff to proof of his case." In the House of Lords, which upheld the view taken by the courts below, Viscount Maugham said: "I think it useful to observe here that there is this plain distinction between defences which consist—as they did here—of a denial of allegations and of untrue affidavits of documents. The defences are not on oath and they merely put the plaintiff to the proof of the allegations in the statement of claim." He added: "However guilty they (the parties) may be, an honourable solicitor is perfectly justified in acting for them and doing his very best in their interests, with, however, this important qualification, that he is not entitled to assist them in any way in dishonourable conduct in the course of the proceedings." Lord Atkin described the duty owed to the court as one "to conduct litigation before it with due propriety." Lord Wright observed: "There may indeed be circumstances in which a legal adviser has taken such action or so comported himself on behalf of a client as to go further than an honest advocate or solicitor could properly go. It is difficult and perhaps impossible to formulate any principle which would afford a general definition applicable to such cases." Singleton J., wisely said: "Nothing ought to be said which may prevent or tend to prevent solicitor or counsel from doing his best for his client so long as his duty to the court is borne in mind. A client is entitled to have legal aid in order to put the other side to proof of the case against him, and to test and probe that case and the evidence addressed. Thus the client is entitled to say that he denies the fraud or other matters charged and to have that defence placed on the record. He is entitled to have professional aid in regard to the maintenance of that defence before and at the trial." He concluded: "It is not sufficient evidence of misconduct, taken by itself, that a solicitor continued to act in the action notwithstanding that he was aware or was put on enquiry that the defendants were or might be raising false issues in it." It would seem to follow from the foregoing that where the pleadings contain affirmative allegations which the practitioner knew or must have suspected to be false, it may amount to professional misconduct on the part of the practitioner. As Dr. Johnson said, counsel are not to state what they know to be a lie.

1. (1870) L.R. 6 Ch. App. 497.

2. (1902) 12 M.L.J. 473.

The range of acts which a solicitor or any practitioner in this country has to do on behalf of the client in the preparation and conduct of a cause is very wide. The making of pleadings is but a very small part of it. Where is the line to be drawn to demarcate his duties for breach or for even negligent discharge of which, he would be liable as for professional misconduct, from those other duties of his, in respect of which he has a discretion to act in the best interests of the client, untrammelled by any other consideration? For, it is obvious that the functions of a solicitor are not exhausted by ascribing to him the character of an officer of court merely. He is essentially a trusted representative and an agent for the client and his character and obligations as an officer of court arise only out of this primary character which he possesses as an accredited agent and in the course of discharge of those primary obligations. He is only secondarily and only in part an officer of court. While in the discharge of his duties in and in relation to the court his action and conduct are circumscribed by the limitations which his character as an officer of court might impose on him, he does not continue to bear that character throughout in respect of all his other actings in relation to his client, or on his behalf. In other words a solicitor acting for his client is acting in a much larger sphere than what would be connoted by his relation to the court as an officer of it and the scope of his actions and conduct as solicitor for his client, is, by no means, coterminous with the range of his duties as such officer. To hold otherwise, would cut at the very root of the position of the solicitor in the scheme of the administration of justice as a necessary middleman between the client and the court and an accredited representative of the client for whom he appears. The House of Lords recognise this distinction that the practitioner has duties towards his client which fall outside his obligations to court and are untrammelled by them. It is obvious that no practitioner is employed by a client merely to confess judgment or deliberately to expose the weakness of his case in the supposed discharge of the practitioner's obligations to court. Where then is the scope for the lawyer to present his client's case at its best, employing tactics and strategy where necessary?

The decision of the House of Lords, gives liberty of action to the practitioner in the matter of making pleadings and raising defences and issues. But there are many other varieties of acts for which a practitioner has to undertake responsibility on behalf of the client. It is not possible to enunciate them seriatim. In fact, their number is legion. But as a guidance to ourselves, we may lay down the following. Let it be a first rule that honourable conduct in all matters is to be studied and practised. There need, however, be no assumption that the duty of absolute disclosure enunciated with reference to affidavits of documents applied in respect of all acts which a practitioner has to do on behalf of his client and that as soon as a fact or a document comes to the knowledge of the practitioner which militates against his own case and lends support to that of the adversary, the maintenance of his honour requires him to hand up his client, as it were, disclose the matter to the Court in the assumed discharge of his duties as an officer of Court and solicit a judgment in favour of the opposite side. The line may therefore be drawn by enunciating that no practitioner acting on behalf of his client shall do anything with the object of using the Court for perpetrating a fraud upon the opposite party or doing manifest injustice to him and thereby seek to make the Court an instrument of fraud or oppression. Subject to this duty which he owes to Court, the practitioner must conduct himself as an honourable man maintaining fidelity to the trust reposed in him and properly discharging his contractual obligations to the client.

In the judgment of Viscount Maugham, in referring to the nature of the application before the Court it is stated that the application was "in the light of the evidence and of the facts disclosed relating to the conduct of the solicitors"..... "to exercise the Court's jurisdiction to pay the costs so recovered from their respective clients." (The italics are mine.) It is also mentioned in the report that the applicant was not able to recover anything from the opposite party. These facts may suggest that the applicant sought, that the solicitor should disgorge that which he had absorbed to such an extent as to leave his client flaccid, and by way of a tracing order. But it is obvious that any such suggestion is not warranted by the grounds of the decision. The order would have been made against the solicitor, even if he had not enriched himself at the expense of his client and even if that client were in a position to meet the original decretal obligation.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

NAAH (LADY) v. WESTMINSTER BANK, LTD., (1940) A.C. 366 (H.L.).

Deed—Settlement executed by one party—Failure of other party to execute or give release deed—Effect—Settlement—If revocable.

Where there is an absolute and unconditional settlement it takes effect at once by the act of the settlor's executing it. This is complete when he delivers it as his deed. Consideration is not necessary and the settlor cannot revoke it. In the present case the Court of Appeal held that the settlor executed the settlement on the faith that the settlor's wife would execute it and give a release for which he stipulated and since she had not in fact executed the deed and eventually returned it unexecuted, the deed does not bind in equity. The House of Lords found,

Held [reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal (1938) 3 All E.R. 652 and restoring the decision of Morton, J.], the settlement was binding on the settlor although not executed by his wife. Statement in Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co., (1879) 11 Ch.D. 121, (125) held to be too wide.

LISENDEN v. BOSCH, Ltd., 1940 A.C. 412 (H.L.).

Election—Receipt of amount allowed under award by workman—If 'election' barring right of appeal as to portion disallowed.

The doctrine of 'election' is applicable only to cases arising under wills and deeds and other instruments inter vivos. It cannot apply to judgments or awards. Payment by a defendant of what has been found to be due from him does not operate without more to prevent the plaintiff from appealing for some further relief. It may be true that an award under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1925, is "indivisible" if not appealed from, but it is not an accurate statement of the position pending appeal. Appellant can appeal against a part of the award. Receipt of the amount awarded did not amount to election to bar the right of appeal. Johnson v. Newton Fire Extinguisher Co., Ltd., (1919) 2 K.B. 111, overr.

FIFE COAL CO., LTD., v. YOUNG, (1940) A.C. 479 (H.L.).

Workmen's Compensation Act (1925), S. 1—"Injury by accident"—Meaning—Disease before date of incapacity—Effect.

The pressure on the peroneal nerve (caused by the crouching position in which he had to work) during a spell of work brought about the paralysis of the claimant's muscles which is described as dropped foot. In a claim for compensation,

Held, the claimant sustained a definite physiological injury in the reasonable performance of his duties and as the result of the work he was engaged in at the time of the injury. The employee is entitled to compensation. Gradual and steady extension of the meaning of "injury by accident" traced. Authorities fully considered.

MELLOR v. AUSTRALIAN BROADCASTING COMMISSION, (1940) A.C. 491 (P.C.).

Copyright—Music—Performing rights—Consent or licence conferring—If includes right to broadcast.

Appellants' pamphlet stated: "We have paid for the performing rights of every piece." "All our music is free for public performance." "We make one price cover both the music and the performing rights thereof." Bands having bought the music published by the appellants played the musical works in public and some performances were broadcast by the respondent, a corporation. In an action for alleged infringement, Held, broadcasting was included in "performing rights" and respondent was not liable.

LETHBRIDGE v. INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS AND ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR CANADA, (1940) A.C. 513 (P.C.).

Constitutional Law—British North America Act, 1867, Ss. 91 and 92—Acts of Provincial Legislature reducing interest on securities—Acts in "pith and substance" relating to "interest" under S. 91 and only indirectly relating to subjects under S. 92—Conflict with Dominion Act as to interest—Constitutional validity of the provincial Acts.

The legislative assembly of the province of Alberta passed three Acts:—(1) Alberta Provincial Guaranteed Securities Interest Act, 1937, reducing the interest on securities guaranteed by the province; (2) Alberta Provincially Guaranteed Securities Proceedings Act, 1937, providing that no proceedings should be brought in respect of such interest or in any way to enforce such security without the consent of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council; and (3) The Provincial Securities Interest Act Alberta (1937) reducing interest on securities issued by the province.

Held, the Acts relate in substance not to borrowing but to payment of interest in respect of existing debentures and other securities at less than the contract rates. In pith and substance it relates to 'interest' a subject under S. 91 (19) of the British North America Act, 1867. Also they conflict with a Dominion Act (Interest Act, 1927). All three Acts are ultra vires the Provincial Legislature.

CAMERON v. PRENDERGAST, (1940) A.C. 549 (H.L.).

Income-tax—Amount received by an assessee (a director from his company as consideration for not resigning his directorship)—Liability to income-tax as profit arising from the office of director.

A director of a company agreed to continue as director of the company in an advisory capacity in consideration of the payment of £45,000. On a question whether the appellant was liable to income-tax in respect of the sums,

Held, the payment was one arising from the assessee's office and liable to tax under Schedule E of the Income-tax Act.

Hunter v. Dewhurst, (1932) 16 Tax Cases 605, distinguished.

(JAMES) & MILLWARD CO., LTD., In re, (1940) 1 Ch. 333.

Companies Act (1929), S. 225—Voluntary liquidation—Judgment-creditor, if entitled to apply for compulsory winding up—Practice—Affidavit evidence founded on information and belief—Probative value.

Where a company is in voluntary liquidation a judgment-creditor is entitled ex debito justitiae to an order for compulsory winding up and he need not show prejudice if winding up upon voluntary lines was allowed to continue.

Clauston, L.J.—"Where the onus is on the person opposing the winding up I would place but little reliance upon the affidavit of a liquidator founded on information and belief where the directors conversant with the whole matter do not put in any affidavit and are shielded from cross-examination."

A. LEWIS & CO., (WESTMINSTER) v. BELL PROPERTY TRUST, LTD., (1940) 1 Ch. 345.

Landlord and Tenant—Covenant not to use adjoining premises for business of sale of tobacco, cigars and cigarettes—Premises let for use as tea shop where cigarettes were supplied to customers on the premises—If breach of covenant.

There was a covenant not to use adjoining premises for 'business of sale of tobacco, cigars and cigarettes.' The landlords let the adjoining premises to an A. B. C. Tea Shop who supplied customers cigarettes at the premises. In an action for damages for breach of covenant against the landlord, Held, one cannot fairly predicate of the tea shop that they are carrying on upon the premises the business of selling tobacco, cigars and cigarettes and the action must fail.

CAMDEN NOMINEES, LTD. v. FORCZY, (1940) 1 Ch. 352.

Tort—Contract between landlord and tenant—Tenant's Association advocating the withholding of rent to redress grievances against landlord—Liability for inducing breach of contract.

If A without justification knowingly interferes with a contract between B and C he commits an actionable wrong. The plaintiffs were the owners of a block of flats let upon tenancy agreements which were in standard form, each agreement containing inter alia (a) an obligation on the tenant to pay his rent, and (b) certain obligations on the landlord including that of lighting the staircase and landings and keeping them properly cleaned and swept and of maintaining constant hot water and central heating. There were 62 tenants in the block. Certain tenants complained that landlords were not satisfactorily carrying out their obligations. Some of the tenants formed into an association. The two members who were active in forming the association were sued for endeavouring to persuade their fellow tenants to break their agreements by withholding rent. The defendants contended that they were justified on two grounds namely (1) that they and those whom they would persuade to break their contracts have a common interest in making the landlords perform their obligations, and (2) that because the tenants on one side were weak and the landlords on the other are strong and take advantage of their strength, it is justifiable to use the weapon which would otherwise be wrongful.

Held, the defendants had no justification and must be restrained by injunction and are also liable for damages.

BLAIBERG. In re: BLAIBERG AND PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. DE ANDIA YRARRAZAVAL AND BLAIBERG (1940) 1 Ch. 385.

Will—Clause for forfeiture on legatee "marrying any person not of the Jewish faith"—If void for uncertainty.

A codicil contained, inter alia, the following clause: "..... should any child or grandchild of mine at any time whether before or after my decease marry any person not of the Jewish faith such child or grandchild shall forfeit and be deprived of any interest or share under my said will or codicil and my said will or codicil thereto shall be construed as if such child or grandchild had been dead at the time of his or her contracting any such marriage." A granddaughter having married a person other than of Jewish faith, which marriage was later dissolved.

Held, the question whether or not a person is of the "Jewish faith" is something which lies in his or her own conscience and is a matter of belief. The condition is one far too uncertain for the Courts to give effect to and is void.

WILSON v. LONDON MIDLAND AND SCOTTISH RAILWAY CO. (1940) 1 Ch. 393.

Companies—Stamped proxies sent only to holders of stock of over £2,500 following the practice of the company—Object to ensure quorum—Smaller holders if legally entitled to claim equality of treatment and enforce it through Court—Proper remedy.

There were holders of stock to the amount of £1,000,000. What the directors did in practice was to send a stamped proxy to all holders who hold stock to the value of £2,500 and upwards. The object was to ensure the necessary quorum which was very large. It will take a good many stockholders of stock valued at less than £2,500 to make the necessary quorum. In a claim by smaller stockholders claiming similar rights,

Held, the question as to whether or not the practice is to be followed is a pure question of the policy of the company and the directors are entitled to take the course they did. If the stockholders think that the practice has to be changed they have to resort to ordinary constitutional methods in the company itself. They have no right to call for assistance from the Courts.

WELLS' WILL TRUSTS, In re: PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. WELLS, (1940) 1 Ch. 411.

Will—Annuity free of all deductions—If to be free of income-tax.

A gift was given by will in this form:—"I bequeath the following annuities free of duties to commence from the date of my Death of my said wife : an annuity of £ 350 during her life or widowhood to be paid free of all deductions by equal quarterly payments the first shall be paid three months after my death....."

Held, the annuity was not given "free of income-tax." 1939 Ch. 654. Not Foll.

REDDITCH BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY v. ROBERTS, (1940) 1 Ch. 415.

Practice—Defendant who had not entered appearance in time appearing at time of signing judgment and attempting to enter appearance—Judgment by default—If can be passed.

In an action on a mortgage the defendant had not entered appearance within time but received notice of application for leave to enter judgment in default of appearance. On the day fixed he wanted to enter appearance.

Held, a judgment ought never to go in default of appearance when the defendant is before the Court and whether he has technically appeared or not, is there and anxious to put himself in a position to defend.

BIRCHALL, In re : KENNEDY v. BIRCHALL, (1940) 1 Ch. 424.

Will—Bequest to children alive at testator's death and if any child shall die in testator's lifetime leaving child or children living at testator's death—Children of child dead at time of will—Rights of.

The testatrix provided that the residue of the trust moneys was to be held in trust for her children "living at my death..... provided that if any child of mine..... shall die in my lifetime leaving a child or children living at my death who being male attain the age of 21 years or being a female attain that age or marry, such child or children shall take the share which his or her or their parent would have taken if such parent had survived me."

Held, the children of a child already dead at the date of the will were entitled to share.

BOND v. NOTTINGHAM CORPORATION, (1940) 1 Ch. 429.

Easements—Support to adjoining premises—Removal by local authority without providing equivalent support after default by owner in carrying out clearance order—Liability to provide equivalent support.

The owner of a tenement is not entitled by his acts to remove the support to adjoining premises without providing an equivalent. Where the owner of the servient tenement fails to carry out a clearance order to demolish the premises and the local authority wants to demolish the premises, the local authority also is equally under an obligation to adopt that method of demolition which will not interfere with the right of the owner of the adjoining premises to support from the building to be demolished. (1939) Ch. 847, affirmed.

CAPON, In re: THE TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY v. KNIGHT & SONS, (1940) 1 Ch. 442.

Sale of Goods—Auctioneer providing funds for purchase of pigs—Purchaser removing pigs after signing note acknowledging receipt of the pigs (that pigs were auctioneers' property and could be removed and sold by them)—Bankruptcy of purchaser—Right to the pig.

Auctioneers had provided funds for purchase of pigs by a farmer who before removing them signed a note acknowledging receipt of the pigs and stating that pigs were auctioneers' property and could be removed and sold by them. On the bankruptcy of the farmer the auctioneers seized and sold the pigs and claimed to retain the sale proceeds against the trustees in bankruptcy. The auctioneers claimed that the farmer was their agent in the purchase of the pigs and the arrangement was to give them a security.

Held [affirming (1939) 4 ALL.E.R. 554], the farmer was not an agent of the auctioneers and the property in the pigs passed to him and the trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to the sale proceeds of the pigs.

A DEBTOR, In re: THE JUDGMENT CREDITOR v. THE JUDGMENT-DEBTOR, (1940) 1 Ch. 470.

Practice—Stay of execution "provided that 10 l. be paid on the 1st February, 1940 and 10 l. per month thereafter"—Construction.

An order contained the following provision:—

"And it is further ordered that execution be suspended provided that 10l. be paid on the 1st February, 1940, and 10l. per month "thereafter." The first payment was made on 1st February, and the next payment was not paid till 5th March. On 2nd March a bankruptcy notice was issued and the debtor applied to set aside the notice contending that he had the whole of the month of March in which to pay the second instalment and so there was no default.

Held, the word "thereafter" refers to the date on which the first payment is to be made namely 1st February and accordingly the last day for payment would be the 1st of every succeeding month and the application to set aside the bankruptcy notice must be dismissed. . .

TAYLOR, In re: MIDLAND BANK EXECUTOR AND TRUSTEE CO. LTD., v. SMITH, (1940) 1 Ch. 481.

Wills—Trust for voluntary associations—Validity.

A testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for the Bank staff association (a voluntary association) whose object was to give financial assistance to the past and present members of the staff or their dependants. The gift was directed to be held upon the trusts set out in the constitution and rules of the association. It was contended that the gift was not charitable and was a gift to no named persons and the objects of the trust as found in the constitution and rules of the association were so vague and uncertain that the Courts cannot give effect to them and that therefore the residuary estate must be treated as undisposed.

Held, (1) the gift was not for charitable purposes alone; (2) the gift was to the association, that the hand to receive it being the trustee of that association; (3) where there is a gift to an unincorporated body of persons and nothing in the rules or the constitution of that body which prevents them from using the fund so given to them in any way they please, either by applying the capital or the income to any of the purposes therein set out or by putting an end to the fund altogether and distributing it among themselves the fact that there may be some difficulty in construing the exact meaning of the rules or the constitution is not a matter which can affect the validity of the gift itself.

Will—Option to purchase conferred by will—If can be exercised by executors of donee after his death.

Prima facie an option to purchase given by will to a named person is personal to him and does not pass to his executors or confer a transmissible interest. If the contrary is to be held there must be found, in the will giving the option, some indication that it is exercisable by the executors of the person to whom it is given.

Companies—Directors acting without requisite number of qualification shares—Liability for statutory penalties—Relief against future proceedings—Discretion of Chancery Courts to grant.

In consequence of reduction of capital of the companies the directors ceased to hold the requisite number of qualification shares but continued to act as directors. Proceedings were commenced against the directors by the respondents under Companies Act, 1929, S. 141 (5). The directors applied for relief from liability in respect of fines or penalties under S. 141 (5) and also in respect of future liability for acts done as directors.

Held, as the directors had acted honestly and reasonably they were entitled to relief against future liability. But their liability under the pending proceeding must be decided by those Courts.

Companies Act (1929), S. 135—Inquiry into companies affairs by inspector appointed by Board of Trade—Examination of managing director—Presence of shorthand writer—If necessary—Refusal to answer question in his presence—Contempt of Court.

A managing director, summoned by the inspector appointed by the Board of Trade to investigate the affairs of the company under Companies Act (1929), S. 135 refused to answer questions so long as any person (here a shorthand writer) other than the inspector was in the room.

Held, if it is a fact, that a shorthand writer to take down the proceedings as a record for the inspector's use in preparing his report is necessary then there is no question but that the inspector is entitled to have the shorthand writer present. The managing director is in effect guilty of contempt of Court. Heart of Oak Assurance, Ltd. v. Attorney-General, (1932) A.C. 392, Applied.

Copyright—Drawing in two dimensions—Whether can be infringed by a copy in three dimensions—Reproduction from a copy of plaintiff's work—Whether infringement of copyright in original work.

Where the artistic work in which copyright is claimed is a drawing in two dimensions (cartoons) it can be infringed by a figure in three dimensions such as (brooches or charms, plaster dolls and mechanical toys). It must be immaterial whether the infringing article is derived directly or indirectly from the original work. The standard is objective and the test is whether or not the original work or a substantial part thereof has been reproduced. If it has been, it is no answer to say that it has been copied from a work which was itself, whether licensed or unlicensed, a copy of the original.

Costs—Solicitor's lien—Charge limited to costs incurred in recovery of property.

Where solicitors had acted on behalf of the administrators of the estate (defendants in a summons for administration of the estate of an intestate) and in the course of the action some property was sold and proceeds were brought into Court, the solicitors asked for a charging order for all the costs of the action.

Held, the charging order should be limited to the costs properly incurred in recovering and preserving the money in Court.

TREBANOG WORKING MEN'S CLUB AND INSTITUTE, LTD. v. MACDONALD, (1940) 1 K.B. 576.

Clubs—Serving of intoxicating liquor to members—If sale of liquor—If requires justices licence.

In a prosecution of an incorporated member's club for selling intoxicating liquor without holding a licence,

Held, that the transaction which takes place in a member's club, when a member orders and pays for intoxicating liquor is not a sale but is rather deemed the transfer of a special property in the goods from all the other members of the club to the consumer in consideration of the price paid. The club does not require a justices licence to cover the serving of intoxicants to members.

REX v. CARMICHAEL, (1940) 1 K.B. 630.

Crimes—Indictment of father for incest—Evidence by father that subject of the charge was not his daughter though born in wedlock—Admissibility—Rule in Russell v. Russell, if precludes such evidence.

On 2nd September, 1912, the accused married P and there were two children of the marriage—Elsie born on 11th April, 1913 and Sonia born on 18th May, 1915. Throughout 1914 P lived at Cambridge and the accused in London. Accused used to visit the wife during week ends. There was evidence that about August, 1914, 9 months before the birth of Sonia, P was associating with a stranger H but there was no evidence of misconduct. In January, 1915, accused enlisted in the army and while he was away his wife committed adultery with H and on 17th November, 1916, accused presented a divorce petition and a decree for divorce was duly passed. On 10th July, 1918, accused married G and the daughters Elsie and Sonia lived with accused's mother till 1926 when they came to live with the accused and his second wife. In 1932 accused separated from G who became suspicious about accused's feelings towards Sonia. After that accused lived with Sonia, who since then gave birth to three children. In the divorce petition against his first wife and on other occasions the accused had acknowledged that he was the father of Sonia. The accused was charged with incest. The second wife G was cited as a prosecution witness. Accused wanted to ask her in cross-examination whether it was not the fact that the accused had informed her that he was not the father of Sonia. The Judge held Russell v. Russell, made the question inadmissible. Then accused in giving evidence for himself sought to prove that at the time of the offence charged he knew he was not the father of Sonia and that his first wife told him so. The evidence was disallowed on the ground that it would infringe the rule in Russell v. Russell, and the accused was convicted. On appeal, Held, the ingredient of the offence is that accused should have had carnal knowledge with one "who is to his knowledge his..... daughter." Knowledge is vital to the commission of the offence. Russell v. Russell did not preclude the accused from giving any relevant evidence in support of his plea that he did not believe that Sonia was his daughter, including an admission or confession by her mother.

DIGBY v. GENERAL ACCIDENT, FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CORPORATION, LTD., (1940) 1 K.B. 643.

Insurance—Motor insurance—Indemnity against third party risks of policyholder and similar indemnity to authorised driver—Claim of policyholder against his driver—Rights under policy—Arbitration clause—If binding on driver.

An Insurance Company undertook to indemnify the policyholder in respect of any claim by any person including passengers in the car against all risks through or in respect of his car. The indemnity was to extend to any person driving the car with the owner's order or permission. The owner having been injured in a collision and failing in his claim against the owner of the other car, sued his own chauffeur who in turn claimed indemnity under the policy of insurance. It was contended that the policyholder could not be a claimant.

Held, the driver was entitled to be indemnified in respect of damages awarded to the policyholder against him. The chauffeur was bound by the arbitration clause in the policy.

RUBIE v. FAULKNER, (1940) 1 K.B. 571.

Motor driving—Offences—Learner driving under supervision of competent driver—Driving on wrong side leading to collision—Competent driver remaining passive—If can be convicted of aiding and abetting offence.

A person with a learner's licence drove the motor car in a bend of the road on the offside and as a result of the engine stopping there was a collision. The appellant, a competent driver, accompanying the learner, in conformity with the Motor Vehicles Regulations remained passive, without warning the learner not to go to the offside of the white line on the road which the appellant occupying the back seat was able to see.

Held, the appellant by his passive conduct in circumstances in which something was needed to be done in order to fulfil the duties of a supervisor, aided and abetted the learner driver to commit the offence.

Workmen's compensation—Receipt of compensation by workman—Circumstances precluding common law remedies.

On 8th March, 1938, plaintiff while working on a certain ship to load the vessel was injured by a beam which fell on him. He received half wages during disablement. He did not know his right to damages and right to compensation under the Act.

Held, the workman was not receiving the money with knowledge that it was compensation under the Act. He was not precluded from enforcing his common law remedies. (1939) 3 All.E.R. 339 reversed.

McQUACKER v. GODDARD, (1940) 1 K.B. 687.

Tort—Animal causing injury—Liability of owners—Camel—Whether domestic or wild animal—Question whether animal wild or domestic—If for Judge or jury.

A camel in a Zoo having bit the plaintiff while visiting the Zoo, the owners were sued for damages. The evidence was overwhelming that in fact camels are the oldest domesticated animals in the world. There was no evidence that the defendant knew that this particular animal was likely to do mischief.

Held, the defendant is not liable. The question whether an animal is wild or domestic is for the Judge to decide and not for the jury. The Judge takes judicial notice of the ordinary course of nature—in this particular case of the ordinary course of nature in regard to the position of camels, among other animals. The evidence was given merely to assist the Judge in forming his view as to what the ordinary course of nature in this regard, in fact is, a matter of which he is supposed to have complete knowledge.

Workmen's compensation—Certification of silicosis—Workmen receiving compensation on that day for previous accident—Extent of compensation for silicosis.

A collier met with an accident on 12-8-1935 while working for the appellant company. Several ribs were broken and he was paid compensation on the basis of total incapacity at the rate of 30s. per week, until 9-12-1936 and then reduced to 19s. per week. On 22-2-1937 the medical board certified the workman to be suffering from silicosis as a result of his employment and dated the disability back to 18-11-1936.

Held, the workman must notionally be regarded on 18th November 1936, as having then a full earning capacity which has been totally destroyed by the silicosis and the payment in respect of the first accident ought not to be taken into account.

SUNLEY (B) AND CO., LTD. v. CUNARD WHITE STAR, LTD., (1940)

1 K.B. 740.

Contract—Damages for breach—Failure of defendant to transport certain machines in due time—Machines idle for a week—Proper measure of damages.

The plaintiffs were contractors and the defendants undertook to transport one of plaintiff's "tractor and scraper" from one workspot to another. There was a delay of one week in carrying out the contract and plaintiff claimed damages. The evidence did not show that the work for which the machine was transported would have been finished earlier or that there was any loss of profits.

Held, plaintiffs were entitled to recover only nominal damages for depreciation, interest, maintenance of machine and wages. (1939) 3 All.E.R. 641, varied.

ONLO OSAKAYETIO v. ARNOLD LEVER AND CO., LTD., (1940) 1

K.B. 750.

Contract—C.I.F. contract for purchase of timber—Insurance—Increase of premium for covering war risks to be for buyer's accounts—Shipping cargo in belligerent ship—Buyer is liable for increase of premium.

In a C.I.F. contract for purchase of timber there was an insurance clause providing that any increase in premium payable for covering war risks (according to institute war and strike clauses in force at the time of attachment of the insurance) in excess of prevailing rates to be for buyer's accounts. The shippers chartered a Spanish (then belligerent state's) ship covering the cargos with insurance at a rate in the discretion of the underwriters. In a claim against buyers for the excess in the premium rate, Held, the claim failed. There was no ruling rate for Spanish ships and buyers were liable only for scheduled rates of premium: (1939) 4 All.E.R. 88, affirmed.

IMPERIAL SMELTING CORPORATION, LTD. v. JOSEPH CONSTANTINE STEAMSHIP LINE, LTD., (1940) 1 K.B. 812.

Contract—Charterparty—Frustration by accident to ship—Onus of proving that frustration was or was not self-induced.

The claimants (the charterers) claimed damages for failure to load. The respondents (shipowners) pleaded the destruction of the ship as a navigable unit (by reason of the bursting of a boiler) and claimed that the contract was thereby frustrated, without liability on their part. The claimants in reply stated that the frustration arose from the default of the respondents, who are not entitled, therefore, to rely upon it.

Held, as a general rule a party seeking to recover compensation for damage must prove that the party against whom he complains was in the wrong. When respondents have proved the accident causing the destruction of the ship, the onus of ultimately satisfying the tribunal that the ship was at fault rests on the claimants. Whether such onus has been discharged must be judged by applying the following principles—namely (i) if the accident was such as to raise a presumption of negligence the onus is on the owner to destroy that presumption; (ii) if the accident was such as to afford no proof of negligence the onus is on the charterers to prove negligence in fact; and (iii) if the onus is upon the owner under the first principle, that onus is discharged by proving facts from which the inference that the accident was not caused by negligence is as strong—that is, equally consistent with the facts—as is the inference that it was caused by negligence. (On the facts the claimants failed to discharge the onus and the claim was dismissed.)

ETTENFIELD v. ETTENFIELD, (1940) P. 96.

Husband and wife—Separation deed—Birth of child—Evidence of spouses as to non-access—Admissibility.

It was found that the husband left his wife about August 6, 1935. Parties orally agreed to live apart, the husband making a weekly payment to his wife. The wife gave birth to a child on May 26, 1937. The question arose whether the husband could give evidence of non-access.

Held, (1) The rule in Russell v. Russell that evidence tending to bastardise or legitimise a child conceived and born during wedlock cannot be given by either spouse is absolute, and applies, not only when the parties are living together, but also when they are separated either by a decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction or by their own volition. (2) Where the only evidence of adultery in support of a husband's petition is the birth of a child to the wife (a) if the parties have been separated by the decree or order of a Court, the husband need prove no more than the date of the decree or order and the date of birth of the child. If it must have been conceived after the date of the decree or order, there is a presumptio juris that it is a bastard. The wife may rebut that presumption if she can, but she must do it by evidence other than her own; (b) where the parties have voluntarily separated, whether by deed, writing under hand, oral agreement, or agreement implied from conduct, the husband cannot give evidence of non-access, but he can prove that fact by any means open to him other than his own evidence. The presumption is that the child is legitimate. If the husband leads evidence to rebut that presumption, the wife can call, but cannot herself give evidence in support of the child's legitimacy. Case-law discussed. Decision of Langton, J., in (1929) 2 All.E.R. 743, reversed. Leave to appeal to House of Lords given.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Mr. R. Satyamurthi Aiyar.—Mr. R. Satyamurthi Aiyar, Master of our High Court, has been selected by the Central Government to serve as a Judicial Member of the Appellate Tribunal, Income-tax, constituted under S. 5-A of the Indian Income-Tax Act, 1922. Mr. Satyamurthi Aiyar has been a member of the Provincial Judicial service since 1919. Starting as a District Munsiff, he became Assistant Registrar, High Court, in 1926 and thereafter has held in succession the posts of Official Referee, Deputy Registrar and Master. He also acted as Registrar for a short spell during this year. He is the author of a number of books:—The Court-Fees Act, The Civil Procedure Code, etc. It may be remembered that some time back the Government of Madras entrusted him with the task of bringing to light the loopholes as well as the difficulties experienced in the working of the Court-Fees Act, with a view to the framing of suitable amendments thereto. The Appellate Tribunal, Income-tax is vested with important functions, being as it were a sort of second appellate authority in income-tax matters. We wish Mr. Satyamurthi Aiyar a career of usefulness and success in his new sphere of service.

Vagaries of Draftsmanship.—If anywhere absolute precision of language is eminently essential it surely is in the sphere of legislative enactments. In these, however, as in other products of the human mind, the desiderated precision is sometimes conspicuous by its absence, with the consequence, not altogether displeasing to members of the legal profession, of providing ample room and verge enough for debate in the Courts as to the purview of the statutes, so lacking; which come up for consideration. The late Lord Thring, who for many years held the important office of Parliamentary Counsel, compiled an admirable work treating of this subject, and incidentally gave various examples of how not to achieve the desired clarity; in short, a number of what nowadays are called, although why is not very obvious, "howlers." Among these which he cites is that of the Queen's Counsel, also a member of the House of Commons, who in 1865 drafted an amendment to a Bill then before the House, which ran thus: "Every dog found trespassing on inclosed land unaccompanied by the registered owner of such dog or other person who shall on being asked give his true name and address, may be then and there destroyed by such occupier or by his orders." This piece of draftsmanship, oddly enough, was not accepted by the sponsors of the Bill or by the House!—L.T., 1940, p. 148.

Some Amusing Slips.—A story has come down to us from the days when Ireland was represented in the House of Commons and when that country sent not a few who enlivened the oftentimes dull proceedings by some exceedingly witty interjection, or occasionally by what Calverley called in the delightful way a "paronomasia, play upon words," or, in simple language, a bull. On one occasion an Irish member drafted a Bill wherein it was provided that such and such proceedings should take place annually on 1st August, "unless that day fell upon a Sunday, Good Friday, or Christmas Day." It need hardly be said that the Bill, at any rate in this form, did not get into the statute book. But one quite as bad, or nearly so, was perpetrated by the draftsman of the Bill which eventually reached the statute book as the Darlington Improvement Act, 1872, in which the term "new building" was defined thus: "Any building pulled or burnt down to or within 10 feet from the surface of the adjoining ground." But slips are also to be found not infrequently in our older Acts; thus in the Registration Act, 52, Geo. 3, c. 146, the fruit of penalties is to be divided between the informer, who gets one-half, and certain charitable purposes, to which the other is devoted, while the only penalty set forth is transportation for fourteen years!—L.T., 1940, p. 148.

Criminal Statistics.—The Criminal Statistics for England and Wales for 1938, which were recently issued by the Home Office, show that the total number of persons found guilty of indictable offences during the year was 78,463. There were 84 cases of murder of persons over one year of age known to the police (compared with 78 for the previous year); and in 30 cases the murderer or suspect committed suicide. Nine persons were hanged, in nine cases sentence of death was commuted to penal servitude for life, and in one case the convicted person was ordered to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure. During 1938, 5,263 persons committed suicide and 3,303 cases of attempted suicide were reported to the police. The number of persons found guilty of violence against the person (indictable cases) was 1,583 or 0.2 per cent. of the total number of offences recorded. Non-indictable assaults numbered 10,699 or 1.4 per cent. As to larceny, there were 78,463 offenders, of whom 68,679 were males and 9,784 females. Of those found guilty of larceny, 10,814 or 13.7 per cent., were charged with breaking and entering. Less than a quarter of these were adults and 37 per cent. were under the age of fourteen. It appears that in general the worst age groups for boy offenders is from fourteen to sixteen, and for girl offenders from fifteen to nineteen. The incidence of crime is nearly eight times greater among males than among females. The total number of persons found guilty of drunkenness in 1938 was 52,661, or 236 more than in 1937. The increase in this class of offence which has been recorded since 1932, when the figure was 33,100, thus continuous. Once again wide local variations throughout the country are recorded in the proportion of adult offenders placed by courts of summary jurisdiction under the supervision of a probation officer. An analysis of records of the Criminal Record Office at Scotland Yard of persons found guilty of criminal offences in 1932 discloses the fact that the great majority do not offend again. Of the older persons 90 per cent., of the younger over 70 per cent., were clear of any further charges during the ensuing period of five years; while these statistics show that the proportion of offenders convicted of further offences is higher among the young than the older people and decreases progressively with the increase of age. In all age groups the re-conviction rate was lower for the period from 1933 to 1938 than for the previous five years.—S.J., 1940, p. 157.

Enthusiasm in the Law.—Long ago Lord Bacon laid it down that every man is a debtor to his profession, meaning thereby, we may assume, that in the legal sphere the lawyer is under obligation to give of his best on behalf of the client by whom he is instructed—an injunction which most members of the profession fulfil to the letter. In one of the letters in Scott's Redgauntlet, Alan Fairford, writing to his friend Darsie Latimer, says, "You know my father considers every moment taken from the law as a step downhill; and I owe much to his anxiety on my account, although its effects are sometimes troublesome," and one can well imagine that Scott was stating his own experience, his father being one of the old school who thought law was everything and must on no account be neglected if his son was to make any headway in the legal world. Some, no doubt, exhibit an enthusiasm in the practice of the law which puts the less excitable practitioners to shame. Most of us are familiar with the story, certainly ben trovato if not literally accurate, of Baron Parke, who in his enthusiasm took what he called "a beautiful demurrer"; to the bedside of a sick friend to cheer him into convalescence—a result which it is to be hoped had the desired effect. In other ways, too, the Baron showed his enthusiasm for legal correctitude by insisting that the record should be above suspicion in the matter of form, nothing giving him more pain than to find it lacking in precision and clarity; these he regarded as essential. Great lawyer he certainly was, but he had at least one predecessor on the Bench who was equally enthusiastic for law and its practice. This was Mr. Justice Buller of whom, in another connection, it was said that, while he was considered by the male sex as the most learned of lawyers he was stigmatised by the ladies as the most cruel of judges because to him was attributed the ungentlemanly dictum that a husband was entitled to beat his wife, provided that the stick with which the castigation was administered was no thicker than his thumb! Like many other pungent remark attributed to men in a prominent position the accuracy of this dictum has been gravely doubted, and surely he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. More germane to our present purpose was his dictum that his idea of heaven "was to sit at Nisi Prius all day, and to play at whist all night"!—L. T., 1940, p. 210.

No. Certain Bliss.—"Was your marriage happy at the start?" Counsel recently asked a witness in the Divorce Court, and Mr. Justice Bucknill said: "We cannot assume that marriage is a state to which the word 'happy' can properly be applied. It is enough if a spouse can say of it that it was even normal. 'Was your marriage normal?' is a much more sensible question." Constant dealing with matrimonial causes seems to make judges chary of talking too lightly of happiness. One recalls the case of an eloquent advocate who wound up a speech before Mr. Justice Gresswell with the words: "I hope your lordship will decree a separation between these parties and let this lady pass the rest of her days in peace and happiness." But the judge said: "This Court has no power to decree that the lady shall pass the rest of her days in peace and happiness, but what it has power to decree is that these persons shall be judicially separated." On the whole, both in marriage and separation, it is probably wise to leave out "lived happily ever after." S.J., 1940, p. 181.

Judges' Mannerisms.—Of late the glamour value of Bench and Bar has caused more traders than usual to drag them into advertisements for the stimulation of sales. One of these, designed to sell a species of chocolate bean, said to be good for the nerves, told (with comic illustrations) the story of a barrister who was put off his speech by an eminent judge's habit of tapping absent-mindedly on his desk, but who cured his lordship with a timely gift of a packet of the wonderful beans. Well, that, at any rate, was a better way of dealing with the situation than the one adopted by an Irish Barrister who, irritated by the mannerisms of Crampton, J., interrupted his argument before the full Court, saying: "I really can't proceed while Judge Crampton is nodding his head at me and the smack of his lips every five minutes is like the uncorking of a bottle." The old judge, who was a most polished gentleman, did not fly into a rage at this rudeness, but said: "I am really not aware of these peculiarities and I am grateful for the rebuke. No man is conscious of his own peculiarities."—S.J., 1940, p. 181.

Dr. Johnson on Law and Lawyers.—To praise Boswell's Life of Johnson is in these days a work of supererogation; it is a classic in the domain of biography, but like many another classic it is apt to be taken as read and to be left on the shelf along with many another volume which has achieved distinction in the world of literature.

* * * * *

It is certainly a very pleasant occupation for a leisure hour to turn to some of the many references to the legal world and its work as viewed by the virile mind of Johnson. In 1768, Boswell, who loved to draw his mentor out on questions of casuistry, asked Johnson whether as a moralist he did not think that the practice of the law did not in some degree hurt the nice feeling of honesty. To this, it will be remembered, the doctor replied that he did not think so, provided that one acted properly, meaning, thereby, that the lawyer must not deceive his clients with false representations and must not "tell lies to a judge." The pertinacious Boswell, not content with this, continued his cross-examination by the question, "But what do you think of supporting a cause which you know to be bad?" "Sir," answered Johnson, you do not know it to be good or bad till the judge determines it. . . . You are not to be confident in your own opinion that a cause is bad, but to say all that you can for your client, and then hear the judge's opinion." Even this failed to satisfy the curiosity—for it was only this—of Boswell, who, we may be sure, cared not a jot whether the case he chanced to be supporting in court was really good or bad. But it is worth being reminded of Johnson's practical view of the moral aspect of the question which "Bozzy" affected to be so much worried about.—L. T., 1940, p. 239.

What's in a Trade?—Those witnesses who attach so much importance to the elegant description of their callings would do well to remember the story of a particularly self-confident young barrister who began rather badly with the examination of his first witness in his first case. "You are a butchah, arn't you?" he began. "No, sir," came the sullen reply. "Then you are a bakah, arn't you?" "No sir." There was a titter in court, but the young man rose magnificently above it. "Really", he said, "it doesn't matter a damn what you are!" Still, sometimes the question of occupation can be made to tell. In the course of the great Baccarat Case, Sir Charles Gill rose to cross-examine a fashionably dressed "swell" who stood in the box flourishing a tasselled cane. "Put that stick down and attend to me," he began. "What are you?" "What am I?" repeated the witness, taken aback. "Yes, what are you?" said Gill in his nastiest tone. "What do you do for a living? What good are you to the world?" After that the witness could only murmur very pitifully: "I'm a master of foxhounds."—S. J., 1940, p. 269.

Outstanding Judges.—In each generation there is usually at least one member of the Bench possessing a personality which finds expression in some notable dicta, not always, it may be, strictly germane to the matter being forensically debated, and not even on purely legal topics which excite the attention of those who follow the proceedings of the Courts, but dicta, it may be, of a humorous character, or sometimes in the form of a scathing comment on men and things. In recent years the most conspicuous instance of a judge having such characteristics was, of course, Mr. Justice Darling, whose good things, if perhaps scattered with a too profuse hand, were usually of excellent quality giving great delight to those in his court, unless it may be those who were victims of his criticisms, and to them these could scarcely make a potent appeal. In an old notebook upon which the present writer lighted the other day he found preserved one or two of Mr. Justice Darling's dicta which seemed to be too good to lose, several of which may be of interest to readers. The earliest of these scattered memoranda takes us back to the days before that learned judge had reached the Bench, and recalls an early effort by Mr. Darling, as he then was, in an action which was tried by Baron Huddleston. Darling was for the plaintiff, his opponent being A. G. C. Liddell, who later filled the office of ecclesiastical secretary under the Lord Chancellor, and who left us a singularly attractive volume of reminiscences bearing the modest title "Notes from the Life of an Ordinary Mortal," which is full of good things. There he told us that, when still practising at the Bar, he appeared for the defendant in an action which was tried by Baron Huddleston, the plaintiff being represented by Mr. Darling. The defendant was a blackman and a Parsee, and when he went into the witness-box to give evidence some discussion took place as to how he should be sworn. Eventually it was settled that he should unbutton his waistcoat and take the oath with his hand thrust inside a coloured thread which encircled his waist. Observing this quaint ceremony with no little interest, Mr. Darling quietly remarked, "The thread of the Parcae," thus giving promise of his future distinction as a master of shrewd and witty comment. Then there was his explanation that the maxim Ne sutor ultra crepidam has no application to anyone exercising judicial functions; it applies only to "sutors." Many will also remember his remark when it was sought to justify the cross-examination of a prisoner as to character on the ground that he had called the prosecutor a liar. Mr. Justice Darling thought that the proposed cross-examination was surely inadmissible seeing that the prisoner, under the stress of cross-examination, merely said of one man what the Psalmist said of all men!—L.T., 1940, p. 287.

BOOK REVIEWS.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE by Messrs. V. V. Chitaley, B.A., LL.B., Nagpur and K. N. Annaji Rao, B.A., B.L., Advocate, Madras, Volume III (3rd Edition). Published by The All India Reporter, Ltd., Nagpur. Price Rs. 36 per set.

This is the third and last volume of the third edition of the commentaries to the Civil Procedure Code by V. V. Chitaley and K. N. Annaji Rao and D. V. Chitaley. This work has taken a leading place among the books of reference on the Civil Procedure Code, the other commentaries having gone out of date without any recent editions being brought out. Its leading place is also due to the fact that it gives all the learning in the other works as well. Effort has been taken not to omit the reference to any case whether important or otherwise. The only matter for regret is that of the cases reported in the non-official journals, references are given to the All India Reporter alone even as regards the years prior to its publication thus causing inconvenience to those who have only the non-official journals published in such years. The scheme of the work is well known and has been followed in the authors' commentaries on the Criminal Procedure Code and the Indian Limitation Act. In common with these works, there is no index of cases referred to in the body of the work. The volume under review deals with the first schedule of the Civil Procedure Code after Order 30 and the later schedules and the appendices. This edition fully maintains the level of its predecessors and will be used widely by the members of the Bench and the Bar.

THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP IN BRITISH INDIA by S. T. Desai, B.A., LL.B., Barrister-at-law, 514 pages. Published by the author at Hughes Road, Bombay. Price Rs. 8.

It is with great pleasure that we welcome the publication of this treatise on the Law of Partnership. With the progressive industrial growth of India fresh and novel problems bearing on the rights and liabilities of partners inter se and towards the outside world are bound to occur increasingly. A book dealing exhaustively and in a dependable manner with the substantive as well as the procedural law on the subject had been a longfelt want and the present publication goes a considerable way in meeting that requirement.

The Book is laid in four parts. Part I deals with the Indian Partnership Act, 1932 and provides an adequate commentary on the various sections. Part II is devoted to Practice and Procedure with special reference to the various questions that arise in suits by, against, or between partners. Part III sets out the law of insolvency affecting partners and partnerships and Part IV contains a discussion of illegal partnerships. The English Partnership Act, 1890 and the superseded provisions of the Indian Contract Act regarding partnerships are set out in Appendices. An inclusion of the rules framed by the various Provincial Governments would have added to the utility of the work and made it complete in all respects.

On some matters it may be possible to take a different view from that presented by the author. For instance on page 37 the author has expressed the opinion that there can be a joint family business among converts from Hinduism to Christianity to which the Hindu joint family law can apply and reliance is placed on Ghosal v. Ghosal, 31 Bom. 26, in preference to Tellis v. Saldanha, 10 Mad. 69. It is doubtful whether the Bombay view could now be followed in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Kamawati v. Digbijai, 43 All. 525. Again, in stating the effect of non-registration of firms the author has remarked on p. 280 that S. 69 (2) "absolutely debar[s] a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with the provisions relating to registration." It is certainly arguable whether the section postulates a total lack of jurisdiction in Courts or merely makes the exercise of jurisdiction contingent, so as to permit of a waiver or the curing of the irregularity arising from non-compliance with its provisions.

On the whole the book contains an accurate statement of the principles of partnership law in a lucid and attractive form. The get up and printing are excellent. We can heartily commend the book as a very useful contribution to the literature on the subject.

THE LAW OF EASEMENTS, by B. K. Amin, B.A., B.Sc., Barrister-at-law and C. G. Sastri, B.Sc., LL.B., 544 pages. Published by Messrs. N. M. Tripathi & Co., Bombay. Price Rs. 8.

This is a handy volume in which the authors have endeavoured to expound the law relating to easements in India. The statement of law takes the form of commentaries to the sections of the Indian Easements Act. In addition to easements allied topics like Party Walls, Fisheries, Ferries, Irrigation Rights, Public Rights, etc., have also been dealt with. The citation of cases, English and Indian, is both adequate and satisfactory. Critical examination of such points, as for instance, the capacity of a trespasser in occupation to acquire an easement right under S. 12, the meaning of the expression "as of right" in S. 15, the applicability in this country of the principles in Colls' case in relation to easements of light, etc., has not been avoided.

The discussion relating to the Madras Irrigation Cess Act and the legal consequences of cultivation with the help of water accidentally overflowing from a Government source, as found on pp. 343-344 of the book in particular, will have to be entirely recast in view of the Madras Irrigation Cess (Amendment) Act, 1940 (Madras Act VI of 1940). The latter enactment has been in force since April last but seems to have escaped the attention of the learned authors.

The differences between the English and Indian Law—wherever they exist—have been carefully brought out. The treatment of the subject is throughout lucid and we are sure that the book will prove highly useful to students and lawyers alike.

LAW OF ADVERSE POSSESSION by M. Krishnaswami, M.A., LL.M., Advocate, Dharwar, Professor, Law College, Poona. Published by M. Krishnaswami, M.A., LL.M. at his residence, Gibb Town, Dharwar.

Adverse Possession is a subject very familiar to the lawyer in India, as very often it is raised as a plea for perfecting the title of wrongful possession of a piece of property. No doubt the law on the subject has been evolved mainly due to the numerous decisions of the various High Courts and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

The background for a proper perspective of the theme has been prepared for us in the first four chapters by the author of this useful volume when he dilates upon the theoretical aspect of the subject, referring to its early concept in Roman Law as well as British Jurisprudence. The next few chapters deal with the nature of adverse possession and the variety of instances where it is recognized as such. Abundant case-law references are throughout furnished to the reader and the attempt to reconcile the conflicting decisions upon the subject in the various Courts is really commendable.

We cannot however conclude without a little disagreement with the author in his deliberate intention to omit a general index to this volume, because, we believe, the usefulness of a general index can never be overrated in any law book, apart from a special index of cases required to aid an easy reference.

THE INDIAN COMPANIES ACT by Meneses and Shah. Published by Messrs. Vora & Co., Ltd., 3, Round Building, Kalbadevi Road, Bombay, 1940 Edn.

The recent amendment of 1936 to the Indian Companies Act has introduced nearly a hundred new sections in addition to the repealing of certain old provisions. The complex nature of modern enterprises in commercial, industrial and banking concerns necessitated the substantial change in the Act to meet the growing demand for fresh legislation pertaining to the management of Joint Stock Companies as well as their amalgamation and winding up. We have further a few sections in the Act devoted to companies outside India and those mainly carrying on a banking business. We cannot but agree with the authors in their opinion in the preface that instead of a separate chapter in the Companies Act, a separate Act for reforming Indian Banking just on the same lines as the recent Insurance Act would have served the interests of this country better.

The scheme of this book discloses no doubt a meticulous care in commenting and criticising the Act with timely references to both English and Indian authorities. Apart from its usefulness to the practising lawyer, the book bids fair to be of great help to the business world in general. The table of contents and the index of cases add to the usefulness of an otherwise handy volume upon Company Law.

THE LAW OF FATAL ACCIDENTS IN INDIA by M. M. Aslam Khan. Published by the Sufi Publishing House, Pindi Bahauddin, Punjab. Price 2-8-0.

This small treatise upon the law relating to fatal accidents evokes our appreciation, even at the outset, for the author's selection of such an untraversed, though quite an important, piece of legislation on the Statute Book. Had the law remained in the form in which it was before the Act of 1855 was brought into force, no person's relatives, surviving him after his death due to the fatal accident arising from any of the causes mentioned in section I of the Act, could maintain an action against the persons responsible for the fatal injuries. But the Act of 1855 brought about a salutary change in the existing law in that an exception to the rule 'actio personalis moritur cum persona' made it easy to the executor and administrator of a deceased person to sue the person who was responsible for the fatal accident. The later amendments of 1871 and 1914 to the Act improved the scope of the Act and met the need as then was felt for fresh legislation.

The Act itself is a very brief one of about four sections and the author deserves the thanks of the legal profession for having made a good research of the Case-law upon the subject, both English and Indian, and bringing it up to date.

This commentary is a very necessary, though a long neglected, attempt, and is rendered more so owing to the number of fatal accidents that has been on the increase with the growing volume of road traffic in our cities. The discussion of the amount of damages recoverable under particular circumstances is what makes this little volume of 55 pages compel the immediate notice of the legal profession.

A CRITICAL NOTE ON JANAK DULARI V. SRI GOPAL, I.L.R. 1939 ALL. 912.

The validity of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 (Act XVIII of 1937) was affirmed by the Allahabad High Court in *Janak Dulari v. Sri Gopal*¹. In that case a widow claimed that she was entitled to certain properties of which her husband had died possessed, either as his heir or by virtue of the provisions of Act XVIII of 1937 if it transpired that he had died undivided. The main defences were that the family was joint and that Act XVIII of 1937 was not validly passed.

A noteworthy fact concerning the Act is that though as a Bill it had been passed by both the Houses of the Indian Legislature while the Government of India Act, 1915, as amended in 1919 was in operation, yet the Governor-General's assent to the measure was given only on the 14th of April 1937, after the coming into force of the Government of India Act, 1935, excepting for Part II thereof.

The Government of India Act, 1935, repealed practically in its entirety the earlier Government of India Act². The effect of the repeal was to bring about a resumption into the hands of the Crown of all rights, authority, and jurisdiction in whomsoever they had been vested at that time and their redistribution in the manner prescribed by the repealing Act³. As observed by Lord Tenterden, C.J., in *Stratton v. Ellison*⁴,

"it has long been established, that, when an Act of Parliament is repealed, it must be considered (except as to transactions past and closed) as if it had never existed."

Consequently all appointments made, institutions created and laws framed under the earlier Government of India Act would cease to have effect unless saved by express provisions in the repealing Act. S. 321 (2) provides that the repeal shall not affect any appointment made under the repealed Act to any office and any such appointment shall have effect as if it was an appointment to the corresponding office under the repealing Act. It was by virtue of this provision, that the validity of the election to the office of Speaker of the Bengal Legislative Assembly, which was challenged on the ground that the Governor of Bengal who had directed such election and subsequently accorded his assent to the choice made had not been validly re-appointed as Governor of the Province after the commencement of Part III of the Act of 1935 in the manner provided by that Act, was affirmed in *Tulsi Charan Goswami v. Azizul Haq*¹. Similarly S. 223 saves the jurisdiction of the High Courts as well as the powers of the judges thereof in relation to the administration of justice including their rule making powers, and the section was held to preserve all the powers which the High Courts in fact had prior to the Act of 1935². Likewise, S. 276 provides for the continuance in force of the rules relating to the services under the Crown framed under the repealed Act until other provision is made under the new Act, as if they were rules framed under the latter Act³. The scheme of the Act is clear, namely, that wherever existing appointments or institutions or rules are intended to be continued express savings are to be provided prescribing that they all are to be regarded as having been done under the appropriate provisions of the Act of 1935.

It is a general principle that when a parent Act is repealed, all the laws passed under that Act also stand repealed unless there is an express saving provision in the repealing enactment⁴. S. 292 of the Government of India Act, 1935, provides for the continuance of all the laws in force in British India prior to the commencement of Part III of the Act, i.e., before the 1st April 1937⁵, though the validity of such laws is not in any way guaranteed⁶. Laws made before the commencement of Part III but intended to take effect only after that date were to have validity for twelve months from that date despite the repeal of the 1919 Act and notwithstanding S. 292 of the Act of 1935.¹ This provision was in effect superseded by S. 1 of the India and Burma (Existing Laws) Act, 1937, which laid down that for the purposes of S. 292 a law passed or made before the commencement of Part III of the Act of 1935 shall be declared to be a law in force immediately before that date, notwithstanding that it, or parts of it, may not then be in operation, either at all or in particular areas.

The Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937 (Act XVIII of 1937) was certainly not a law in force prior to the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935. Being an Act of which the commencement was not specifically enacted it became law only from the date when the Governor-General signified his assent, i.e., from 14th April 1937². Further it is the assent of the Governor-General that gives a Bill "the complement and perfection of a law"; and thus the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act had no place in the Statute Book of the country till after the commencement of Part III of the Government of India Act, 1935. Neither S. 292 of the Act of 1935 nor S. 1 of the India and Burma (Existing Laws) Act, 1937, can therefore apply. Nor can the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act be regarded as a law passed subsequent to 1st April 1937, for the Bill had emerged from both Houses of the Legislature prior to that date. When the Government of India Act, 1919, was repealed the Indian Legislature functioning under that Act would stand dissolved ipso facto there being no express provision in the Act of 1935 continuing its existence in its identical form. With such dissolution of the Legislature all Bills pending the assent of the Governor-General would automatically lapse³. Since the assent of the Governor-General to the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act was not accorded prior to the 1st of April 1937 it looks as if there was in law no Bill to which such assent could be given on a later date. The positive provision in S. 30 (5) of the Act of 1935 that it is only a Bill pending in the Federal Assembly or having been passed by the House is pending in the Council of State that will lapse on a dissolution of the Assembly no doubt constitutes a departure from the English practice but can be of no avail in the present case for it is the old practice that will operate till Part II of the Act of 1935 is brought into force. Rule 36-C of the Indian Legislative Rules made under S. 67 read with S. 129-A of the earlier Act, provides that on the dissolution of either Chamber all Bills which have not been passed by the Indian Legislature shall lapse. The expression "Indian Legislature" is explained in S. 63 as consisting of the Governor-General and the two Chambers. It is also stated that ordinarily a Bill is not to be deemed to have been passed by the Indian Legislature unless it has been agreed to by both the Chambers. This cannot however mean that a Bill so agreed to will be a Bill passed by the Indian Legislature, for, the Governor-General is a part of the Legislature and under S. 67 (4) he can remit the Bill for reconsideration or may altogether refuse to assent. So long as assent has not been given a Bill will not be one passed by the Legislature and as such will not be saved from lapse by Rule 36-C, on dissolution of either House. It is true that by virtue of the provisions of Ss. 316 and 317 of that Act the former Indian Legislature is to exercise the functions of the Federal Legislature during the transitory period. This however cannot imply that the Indian Legislature functioning under Part XIII of the Act of 1935 is the same juristic body as that which functioned under the Act of 1919. On the commencement of Part III of the Act of 1935 the members of the Council of State and the Legislative Assembly who had been elected or nominated to represent Burma or Burma constituencies dropped out.¹ Again, the Indian Legislature after that date can exercise its powers freely only as regards the items constituting the Federal List and in a restricted degree over the subjects specified in the Concurrent List and not at all in the case of the items forming the Provincial List, whereas formerly its powers were far wider in range and operation. Do not these facts suggest that on the coming into operation of the Government of India Act, 1935, there has been a notional dissolution in any event in the first instance of the Indian Legislature that functioned under the Act of 1919 and a subsequent resurrection of it with reduced powers and altered composition by virtue of Part XIII of the Act of 1935? If there was then a dissolution, even if it be only notionally, will not the Bills pending the assent of the Governor-General at that time lapse? Nor is there any provision in Part XIII of the Act of 1935 empowering the Governor-General to assent to Bills of that type. No doubt S. 68 of the repealed Act empowering the Governor-General to assent to a Bill passed by both chambers of the legislature is kept in force during the transitory period; but this can govern only in the case of a Bill passed by the Chambers after 1st April, 1937, i.e., at a time when the Houses functioned with reduced strength and powers. There is nothing in the Act of 1935, to suggest that it ever contemplated or provided for assent being given to a measure of the type of the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Bill. In the present decision the Allahabad High Court has cryptically stated:

1. S. 8 of the Government of India (Commencement and Transitory Provisions) Order, 1936.

"It appears to us that the provisions made in S. 917 and Sch. IX are intended to continue the validity of the functions of the Indian Legislature."

Evidently their Lordships are of the opinion that there is no break in the continuity of the Legislature despite the repeal of the Act of 1919. It is one thing to make provision for the Indian Legislature assuming the functions of the Federal Legislature but it will be an altogether different thing to read those provisions as maintaining intact the Indian Legislature and preserving its juristic identity and continuity despite the repeal of the Act which had given birth to that Legislature. In the circumstances therefore a fuller consideration of the question is certainly to be desired.

MADRAS PAWNBROKERS BILL

The Madras Pawnbrokers Bill has met with considerable opposition from pawnbrokers in the City and in the Mofussil. While it must be admitted that the Bill requires modification in several respects the measure itself is a very desirable piece of legislation. The Bill is largely modelled on the corresponding English Act 35 and 36 Vict., c. 93 and its language is clear and concise. It is significant that the protest against the measure has practically been directed to the points on which the framers of the Bill have departed from the English Act.

LICENCES.—Thus in respect of the grant of licences the power is vested in England with the Magistrates or with the Justices of the Petty Sessional Division, while under the Madras Bill the power is vested with the Police Officers specified in S. 4 (1). The combination of the licensing and prosecuting powers in the Police is open to serious objection. The issue of a licence is no doubt made obligatory except in the two circumstances mentioned in S. 4 (2); but even then, it should not lie within the power of the Police to decide if the applicant has adduced 'satisfactory evidence of good character.' It would be well if the licensing authority were vested in Magistrates, and it is further necessary that there should be a right of appeal to a higher authority when the licence is refused.

ARREST BY POLICE.—The other provision which should be jettisoned from the Bill is S. 18, which provides that "any Police Officer may arrest without a warrant any person committing in his view an offence." Neither grounds of public policy nor the ends of justice would seem to require this extraordinary extension of the power of the Police to arrest without warrant, and our experience of the exercise of such powers even in cases now allowed by the law does not encourage any extension thereof. If the offence disclosed is a major offence such as theft, forgery or breach of trust, the general Penal Law can be availed of; and in respect of the other offences committed under the Act there is no need for undue severity in the matter of cognisance. The criticism that the section as it stands vests an unduly large power of surveillance in the Police is largely justified.

PAWN TICKET.—The provisions of the Bill as to the issue of a pawn ticket, and the legal incidents of the ticket have been taken word for word from the English Act and are in the main salutary; but it is doubtful if the average pawner in this country can be trusted to appreciate the value of the document in the same manner as in England where conditions of literacy and business are quite different. The provision in S. 8 (2) that the pawnbroker shall not be bound to deliver back a pledge unless the pawn ticket is delivered may work hardship in the majority of cases where the ticket is lost or mislaid, and any amount of conflict might arise between the possible holder of the ticket and the person making a declaration of "pawn ticket lost." And cases again may easily be imagined where the ticket given by the pawnee with his right hand is taken back by his left hand. The better arrangement would seem to be to have the pawn tickets issued in duplicate, and allow the duplicate copy containing the signature of the pawner to remain with the pawnee. And the pawner might be enabled to redeem the pledge after acknowledging the same in the duplicate so left. It is worth remembering that in England in the case of special contracts of pawn the pawn ticket is so made in duplicate.

PUNISHMENTS.—With reference to the punishments prescribed, S. 14 makes certain acts of the pawnbroker punishable, while S. 15 makes certain acts of the pawner punishable. They correspond word for word to Ss. 32 and 34 of the English Act; but while the English Act awards a sentence of fine only in such cases, the Madras Bill renders the offences punishable with imprisonment or fine. The proposed legislation being protective in its nature it would be better to adopt the standard of punishment prescribed by the English Act and abolish the sentence of imprisonment. And the provision in S. 15 as to the pawnbroker's right to detain persons suspected of an offence seems to provide a needless rigour in the law. It is well known that while the English Law contemplates arrest and detention by a private person under certain circumstances, the Indian Law does not recognise such a right. It is somewhat extraordinary that the right of seizure and detention of an offender should be conferred by this Bill on the private citizen. A right to detain the stolen article and to complain to the Police should be quite sufficient in most cases. Otherwise, the liberty of the subject is in danger of jeopardy at the hands of an over-zealous or unscrupulous pawnbroker.

INTEREST AND ACCOUNT.—The provision in the Bill for a maximum interest rate of 6½ per cent. per annum has been criticised by pawnbrokers as too low a rate; the rate, however, is not unduly low in view of the facts that the loans in such cases are secured loans, and the Contract Act provides easy means for realisation of the debt ; and further, the interest rate in general would seem to be looking down in India. The provision that the accounts should be kept in English or in the language of the locality as may be prescribed has evoked protest from North Indian pawnbrokers ; the account book while undoubtedly a weapon of offence for the pawnbroker is also looked upon under the Bill as a shield in favour of the pawner, and the above provision would seem to be justified.

Subject to the criticisms above referred to, the Bill under review is a beneficent piece of legislation, and the fact that it is sponsored at a time when a popular Government is not at the helm of affairs is no ground for viewing it with any disfavour.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

A Jocular Predecessor.—While Mr. Justice Darling was perhaps the most prolific in the way of enlivening the progress of a case by a series of bons mots, there were those on the judgment seat before his day, who, if not quite so prodigal in the scattering of witty sayings in the course of a case, could yet enliven them with a humorous remark. Those whose memories go back to the days when Baron Pollock was still on the Bench—he was the last survivor of those bearing the judicial title of Baron—will recall him wearing the coif, the distinctive mark of the old serjeants, and every now and again making a little joke, which was all the more effective by reason of the absence of any jocular features on the Baron's countenance. Not indeed that he ever sought to court the name of a wag. But at least on one occasion he made a very happy remark which tickled those who were within earshot, if it did not altogether please them at whom it was directed. On the occasion in question the Baron was trying a case which turned on what constituted "necessaries" for a minor. On one side there was a somewhat decrepit and elderly Q.C. whose marriage to the mature daughter of a patrician house had occasioned a good deal of ironic banter from his learned friends. The opposing side was captained by a silk who, although younger than his opponent, had decidedly the advantage over him in the matter of olive branches. The question in dispute in the case was whether a piano constituted a "necessary," the childless old Benedict urging that it was, while his opponent, the paterfamilias, strenuously argued that it was not. At last the former began to allude somewhat pompously to his married experience, being, it was said, rather fond of doing so by reason of the augustness of the alliance. "As a married man," he said, "I can speak with some authority on these matters, and I have always understood that a piano was a "necessary" for one in the position with the minor in this case occupies." This oration was rudely broken in upon by his opponent, who remarked that "my learned friend boasts of his married experiences, but I must remind him that as a matter of fact he only entered upon the connubial state comparatively recently, whereas I have not only been married nearly 20 years, but am the father of a large family, while in that respect, so far as I am aware, the union to which my learned friend refers with so much complacency has not proved equally fortunate." This onslaught naturally provoked the opponent almost to madness, and he jumped up and began to protest as vigorously as his wrath would allow him, for the titter in court was becoming somewhat unpleasant at this stage. Baron Pollock intervened and threw oil upon the troubled waters by quietly remarking: "Gentlemen, I think we had better confine ourselves to the issue in this case." Could anything have been neater and so singularly apropos?—L.T., 1940, p. 288.

Limitation on Right of Appeal.—The suggestion that litigants should be limited in their right of appeal is one which has often been advanced by reformers, and is again learnedly discussed in a recent work published by the Cambridge University Press under the title "The Machinery of Justice," from the pen of Mr. R. M. Jackson. According to the author, one appeal and one only should be accorded even to the most pugnacious of litigants who may desire to test the accuracy of the decision of which he complains. In recent years, it is true, there has been a slight diminution in the number of appeals competent in ordinary civil cases by the elimination, now a good many years ago, of the Divisional Court, but there still remain the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords. To the latter tribunal the would-be appellant must obtain the leave of the Court of Appeal or that of the House itself, but it has been noticeable that when leave has been refused by the Court of Appeal the House has in a number of cases granted the necessary permission to bring on the appeal. Somehow in the old days our forefathers contrived to get on without so many appellate tribunals, and in some of the Courts the difficulties that arose at times were surmounted in singular fashion. Thus, in the old Court of Exchequer which was manned by a Chief Baron and three puisnes an equal division of opinion sometimes occurred and when that happened the Chancellor of the Exchequer was called in to give the casting vote. We read that in one case in 1735—Naish v. East India Company—the services of Sir Robert Walpole, the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, were requisitioned, and after a rehearing lasting three days he gave the casting vote in what was regarded as a matter of great doubt and difficulty. Nowadays we see the Chancellor of the Exchequer but once a year in the courts, his functions there being limited to the settling of the list of sheriffs for the ensuing year.—S.J., 1940, p. 309.

INFLUENCE OF ENGLISH LAW IN INDIA.*

At all times in the history of the world the influence of the civilisation and culture of one community or race over those of another is a more or less continuous phenomenon. The influence arises from such opportunities of contact as trade, geographical situation or colonisation. It results in the benefits or achievements of one civilisation being imparted to another and thus helps the progress of human civilisation as a whole. The influence of empire in the sense of political domination of one people over another is rarer and less normal but likely to be more powerful and enduring than the sources of influence just mentioned. Such influence has an unfavourable side as it is attended with injury, great or small according to circumstances, to the life and character of the subject people but that it may also have a beneficial character has a striking illustration in the history of the Roman Empire. This Empire gave the people under its sway the benefits of peace and security for about five centuries when it broke up as a result of the barbarian invasions in the fifth century A.D. When it fell, it left two great and priceless legacies for the life and civilisation of Western Europe, viz., its religion and its law. After the conversion of Emperor Constantine, Christianity spread rapidly and replaced paganism in the Empire. When the Empire fell the Roman church retained and in course of time extended its authority and influence. It was ultimately able by effecting an alliance with the temporal rulers to organise a Christian Commonwealth in Western Europe known as the Holy Roman Empire. It became thereby a great unifying force and preserved Europe from the forces of violence and disruption during the Middle Ages. The other great link of unity in medieval Europe was Roman law. It was received as the civil law of the countries of the Holy Roman Empire and sustained social order and the authority of the state for several centuries. While the Roman church declined in its power after the Protestant Reformation, the Roman law outlived it and remained as the law of those countries until modern times. Through these countries Roman law became the law of others outside Europe like Ceylon, Dutch East Indies, South Africa and parts of North and South America. By its great merits as a scientific jurisprudence, rich in its rules and applicable to widely differing conditions of time and place, it has deeply influenced the legal system and codes in force in the modern world.

The influence of the British Indian Empire on its people has been considerable and continues through several agencies such as law, religion, language and administration. Any fair or comprehensive view of this influence and its credit and debit sides is possible only at some future time when the period of conflicts is over and it can be known how far such influence has enabled the Indian people to attain a higher political stature and better conditions of life than they have at present. At the present day the whole subject is involved in acute controversy which is outside the range of this paper. But it is possible and indeed necessary sometimes to evaluate particular sources of influence for guiding our attitude to questions of practical importance in the present or immediate future. This is especially true in the case of the English law and legal system in force in our country because with the passing of provincial administration in the spheres of law and justice into Indian control questions of replacing or refashioning the whole or part of the existing system have begun to attract attention. With Indian control over these spheres becoming more complete in the provinces and in the central government in the near future such questions may become live issues at any moment. We have occasionally heard views expressed in recent times in favour of a wholesale abandonment of the present legal and judicial system and a reversion to a system of village tribunals which is believed to have functioned efficiently at an older time. I have therefore ventured to examine some of the main features of the English legal system in force in our country and the place which it occupies in Indian life and polity at the present day.

The characteristic features of the English legal system may be stated to be threefold; its judicial system, its laws and last, the doctrine of "Rule of Law" which enforces equality before the law even as between the subject and the state and its officers.

The judicial system of England consists of two parts, the judiciary and the legal profession. The judiciary is separate from and independent of the executive and is recruited entirely from the ranks of the legal profession. It is assisted by juries in the trial of civil and criminal causes. These circumstances as well as the terms and mode of judicial appointments have enabled the English courts to build up a reputation for a high degree of efficiency and integrity and to be regarded as the champions of popular rights and liberties. The decisions of courts conform to statute law or precedent and are subject to effective control and supervision by a Central Court at Westminster. By reason of its training, privileges and emoluments the legal profession plays a great part in the work of the courts and the presentation of opposite viewpoints by trained lawyers enables the courts to decide cases in accordance with settled rules and precedents and not arbitrarily. These features of the judicial organisation are designed to secure uniformity and certainty in the justice of the courts and prevent them from becoming instruments of oppression. The main features of this system have been introduced into India with important modifications required by local conditions, such as restriction of the system of jury trials to certain classes of criminal cases or the mode of recruitment of the judiciary. The importance of establishing central courts for effective control of subordinate courts in a large country like ours can hardly be exaggerated. The absence of such control was a grave defect in pre-British justice. The East India Company made various experiments with dual sets of courts but finally the High Courts in the provinces were invested with complete powers of supervision and control over the subordinate courts in those areas and their decisions are liable to further control and supervision by the Privy Council in England and now also by the Federal Court at Delhi.

The second feature of the English legal system is its laws. These laws are the result of a slow and orderly evolution in response to the needs of a people advancing in civilisation and prosperity. This circumstance has imparted to the English law a richness and comprehensiveness which have made its importation valuable in the changing social and economic conditions of our country. The establishment of original and appellate courts by the East India Company in the large areas which it began to acquire in the second half of the 18th century was followed by the promulgation of laws known as 'Regulations'. Lord Cornwallis played a great part in organising our judicial system and two of his contributions to it are his collection of those regulations and his institution of a legal profession by licensing vakils to plead before the courts and providing them with legal training. These regulations and the great codes of substantive law and procedure which took their place in the 19th century substantially reproduce the principles of English law and govern the decisions of our Courts except in the regions of Hindu and Muslim family law and customary tenures. We must remember that though we had developed codes of laws in certain spheres of law like family law and succession there were large gaps in our indigenous jurisprudence requiring to be filled up by English law such as the law of contract, evidence, easements, administration of estates of deceased persons. What is perhaps more important is that the promulgation of uniform codes of laws throughout this vast country and their enforcement by a judicial system organised in the manner described already were features in respect of which the indigenous legal systems were unfortunately defective and should have resulted in a great improvement in the quality of justice that was available to our people when those systems were in force. I believe that it is not too much to claim for the English legal system that its introduction in India is perhaps the greatest single factor in producing conditions of civil order in which the large mass of our people could live their lives in peace and contentment and without fear of oppression and injury. With the elements of a civilised life thus secured our people have been enabled to entertain higher ambitions of securing unity and independence and raising their political and economic condition to the level prevailing among the foremost nations of the world.

The third feature of the English law is the rule of law and its application in India has produced results of a far-reaching character. The assumptions underlying that rule in England are the sovereignty of a democratic Parliament and the equality of all people rich and poor, official and non-official, before the law. By the application of the rule in India even the humblest ryot or citizen is able to pursue his remedy against the Government and high executive officials and challenge the validity of their acts, and even the competence of legislation. This was certainly a new experience in the life of the Indian people accustomed to reconcile themselves to official or royal disfavour and could not have failed to produce in them a sense of self-respect and independence as well as a consciousness of their power and position in a democratic state.

In speaking of such results of the introduction of the English law and legal system in India I do not ignore the evils, often of a grave character, in their working in India. We are only too familiar with the abuses to which our courts and their processes have been liable, such as perjury and subornation of evidence, vexatious litigation resulting in the ruin of families and often of whole villages. But serious as these evils are, we must recognise that the organisation of a judicial and legal system in the manner described above should have relieved our people from far greater dangers of injustice and oppression. Besides it will appear on careful examination that these evils cannot be ascribed to any of the basic principles of this system which are indeed designed to prevent them. On the other hand they are due rather to failure to make suitable changes and adaptations in particular rules of substantive law or procedure. For instance the compulsory registration of wills, adoptions, authorities to adopt and marriages would avoid so many disputes that often take up the time of our courts. The evil of litigation due to the uncertainty of law is remediable by legislation and codification. The machinery for reform under the English legal system is twofold, first, the power of courts to meet new situations by the mode of interpretation and extension of old rules and precedents; second, parliamentary legislation. In a country like England governed by a democratic parliament the danger of a break-down in the legal system or of grave public suffering due to bad laws must be far less than in any autocratic state. Though the Indian legislatures have not obtained sovereign powers they have had for a long time past freedom to make necessary reforms in law and procedure and have often done so. It must also be remembered that there has been far more wasteful litigation due to uncertainty in the Hindu law than that attributable to defects in the rules of English law applied in this country. The great evils of excessive cost and delay of litigation are also remediable by administrative or legislative action.

There are other evils in the working of our legal system, which are not easily remediable. They arise from the disorganised conditions of the social and economic life of our people. In mediæval England perjury and subornation of evidence, intimidation and bribery of witnesses and juries were serious menaces to the judicial administration but they began to disappear in an era of commercial and industrial expansion and prosperity. In India we have not entirely emerged from such conditions. Disputes about possession of immovable property and family quarrels abound in our Courts and give great opportunities for perjury and fabrication of evidence. The prevalence of such abuses in the criminal courts leading often to perversion of justice and oppression is also notorious. These evils have, however, their roots in conditions external to the legal system though they cannot fail to infect and impair parts of the system itself. Cases like the Bhowal Sanyasin's recently decided by the Calcutta High Court, though not always so titanic in dimensions abound in our Courts and call for a decision on the truth of a will, a marriage, an adoption, the paternity or identity of a person or the possession of property. In England there were cases like the Tichborne case but they are now rare in that country and out of tune with the prevailing temper of the people of that country or any other civilised country and their notions as to the true functions of their law courts.

It is therefore difficult to accept the suggestion that the remedy for such evils is the abandonment of the whole system with its paraphernalia of judges, lawyers and precedents and a reversion to an older system of justice of which Village Panchayats are said to be a principal feature. Even assuming that the people of an older age were satisfied with these tribunals and with the quality and effectiveness of their justice it is too large an assumption that the people now would be content to submit their disputes to such tribunals rendering merely arbitrary or discretionary justice and not controlled by rules or precedents or by any appellate or revisional courts. It seems to me that these tribunals will neither command public confidence nor deserve it. If such control is essential and is introduced it is difficult to see in what essential respects this system would differ from the present. I do not deny that with suitable checks and control a large proportion of petty disputes may be relegated to rural tribunals. This would, however, cover only a small fraction of the litigation that is inevitable in a large country with a growing population and expanding commerce and industry. The abandonment of a legal system and of laws which have been slowly evolved to suit the needs of a people advancing in their trade and industry cannot therefore be a wise suggestion.

There is no doubt, however, that there is real dissatisfaction with some features of the present system. As I have already said the remedy for some of its evils is in part to make necessary changes and adaptations in the judicial machinery or in substantive law and procedure. For the rest we must await a new order of amelioration in all aspects of our life in this country.

In view of the assertion often made about the superiority of pre-British laws and systems of justice in India to those now prevailing, I think it may be useful to set out the principal features of those laws and systems and compare them with the law of England in the 18th century when it was introduced in India. The comparison will be instructive and will show that English law and justice had attained a greater degree of development and were more suited to the needs of a progressive society than the indigenous systems of law then in force.

When we speak of pre-British justice we have to distinguish between the period immediately preceding British rule in the 18th century and an earlier age which represented the heyday of Hindu and Muslim rule. The former was a period of anarchy and confusion which followed on the decline and disintegration of the Moghul Empire. English law and procedure should have come as a great boon to the people in the areas in which that law was introduced. The following extracts from the Fifth Report and other well-known authorities give us an idea of the conditions in Bengal at that time:

"The subjects of the Moghul Empire in that province derived little protection or security from any of these courts of adawlat; and in general, though forms of judicature were established and preserved, the despotic principles of the government rendered them the instrument of power rather than of justice, not only unavailing to protect the people, but often the means of the most grievous oppressions under the cloak of their judicial character." (From the Report of the Committee of Secrecy in 1778.)

"The Nawab Nizam was the head of the system of criminal courts and under him there were a series of criminal courts held by his deputies in Moorahidabad, his capital in Bengal. In the country criminal justice was administered by the Zamindars. It was a system under which extortion and oppression were rampant. The Nizams exacted what they could from the Zamindars whom they left at liberty to plunder all below" (Parli. Papers, 1812, vii, 5; Holdsworth, History of English Law, Vol. XI, p. 174 from East India Company's Reports.)

"The Zamindars had also a police power and were bound by the terms of their tenants to arrest criminals and if they failed to do so were answerable to the injured person. But this system was wholly ineffective because it was notorious that the Zamindars connived at or actually committed the crimes they were supposed to suppress."

"The company inherited from the Moghul Government every evil that could afflict a political system; a disorganised and corrupt judicature and incompetent agents. Dacoity was rampant and there was no ordinary security in the land. The new courts although by no means perfect brought great relief to the ryots and talukdars, and within a short time began to foster confidence in the company's administration." (Ramsbotham, Camb. History of Empire, IV, 416).

"For the first time in living memory the province was placed under a government strong enough to prevent others from robbing and not inclined to play the robber itself;" Macaulay, Essay on Warren Hastings.

When we turn to an anterior period of time when Hindu and Muslim laws flourished, we find that they had developed a mature jurisprudence in certain spheres of substantive law like the laws of property, succession, marriage and family law. It is, however, not so clear that they paid the same attention to remedial law and procedure that the English law did from the 13th and 14th centuries. It must not be forgotten that in times of imperfect social order the law of remedies is far more important for the aggrieved party than codes of substantive law declaring rights and duties, just as in the lawless conditions which prevail in international relations it is useless to have a declaration of rights of world citizenship without effective remedies to enforce them. So we find that the practical sense of the English people made them evolve a judicial system and procedure which would confer on the individual subject effective protection against wrongdoing and their judges and lawyers concentrated their attention for several centuries on perfecting the processes of their Courts and their writs and forms of actions.

There are some learned writers in India who have endeavoured to make out that Hindu and Muslim courts had also perfected their laws of procedure which indeed according to them were comparable in many parts to such modern codes as the Civil Procedure Code, and the Evidence and Limitation Acts. Mr. Gururaja Rao's "Ancient Hindu Judicature" (1920) and Mr. Wahed Husain's "Administration of Justice in Mughal India" (1934) seek to establish this theory and describe in detail the judicial procedure and adjective law of Hindu and Muslim Courts. While such information is valuable, it is, however, far more important to know how and in what areas of this vast country these theoretically perfect systems of law and procedure were administered and whether they were improved and altered to suit new needs and conditions in the course of centuries. It is far more easy to enact laws than to administer them and in the widely varying conditions of different parts of India and at different times and periods these systems of law and procedure could not have had a uniform application and indeed if applied at all should have demanded constant alteration and adjustment. On these important matters authentic information is lacking in India while in England records of forms of actions, pleas and decisions of courts are available from nearly the 12th century and have formed the subject of research and study. This absence of information is by itself a sinister feature of our legal history. It indicates that during the long centuries the people had not obtained the benefits of a legal or judicial system which aimed at impartial or uniform application of laws and customs. There were able and just Emperors as well as able and just officials or judges but even in the best of times their justice was arbitrary though benevolent. The position of people living under such a system or want of it could hardly have been satisfactory on account of the chances of oppression and injustice to which they should have been liable. That this was the position is clear also from other well-known facts. The absence of a strong central Government was a defect common to Hindu and Muslim rule which should have led to laxity in control over the judicial administration especially in outlying parts of the empire. The indicia of a judicial system which aims at uniformity and certainty in its justice are records of judicial proceedings and trained judges and lawyers who can interpret laws and precedents. Such indicia had appeared in England at a very early time but were absent in India. The existence in England of a legal profession from which judges were recruited tended to create a strong body of professional opinion which profoundly influenced the course of justice and evolution of law in England. There were grave defects in the substantive law and procedure of England especially in its criminal law, which were due to historical and other causes and persisted till a late age, but a strong body of professional opinion and the ingenuity of lawyers and judges helped to relieve the law from the evil operation of such defects and to make it respond to new situations. On the other hand in India the law continued to be more or less in a primitive condition and it fell to the East India Company to remove serious defects in it. For instance the Muslim criminal law had three kinds of punishments, first, retaliation including the price of blood; second, prescribed penalties and third, discretionary correction and punishment. The Fifth Report of 1798 states that the nature of the first punishment was alone sufficient to require the interference of the Company's Government with the 'futwas' or sentences of the Nazim. The Company's Government also abolished certain distinctions made by Abu Hanifa and directed that in determining punishment for murder the intention of the party rather than the mode or instrument used should be considered. The Company's courts also commuted sentences of mutilation to imprisonment and hard labour. They supplied the deficiencies of the Mahomedan law in awarding adequate punishment for certain crimes which were rampant, e.g., dacoity, gang robbery, banditry, perjury, forgery, subornation of evidence, female infanticide which was prevalent among Hindus. They abolished the custom then prevalent of levying as commission a fourth part of the value decreed on the decision of suits and all other fees and arbitrary fines. It must also be mentioned that both before the royal courts and before village or communal panchayats primitive modes of trial by oath and ordeal prevailed. The above description of the state of Mughal justice is supported by the works of such well-known authorities as Prof. Jadunath Sarkar and Messrs. Edwards and Garrett of the Punjab Service. Whatever was the state of justice in the chief cities it should have been chaotic in the outlying provinces over which the central government's control was imperfect. In these extensive areas aggrieved parties either resorted to self-redress by retaliation or otherwise or sought the not always reliable or effective verdicts of the local Zamindar, official or panchayat.

The decision of civil and criminal disputes by panchayats was a well-known and ancient feature of Indian life and history but it is necessary to bear in mind that there is no evidence that the panchayat was at any time part of a legal or judicial system in which its decisions were in practice controlled by any revising authority. On the other hand its prevalence during the centuries preceding British rule was the result of weak central government which left local government to villages and townships and did not interfere with their management of their affairs so long as they paid their quota of revenue. Therefore political troubles or change of governments and rulers did not prevent this kind of local government from continuing in its own way. As a matter of fact in times of disorder and disturbance the people clung to their village or caste organisation as the last remnant of civil government available to them and had their legal and social problems satisfied by that agency. The judicial panchayat had in it the elements of the jury system and may have often been successful in dispensing simple and ready justice such as was appreciated in a former age. But in the absence of effective control it was liable to gross abuse, corruption and oppression. This appears to be borne out by the enquiry made by Mountstuart Elphinstone about the working of panchayats in the Mahratta country and is discussed in a book entitled "Panchayats under the Peshwas" by H. George Franks who had access to original records in the Record Office at Poona. This author states that under the Mahratta rulers whose military activities left them little time to organise any system of judicial administration rich and powerful men could bribe and intimidate panchayats or assemble a rival panchayat to upset the verdict of another. The learned author's reference to the practice of panchayats to discriminate in the award of punishment gives us a glimpse of the quality of justice then available. It is said that if a poor man killed a rich man he got the penalty of death or mutilation; if a poor man killed his equal, he could buy off this penalty by payment of a fine of Rs. 350; if a rich man killed a poor man he always paid the fine and not the penalty. It is, however, probable that fellow-feeling and the democratic instinct made these tribunals generally fair in their verdicts and they dispensed such justice as the people of the time understood and appreciated. But it is a great mistake to regard the panchayat in the form and conditions in which it prevailed as having ensured an ideal form of justice in the past and therefore worthy of replacing the judicial institutions of the present time. The suggestion that a reversion to a system of village autonomy of which the panchayat was a part is a panacea for many of our difficulties appears therefore to be unsupported by historical facts. It is, however, beyond dispute that with proper supervision and control the panchayat is a useful agency especially in rural areas for deciding many disputes and quarrels which now swell the work of the regular courts of law. It has therefore been given a place in our judicial system by legislation like the Village Courts Act.

We now turn to the system of law and justice in England at the time of its reception in India in the 18th and 19th centuries. It is well-known that English law is not to be found in any great code like the Code Napoleon of France or the codes of other countries in Europe but is the product of a slow evolution during several centuries. It is therefore necessary for understanding its nature, content and influence to advert not merely to the chief events in this evolution but also to some of the more prominent events in the history of the English people and to the forces, political, economic and religious, which determined the character of their laws. Before the Norman conquest the English people had laws of a primitive kind and had not learnt to submit to any State authority in the administration of justice and had not attained any uniform system of law or procedure. Though England was for more than three centuries a province of the Roman Empire and governed by Roman law the Anglo-Saxon invasions of the 5th century A.D. had the result of destroying all traces of the old legal system and replacing it by institutions which in their origin were purely Germanic. In later times English law was deeply influenced by ideas derived from Roman jurisprudence but this was due in part to the administration of the Canon law by the church courts and functionaries and in part to the study of Roman law by judges and lawyers but not to any surviving traces of the original dominion of Rome. From the 5th to the 9th century the country was invaded by different tribes and it was only in the 10th century that it was unified into one kingdom. Even then justice was in the hands of local assemblies like the Hundred and the shire or of landowners who held their own courts. There was yet no King's court or Common law. These local and feudal tribunals were more in the position of arbitrators to whom the submission of the aggrieved party was optional as he had the alternative of self-redress or private vengeance against the wrongdoer. A large part of the Anglo-Saxon laws was concerned with tariffs of compensation even for serious crimes like murder and it was open to the aggrieved to accept money and give up the blood feud or vengeance. The result of the Norman conquest was the introduction of precise and orderly methods into the government of England. By the end of the 12th century largely as a result of Henry II's reforms, judicial administration had been improved and had begun to acquire some modern features. The King's court began to assume importance and to step into the place of the local and feudal courts as well as of the courts of the church, and many serious crimes became pleas of the Crown and heard in that court and not in the local courts where primitive methods of trial by duel and ordeal were in vogue. The institution of trial by jury had become a part of the procedure of the King's court and contributed to its popularity and to its being preferred by suitors to the rival courts. Other attractions of that court were the remedies provided by the issue of appropriate writs for various wrongs, principally for dispossession of land, disputes about which then went before the feudal lord from whom the land was held. A most valuable feature of Anglo-Norman justice was that records of proceedings of the King's courts were kept by its clerks and officials. This practice ultimately paved the way for the authority of precedent in English law. In the beginning of the 13th century the famous Magna Carta of the year 1215 made a memorable declaration of rights and liberties of the subject and became in later times a priceless weapon against autocratic monarchy. Its provisions making the assent of the barons essential for certain acts of the King contained the germs of the idea of Parliamentary sovereignty. In the 13th and 14th centuries the King's Court had become dissociated from the King and split up into the courts of the Common law and the King's Council. Thus the courts of law became distinct from the administration and came to be presided over by professional judges. About the year 1300 we can see the beginnings of an organised legal profession. The Inns of Court had been founded and gradually the tradition was established that the judges of the Royal courts should be drawn from the ranks of the most eminent lawyers. By the Statute of Westminster II (1285) the common law courts extended their powers by inventing new writs to suit the advancing needs of the people. On account of the influence of the church which encouraged the practice of making dying dispositions in its favour, wills of chattels came to be recognized and the rights and duties of executors were declared by the Magna Carta (1215) and the Statute of Westminster (1285). By far the most outstanding event in English legal history in the 13th century was the summoning of a representative Parliament by Simon De Montfort in 1265. In 1295 the King (Edward I) himself summoned a Parliament to help him with money and counsel in his war with France. Since that year Parliaments have been summoned in continuous or all but continuous succession and parliamentary government became later on the principal feature of the constitution of England. The year 1295 was also memorable because Edward I who was noted for many law reforms began the practice of recording the Statutes of the Realm. By the end of the 13th century the foundations of a modern judicial system had been laid and the twofold sources of the law which the courts should administer, viz., precedent and statute, were reaching recognition and becoming matters of record. During the succeeding centuries the legal structure so erected received numerous additions and alterations required by an advancing civilisation and a population growing in numbers and prosperity. In the 14th century the Court of Chancery had begun to recognise Uses and Trusts and exercise a distinctive jurisdiction which in later years enriched English jurisprudence. This century saw the beginning of written pleadings in the common law courts in place of the old oral statement and answer by the opposing counsel and of the Year Books which were the first law reports in England. The Year Books were anonymous compilations of notes of cases in the King's courts and gave way later to the works of particular and nominated reporters and ultimately to reports issued under official authority. By 1700 the supremacy of Parliament and of the common law courts over the executive had been established as a result of the Revolution Settlement and the "Rule of law" had become a valuable and unique feature of the English constitution. By the end of the 18th century the great increase in commerce and territorial possessions and the economic and social changes following on the industrial revolution resulted in the addition of large bodies of law in the sphere of contract, tort and mercantile law and of legislation especially in the domain of public law and administration like the poor laws and the laws of local government. Sir William Holdsworth points out that the expansion of England in the west by the growth of the American colonies which she lost later and the expansion in the east by the acquisition of the Indian Empire had important effects on English law by making it no longer an insular but a world system of law and by helping the formation of a colonial constitutional law relating to such matters as the position and powers of governors of colonies and of colonial legislatures, the Crown's prerogative in the colonies, the law applicable to settled and conquered colonies and so on. The position of Colonial courts and the effect of their judgments raised questions which pertain to a body of law known as Private International Law or Conflict of Laws. The union of England and Scotland by the Act of Union in the 18th century enriched the laws of both the countries. Scotch law had been formed on the Roman model and was free from the technicalities of the English system of pleadings. Scotland had from an early time a system of registration of deeds. Its closer touch with continental legal systems gave it a law of bankruptcy which was superior to that of England. Scotch law never permitted a creditor to arrest his debtor on mesne process as English law did. In Scotland, a prisoner was not refused the aid of counsel; the institution of criminal proceedings was under the supervision of a Public Prosecutor; and the insistence of verbal technicality which was a blot on English Criminal Procedure was unknown. These features of Scotch law influenced English law just as the principles of English mercantile law were imported into Scotch law. In the 18th century great principles were established in the sphere of liberty of the subject, first by the decisions in the cases arising out of the "general warrants" which negatived executive prerogative to arrest persons otherwise than in due course of law and secondly, by the passing of Fox's Libel Act which enabled juries to give general verdicts in cases of libel including political libel or sedition. This Act was valued as a great safeguard for the liberty of the press and freedom of discussion. In spite of these features of its development the English law and procedure of the 18th century had grave defects deplored even by contemporary opinion. This was due to the fact that the pace of law reform was slow but in 1776 Bentham's Fragment on Government had been published and his zeal for law reform and codification bore fruit in the 19th century. In this century there were large additions to substantive law brought about by the great increase in trade and industry such as the law of joint stock companies, patents, trade-marks, employer's liability. The memorable reforms by way of simplifying civil and criminal procedure and unifying different sets of courts in the Supreme Court have been reflected in the Indian Codes of Procedure. The rules of prescription and limitation of claims to real property enacted by the Statutes of 1832 and 1833 were embodied in our law and should have contributed not a little to security of titles and property in India.

The building up of the English legal system was primarily the work of lawyers and judges during several centuries but we must not forget that there have been some imponderable factors which have exercised great influence on English law. The introduction of Christianity in England in the 7th century (664 A.D.) brought with it certain moral ideas and revolutionised English law. Christianity had inherited from Judaism an outlook upon moral questions which was strictly individualistic. The salvation of each separate soul was dependent on the actions of the individual. This was in contrast with early Anglo-Saxon laws which looked not to the individual who did the act but to the group or family of which he formed a part. After the spread of Christianity responsibility shifted from the group to the individual who did the act; and then the intention of the actor became material for judging the nature of the act. The Church also introduced ideas of political organisation and of law and of morality far higher than those possessed by the barbarian tribes. The leading ideas of the Christian Fathers were those of the Roman jurists. The Church inherited some of the ideas of Imperial Rome and its teaching tended to add a new sanctity to the office of the King and thereby to the authority of the state which made for the cause of law and order. The church also introduced the customs of making a will and conveying land by written documents. The lawyers and judges of the 12th and the 13th centuries were ecclesiastics learned in the Canon law which was itself an adaptation of the Roman law to the needs of the Church and their influence on English law was considerable. The writ of 'novel disseisin' invented for dispossession of land had a Roman origin and its modern counterpart in India is the action under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. In this and many other respects English law was influenced by the legal renaissance of the 12th and 13th centuries in the continent of Europe, a renaissance marked by a revival of the study of Roman jurisprudence by mediæval canonists and lawyers. The second factor to be mentioned under this head is also a religious one, viz., the Protestant Reformation in the 16th century. It undermined the authority of the Church and by denying the position of religion as the basis of civil government it tended to favour absolutism and the divine right of Kings but also let in alternative theories like the theory of social contract and tended to undermine the authority of the King also. Among other factors which influenced English law are the political thought of writers like Locke in the 17th century who pleaded for a limited monarchy and Parliamentary supremacy and the ideas of the French Revolution in the 18th century which helped the growth of democracy in England.

Indian law to-day substantially reproduces the rules of English substantive law and procedure developed in the manner set forth above. These rules have been in large part embodied in the great codes which have been enacted since the middle of the last century and for the rest they are to be gathered from English books and precedents. The excepted regions are those of personal law and customary tenures. English law is usually considered to have been introduced into India in 1726 by a charter of George I which established Mayor's courts in Madras, Bombay and Calcutta but this is only for the purpose of deciding that later statutory modifications in England should not be applied in India. The Company's courts which functioned in those cities had already begun to apply English law and procedure to cases before them. The charter of 1668 by which Charles II granted Bombay to the East India Company empowered the Company to establish courts and enact laws for the good government of Bombay and directed that these courts and laws may be as near as may be agreeable to English courts and laws. Accordingly certain laws were framed which made provision for such matters as trial by judges and jury, regular sittings of the court, records of its proceedings, levying of reasonable court-fees fixed at 5 per cent. of the value of the claim, appeals from the courts to the Governor, registration of all sales and transactions relating to lands and houses. The second section of the laws deserves special mention. It provided first, that no person should be dispossessed of houses, goods, lands or other rights or suffer corporal punishment for any cause or crime before trial and conviction by a jury of twelve men except as otherwise provided by those laws or any future law and secondly, that no person should suffer penal or civil imprisonment without a specific warrant for his commitment and any such person might be released without bail if the cause or matter were not prosecuted within ten days after his commitment had been certified to the court. Evidently the authors of these laws intended to reproduce the provisions of the Magna Carta in this regard.

The above resume of the principal features of the laws and legal systems of England and India can leave us in no doubt about their comparative state of development and suitability for people emerging from mediæval to modern conditions of life. The English law and legal system had attained a far greater degree of development and were more suited to the needs of a progressive people than the Indian. We cannot be prevented by any sense of pride or other feeling from admitting this fact. The features noted in the English system and its development ensured an efficient judiciary which was independent of the executive and able to maintain effectively but with due regard to the interests of the state the rights and liberties of the individual.

in a democratic polity. Its substantive law and procedure had grown with the nation and by their richness and flexibility served the needs of a new age of commerce, industry and empire. These qualities were largely due to its unique feature of having grown through precedents. This feature is often regarded as a demerit of the English system but in reality it is otherwise. It can of course become a great source of uncertainty and confusion but such a state of affairs can be mended by legislation. The function of precedent is to restrict to the barest possible minimum the scope of discretionary or arbitrary action on the part of the judge. Indeed the whole merit of the English legal system appears to be that it thereby limits the danger of injustice due to human factors in the working of the judicial system. Similarly in the administrative sphere executive action is largely regulated in modern times by statutes and rules which leave only a minimum scope for individual discretion.

The introduction of the English legal system in India has in the first place filled up large gaps in our private and public law. Our codes of laws had attained remarkable maturity at a very early time but their growth had been unfortunately arrested except in certain spheres like family law with the result that our judicial organisation and public law were notably inadequate to meet the needs of a large population. In the second place English law has made our people more law-abiding and law-minded than they were before. No doubt it has led to litigiousness but litigiousness is better than lawlessness. Thirdly, English law has introduced ideas of rights and duties which are appropriate to a modern social and economic polity and to regulate the relations of the people in various spheres of life and activity. Lastly, the application of principles of English constitutional law like the 'rule of law' has had incalculable results on the life and spirit of the people. The right to sue the government and its officers in the ordinary courts of law for relief against illegal acts of government has undoubtedly infused a spirit of self-respect, independence and respect for law in the ordinary citizen. Perhaps this has been a greater asset for the growth of democratic movements in this country than the love of democracy and liberty resulting from a study of English language and literature which have however reached only a small fraction of the people. Some of the underlying assumptions of the 'Rule of law' are the absolute supremacy of the law as opposed to arbitrary power, the independence of judges from the executive and their freedom from the influence of politics. These principles are of immense value to the citizen and secure his regard for his legislatures and law courts. Sir William Holdsworth observes that the effect of the doctrine in England was to create a law-abiding habit, i.e., the habit of persons dissatisfied with the policy pursued by the state to appeal to the courts for the proper enforcement or interpretation of the law or to Parliament to change the law. He says that in the great controversies of the 17th and 18th centuries in England persons and parties who complained of grievances turned to the courts or to Parliament and did not desire to overturn the existing machinery of the law. We can well understand this as we have had recent experience of controversies that arose over the Agriculturists' Relief Act and the Temple-Entry Act in Madras and the Prohibition Act in Bombay. There is no doubt that the rule of law is a valuable safeguard against minority opinion taking to the paths of political obstruction or revolution. It is also a striking illustration of the emphasis laid by the English law on the rights of the individual and the way it co-ordinates those rights to the needs of the state. The rights and liberties of the individual are the results of the practical application of the higher principle of the dignity and sanctity of the human personality, a principle which runs like a golden thread through the whole texture of the law and constitution of England.

I recognise that a due appreciation of the merits of the English legal system in India is beset with certain difficulties. In the first place there are grave defects in the working of the system in Indian conditions. Even in England there have been in recent years loud complaints about the heavy costs and long delays of litigation but these and other evils assume exaggerated proportions in India. I have alluded to these evils and shown that they do not detract from the value of the basic principles of the legal system because they arise either from lack of adequate action by way of law reform and adaptation of law and procedure to Indian conditions or from causes external to the system itself. Secondly it is difficult for many of us to dissociate the English law and legal system from the conditions of political domination under which they were imposed on this country and all the consequences to the life of the people which such domination involves. The difficulty has been enhanced by the political controversies during the last 2 or 3 decades and accounts for expressions of opinion unfavourable to the whole legal system. But a more detached judgment on our part has now become necessary because as I have said, questions of replacing or fashioning the whole or part of the existing legal system may become live issues in the near future. I venture to say that the great codes of substantive law and procedure which have been slowly perfected during the past 100 years will in large part continue to be the law in a free India. A country can adopt the laws, language and culture of another without accepting the domination of the latter. In the last century many countries in Europe and elsewhere modelled their laws on the Code Napoleon of France. At an earlier time the United States of America adopted English law after achieving political independence. In recent years renascent Turkey adopted the Roman script in place of the Arabic, and European codes like the Swiss civil code in place of the older system of Islamic law. So I maintain that neither prejudice nor sentiment due to historical causes or political controversies will stand in the way of our adopting large parts of the legal and administrative systems perfected in the course of the last two centuries. I recognise however that many parts of the English law especially in the sphere of procedure and judicial organisation may undergo substantial alteration to suit a changed polity. For instance the 'rule of law' which is only a rule of procedure or remedial law is a valuable and vital part of the English law. But there is a growing section of opinion in England and elsewhere that the administrative tribunals in the French system perhaps afforded more speedy and effective and less expensive justice in disputes between the citizen and the state and that they avoided the dangers of undesirable antagonism arising between the judges and the executive by reason of such disputes being relegated to the ordinary law courts under the doctrine of rule of law. With the extension of governmental activity in recent times and new types of legislation conferring powers on various administrative authorities and officers the jurisdiction of law courts to issue writs and injunctions interfering with the exercise of statutory powers may suffer diminution in the future. Again it is not an unlikely contingency in the future that a competitive legal profession whose numbers and emoluments are determined by the economic laws of supply and demand may be considered to be productive of more harm than good and unsuited to the circumstances of our country. In this and other ways the English law and legal system may in course of time be subject to drastic adaptation and alteration. Above all the present war may bring about catastrophic changes in existing forms of social and political organisation and in the principles of law which are an integral part of such organisation. But whatever the future holds for us and others, we cannot underrate the merits of the English law or its services to India.

The Hon'ble Justice Sir S. Varadachariar observed.—The main purpose of Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar's lecture has been to sound a note of caution against the hasty introduction of radical or fundamental changes either in the system of law or in the system of legal administration now in vogue in India. I have been of much the same opinion and as I have heretofore given expression to my views on some occasions, I shall briefly deal with the matter. I recognise that we are at a disadvantage in discussing this topic, because we—both of the bench and of the bar—are likely to be suspected by the outside world as being vitally interested in the maintenance of the present system for our own advantage. I am anxious that the subject should be examined by the outside world on the merits of the arguments advanced without reference to the persons from whom they emanate. It is a danger attaching to most discussions of important sociological questions that they are not always discussed on their true merits and the conclusions are often warped by bias or prejudice. The question which Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar has referred to has in a sense already become a live issue and will continue to be a live issue. Members of the Bar who naturally enjoy more liberty than members of the Bench in dealing with questions of this kind would do well to take steps to create an intelligent public interest in the question rather than merely ask the outside world to accept their own opinions at their face value.

At the present day, those who propose a revision of the existing legal and other institutions of this country are impelled by a strange mixture of ideas. In one sense they are anxious to go forward; in another sense, perhaps unconsciously, they wish to go backward. Slogans founded upon socialistic, communistic, or the most advanced democratic theories—theories of liberty, equality and fraternity, are strongly in evidence in our midst. At the same time some of the advocates of these very theories wish to go back to the quasi-ascetic ideals of an arcadian life. While not criticising either of these view points, one is obliged to take note of the fact that none of us seems to have much of a choice in the matter. We are as it were dragged along the current of influences and forces over which we have little or no control. There are countries which even to-day would prefer to be left to remain at least where they are if they cannot go back to where they were, but they are unable to do so. The very achievements of science which we all admire and of which we all seek to take advantage make that impossible. There is no longer any possibility of isolation. If that is the present position and if the society in a country wishes to have the benefit of modern conditions, it is no good having an ideal partly going backward and partly looking forward. All of us see the necessity for continuity in our history and in our institutions. But it will be difficult, however, to determine whether the continuity should be with the life of the last 150 years or with an earlier period, overlooking these 150 years.

I also wish to emphasise the fact that we are every day necessarily brought into contact with the outside world. We are anxious to do business with other countries and we want people in other countries to do business with us. If that kind of business intercourse is to be fruitful, the people of those countries should have confidence in the system of laws administered here. Unless a system of administration, similar in all essential respects to that obtaining in other civilised countries, obtained here also it would be impossible to have that degree of commercial intercourse as is desired. The conditions that led to the system of capitulations and special tribunals in certain countries should not be allowed to exist in our midst. Again, you cannot forget the complexity of the problems that come up before a court of law at the present day. However much one might appreciate the utility of the procedure before village tribunals of the past, which might have been sufficient to deal with the problems that arose in former times which were comparatively simple, it should be realised that we cannot cope with modern conditions and modern political ideas by reverting to a state of things which existed a thousand years ago. We have also to take note of a tendency inevitable in the course of the advance of civilisation, namely, the tendency to substitute for the system of personal laws, a system of territorial laws. The existence of different personal laws administered in one and the same country is hardly consistent with modern political theories. If a system of territorial law is to replace the system of personal laws it is difficult to conceive of a better collection than those which have been evolved by the courts in India, during the last hundred years, consistently with the conditions in the country. You are aware that in many respects the English law has not been blindly followed here. I understand Mr. Ramaswami Aiyar as only protesting against any blind change in the existing system of law merely on the ground that the adoption of a system of law based on foreign sources is inconsistent with the self-respect of this country. Few of us can be blind to the need for changes in many respects in our judicial administration, either from the point of view of economy or of the speedy disposal of litigation. You should not be against changes or think of a thing as good simply because the particular system or institution has been there for a long time. There is an ancient sloka showing that this was realised even in olden days.

The main consideration for those to whom it may fall to deal with these questions will be to keep in mind the possibility of reconciling any radical departures whether in the system of substantive law now obtaining here or in the system of judicial administration with the political aspirations of those who are compelled to adapt themselves to the modern international conditions. It is on grounds like these that one should like the public to consider this important question.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES. .

KAY v. LOVELL, (1940) 1 Ch. 650.

Solicitor's lien for costs—Extent of charge in partnership suit.

A solicitor in a partnership action is entitled to an order for taxed costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred of and in reference to the action as solicitor for the party and to a charge on the share of his client which is in Court. Order to be in the form in Seton on Judgments and Orders, 7th Edn., Vol. II, p. 1040, Form 6.

KERR v. JOHN MOTTRAM, LTD., (1940) 1 Ch. D. 657.

Companies—Articles of association providing that minutes book should be conclusive evidence of facts stated therein—Other evidence inadmissible to disprove such facts—Cf. Companies Act (1929), S. 117 (8).

In a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of shares to plaintiff by a company, the plaintiff sought to lead evidence to displace the record in the minutes book of the company of what took place. The articles of the company provided that the minutes were to be conclusive evidence. The plaintiff can have an opportunity of establishing, if he could, that the minutes were not a bona fide record of what took place or that they had been falsely and fraudulently written up after the events with a view to setting up a story which was not in accordance with facts. But where the minutes were a correct and bona fide record, they were to be regarded as evidence which is not to be displaced.

PUBLIC TRUSTEE v. PEARLBERG, (1940) 2 K.B. 1.

Sale of land—Contract for sale—Rescission by vendor—If possible, when action for specific performance pending—Right of vendee to return of deposit.

It is well settled that a vendor cannot rescind a contract for sale of land where he has himself brought an action for specific performance which is pending at the date of the alleged rescission, for a claim for specific performance of necessity implies an affirmation of the contract. The vendee is entitled to counterclaim for return of deposit.

R. v. COWELL, (1940) 2 K.B. 49.

Criminal Law—Confession by prisoner alleged to have been obtained by improper means—When prisoner could object to admissibility and himself give evidence.

A confession is prima facie admissible if it was made after proper caution and not as the result of any inducement or threat. It is open to the prisoner to object to the admissibility of such confession on the ground that it was improperly obtained and it is proper in such cases to allow the calling of the prisoner himself as a witness if the justice of the case requires that it should be done.

HILLS v. CO-OPERATIVE WHOLESALE SOCIETY, LTD., (1940) 2 K.B. 74.

Res judicata—Recovery of damages under Employers' Liability Act, 1880, for personal injuries caused by negligence in the course of common employment—Action at common law against employer for same act of negligence—If barred.

There is nothing in the Employers' Liability Act, 1880 which confers on an injured workman any cause of action different from that which he would have had by the law of England but for the doctrine of common employment. Where plaintiff has recovered damages under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, in respect of the matters complained of in the action he is debarred from claiming or recovering any sum in respect of these matters under the common law.

VRONDISH v. STEVENS, (1940) 2 K.B. 90.

Insurance—Marine insurance against loss of freight—Loss of freight due to impossibility of repair to complete the voyage, and constructive total loss of freight arising therefrom—Liability of underwriters.

A clause in a policy of marine insurance provided "In the event of total loss and/or constructive and/or compromised total loss of vessel, total loss and/or constructive total loss of freight arising therefrom is not recoverable." Shortly, after starting with the cargo the ship struck a reef of rock and was so severely damaged that she had to be beached. It was alleged that it was impossible to repair the vessel so as to enable her to complete the voyage with the cargo and so the voyage had to be abandoned. Alternatively it was alleged that as the cost of repair would exceed the value of the ship after repair it was abandoned. In a claim on the insurance policy for loss of freight against the underwriters, on a preliminary issue of law.

Held, if the ship was abandoned because, although the ship could be repaired the cost of permanent repairs would have exceeded its repaired value, the loss of freight did not arise from constructive total loss. But if it was not a matter of expense and if the ship could not have been rendered fit to complete the voyage with her cargo, it may fairly be said that the loss of freight within the meaning of the exception clause arose from the constructive total loss of the ship in the sense that there was a physical impossibility of repair.

SAINT LINE, LTD. v. RICHARDSONS, WESTGARTH AND Co., LTD., (1940) 2 K.B. 99.

Contract—Damages for breach—What can be claimed as direct and immediate damages.

The defendants contracted to provide and instal engines in plaintiff's ship. The contract provided that defendants' liability shall not extend to any indirect or consequential damages. On breach of contract,

Held, the plaintiffs were entitled to claim damages for loss of profit, expenses of wages, etc., and fees paid to experts for superintendence. All these heads were not "indirect or consequential".

WELD-BLUNDELL v. SYNOTT, (1940) 2 K.B. 107.

Mortgages—First mortgagee exercising power of sale and paying over a larger balance to second mortgagor—Right to recover excess as money overpaid under mistake of fact.

Plaintiff, a first mortgagee having exercised his power of sale, by mistake presented to the defendant the second mortgagee an account showing a larger balance and paid over the same to him. In an action to recover this excess as money paid under a mistake of fact the defendant pleaded estoppel.

Held, the mistake of fact prima facie entitled the plaintiff to recover. A first mortgagee is not under any duty to inform the second mortgagee of the true state of accounts between himself and the mortgagor and so the plea of estoppel must fail.

HEYWOOD AND BRYETT, LTD. v. HEYWOOD AND SON, (1940) 2 K.B. 145.

Workmen's Compensation Act (1929), S. 6—Claim for indemnity against sub-contractors by the contractors who had paid compensation to sub-contractors' servant who was injured—If could be defeated by showing negligence or breach of statutory duty by the principal contractor which caused the accident.

The Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 6, contains no limitation of the right of the principal to indemnity against his sub-contractor in respect of compensation paid to an injured servant of the sub-contractor. The right is absolute and the claim cannot be resisted by showing negligence or breach of statutory duty on the part of the principal as causing the accident. Willis Workmen's Compensation, 32nd edition, at p. 20, dissented from.

ENGLISH v. WESTERN, (1940) 2 K.B. 156.

Insurance—Motor insurance against third party risks—Exclusion of indemnity against claim by "any member of assured's household"—Sister of insured—If member of household.

A policy of motor insurance provided that the underwriters shall pay all sums which the insured shall become legally liable to pay by way of compensation for death or bodily injury to any person but excluded liability in respect of death or injury to any member of the assured's household carried in the car. In respect of a claim by a sister of the assured who was himself a member of his father's household.

Held [reversing (1939) 4 ALL.E.R. 345, Goddard, L.J., dissenting].—The phrase of exception covers only the narrower class, the members of a household of which the assured is the head and the case is outside the exception and the company is liable to indemnify the assured in respect of the claim.

HYETT v. LENNARD, (1940) 2 K.B. 180.

Income-tax—Assessee subletting shop owing to closing of that branch—Difference in rent paid and rent received—Whether trade expense.

The assessee who carried on business as a ladies' tailor at some 9 or 10 shops in London and its suburbs took an assignment of a lease for 35 years at an yearly rent of £3,500 without option to determine at an earlier date. Owing to increasing loss the branch business in the leased premises was closed and the assessee demised the remaining term of the lease at a reduced yearly rent of £2,500. The assessee claimed a deduction for the difference in the rent he had to pay and the rent he received.

Held, he was entitled to the deduction claimed.

BEARE v. CARTER, (1940) 2 K.B. 187.

Income-tax—Amount paid to author for licence to publish an edition of his book—If capital payment.

Fees paid to an author for obtaining from him licence to publish an edition of his book is capital payment and not assessable to income-tax.

MANSEY v. MANSEY, (1940) P. 139.

Divorce—Desertion—Accommodation offered by husband—How far offer to resume cohabitation.

If the husband says he wants to live in such and such a place, then assuming always that he is not doing that to spite his wife, and that the accommodation is of a kind which one would expect a man in his position to occupy, the wife is under the painful necessity of sharing that home with him. If she will not, she is committing the matrimonial offence of desertion.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Lord Hewart's retirement.—Lord Hewart has been the Lord Chief Justice of England for perhaps one of the longest periods in the history of that office, having been appointed to that post in March, 1922, in succession to Lord Trevethin. Possessing a great reputation both at the Bar and in the House of Commons and gifted with considerable forensic eloquence, a trenchant style and a delicate sense of humour, his appointment as Lord Chief Justice was acclaimed with universal satisfaction. Both in civil cases and in the Central Court of Criminal Appeal, he has been responsible for many noteworthy judgments. Lord Hewart is also well known to the public as the author of "The New Despotism," containing a forceful protest against the tendency of recent legislation to permit encroachments on the jurisdiction of the judiciary by the heads of departments being vested with final quasi-judicial jurisdiction in many matters under cover of rules and regulations framed under the different statutes. Lord Hewart retires full of honour and glory and few will be disposed to challenge his claim to be regarded as one of the most successful incumbents of the office of Lord Chief Justice.

Viscount Caldecote's new appointment.—Lord Caldecote's appointment as Lord Chief Justice of England is unique in one respect, namely, that it is almost if not quite the first instance when an ex-Lord Chancellor becomes the Lord Chief Justice. Better known to lawyers as Sir Thomas Inskip, he was Solicitor-General during 1922-1924, 1924-1927, 1931-1932, and Attorney-General during 1927 and 1932-1936. From 1936 onwards he has been a Minister of the Crown in various departments. During the present year he was appointed Lord Chancellor in the place of Viscount Maugham, but after a short spell on the Woolsack he gave place to Viscount Simon, the present Lord Chancellor. As a Minister, Lord Caldecote does not seem to have achieved much success. But his legal attainments are great and undeniable and it may well be that as Lord Chief Justice he has come into his own.

Indian States and archaic rules.—It has recently been stated in the press that in some of the Rajputana States the law and procedure as administered even to-day tend in many cases to be the "proverbial ass" instead of commanding respect. Laws are said to be in force permitting a creditor to chain his debtor and march him along the public streets and allowing animals to be tried for crimes and suitably punished. In "The Princes of India" Sir William Barton mentions that even in a comparatively modern state like Hyderabad the Koranic law of retaliation still prevails. It may be remembered that a few years ago considerable criticism was occasioned by the procedure directed by a Full Bench in that State to be observed in carrying out the sentences of death and rigorous imprisonment imposed on an accused, namely, that "the man should first serve three years in jail and thereafter be hanged", ignoring what might be called the principle of the merger of the lesser penalty in the larger in such a case. Even in modern England the laws and rules are found to contain a number of anachronisms. The trial in 1936 of Lord de Clifford for a motoring offence in accordance with the privilege of peerage showed that "the formality of a trial by the House of Lords was an absurd anachronism." The case was entirely one for the ordinary Criminal Courts and the arguments in favour of the retention of the antiquated procedure had no vesture of substance. In fact Lord Atkin described it as an "outworn appanage of peerage."

The remedy both in British India and in the Indian States for getting out of such a condition is surely to have a Law Commission appointed periodically to suggest expurgations of laws which are altogether out of consonance with civilised notions and ideas.

Latin as Legal Language.—In the course of his judgment in a shipping case before the House of Lords last week, Lord Wright entered a strong protest against the use of certain latin phrases, such as "novus actus interveniens", "causa causans", and "causa sine qua non," as, in his view, they only distracted the mind from the true problem, which was to apply the principles of English law to the realities of the case. English law, as he went on to point out, is quite able to find in its own language expressions which will more fully state the problems in such cases as that before the House, and these should be sufficient. Certainly Latin does not quite hold the place it once did in the vocabulary of the law. For centuries it was the language of our records, and Blackstone, ever a fervent admirer of its precision, termed it the "universal dialect", so adapted, as he considered, to the needs of the nation. Indeed, thirty years after it received its official death-blow, he declared that the laudable intentions which had prompted its disappearance were such as the English language could not satisfy. While we may not be disposed to accept this categorical statement, it is curious to note that not a few Latin phrases have entered into the very texture of our legal vocabulary; phrases such as "habeas corpus", "nulla bona", "nudum pactum", and a large number of others which the lawyer is at least expected to know although he may not find it necessary to make frequent use of them.—S. J., 1940, p. 409.

The Two Races of Man.—In his own whimsical fashion Charles Lamb, in one of his delightful Essays of Elia, divided the human species into two distinct races, the men who borrow, and the men who lend, designating the former "the great race".

Lawyers, as such, can have no quarrel with Lamb's two categories, in view of the fact that their services are so frequently invoked by both, by the lenders in seeking to recover the money which they have incautiously advanced and find a difficulty in retrieving by their own unaided efforts, and by "the great race" in the hope of staving off the claims till a more convenient season, or, possibly, setting up some vigorous defence under the Statute of Limitations or otherwise. All through the ages many debtors have shown a decided inclination to avoid payment, and have evinced a wonderful ingenuity in these efforts, although they have not always succeeded in achieving the desired result; and one of the interesting chapters of legal history is that which is concerned with the various means by which pressure has been brought upon recalcitrant debtors to perform the elementary duty of paying their bills.—L.T., 1940, p. 350.

In Roman Law.—In ancient Rome we read that, when recourse to the debtor's property was useless, or where none existed, the debtor himself was absolutely in the hands of his creditor. He was not yet actually a slave, but the creditor could load him with chains and, after a certain time, could sell him as a slave. It might, of course, happen that against the same debtor several creditors had claims, and in such a case it was said that the law empowered them to chop the unhappy man to pieces and divide his carcass amongst themselves, the law considerably providing that any error in the division of the spoil should in no wise prejudice the creditors' rights, thus avoiding any quibbling objections such as were successfully urged by Portia in the defence of Antonio. A modern historian of Rome, Mr. E.S. Shuckburgh, however, says that, while the law permitted the debtor's body to be divided up among the creditors, such a practice was never in fact followed. Whether this is accurate or not may be difficult to ascertain with certainty, but one thing is very clear: that debtors had a bad time, just as they have experienced in much later days in most countries.—L.T., 1940, p. 350.

A Witty Chief Justice.—When we mentally try to call up the personality of Edward Law, who, after studying all the mysteries of special pleading in the chambers of George Wood—the future Baron Wood of the Court of Exchequer—and, later, sharing in the defence of Warren Hastings, rose to be Chief Justice of the King's Bench, we naturally think of him as a master of the common law and a judge of the greatest learning which he could expound in a way there was no mistaking, but we are apt to forget that to these great qualities he added a power of sarcastic comment which, however much it delighted the audience, was by no means quite congenial to those who were its victims. As one writer put it; in dealing out satire upon barristers and witnesses, and even on his judicial compeers, he was not seldom needlessly severe in the perpetration of jests the force of which lay solely in their cruelty. It is said, moreover, that at least on one occasion his satirical comment ruined a young member of the Bar for life. Making his first forensic appearance in Westminster Hall, this novice began thus: "The unfortunate client for whom I appear—hem, hem, I say, my Lord, my unfortunate client—". At this stage of the argument, if so it can be called, the Chief leant forward and, speaking in a soft cooing voice that was all the more derisive because it was so apparently gentle, quietly said, "You may go on, sir; so far, the court is entirely with you". The old writer who preserves this anecdote contrasts this unkindly cut with the very different observation by Mr. Justice Talfourd, who endeared himself not only by his charm on the Bench but by his lifelong devotion to his friend, Charles Lamb, whose life he wrote sympathetically and with great skill and attractiveness. On the occasion in question a nervous member of the Bar was almost overpowered and unable to continue his address, whereupon the judge, appreciating the position, interrupted by quietly saying, "Excuse me, but for a moment I am not at liberty to pay you attention". Thereupon the judge took up a pen and wrote a short note to a friend. Before the judge had finished the young barrister had recovered his self-possession and by an admirable speech secured a verdict for his client. If, instead of appearing before Talfourd, it had been the young man's lot to appear before Lord Ellenborough, his fate would certainly have been sealed. —L. T., 1940, p. 364.

"Why I Like the Judge".—Not long ago a twelve year old school girl who had just given evidence before Mr. Justice Stable in the King's Bench Division recorded her impressions under the heading: "Why I like the judge." She wrote: "I like the judge because he explained so I could understand what he said; he was very nice to me, he smiled at me and then I was not afraid of him: he looked nice in his robes and wig, I thought he would have a long wavy wig." I expect Mr. Justice Hawkins made an equally good impression on a small boy whom he once examined to test his fitness to take an oath. "If I were to say you had an orange in your mouth, would that be the truth?" he asked. "No, it would be a lie," said the child. "And if I said you had one in your hand?" "That would be another lie." "And if I promised you a bag of oranges and then didn't give them to you, what would that be?" "That would be a lie." "And if I did give them to you?" "That would be the truth." "Very well, I will." And he did.—S.J., 1940, p. 391.

The Child's Mind.—There is a story how the pious and simple-minded Parke, J., once found himself at cross-purposes when examining a little girl in similar circumstances! He asked her a number of questions about the Catechism, the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer, and was very much edified by the accuracy of her answers, which drew from him a series of exclamations of praise. Finally, his thoughts turned to night prayers and he said: "Just tell us, little girl, what you do before going to bed?" To his surprise there was an embarrassed silence. He repeated the question with encouraging expressions, but for a long time could get no answer. At last amid a breathless hush she said confidentially: "I put off my clothes and put on my night cap." The famous Maule, J., had quite a different style for those occasions. "Do you know what an oath is, my child?" he once asked a little girl. "Yes, sir, I am obliged to tell the truth." "And if you always tell the truth, where will you go when you die?" "Up to heaven, sir," "And what will become of you if you tell lies?" "I shall go to the naughty place, sir." "Are you sure of that?" "Yes, sir, quite sure." "Let her be sworn. It is clear she knows a great deal more than I do."—S.J., 1940, p. 391.

BOOK REVIEWS.

HINDU LAW by Golap Chandra Sarkar Sastri, 8th Edition, by R. N. Sarkar, M.A., B.L., 980 pages. Published by S. C. Sarkar and Sons, Ltd., 1-1-1 C, College Square, Calcutta. Price Rs. 12.

Sarkar Sastri's Hindu Law has always been regarded as a scholarly treatise on that subject. The present edition of the work by Mr. R. N. Sarkar fully maintains the reputation of its predecessors. The effect of the various pieces of legislation affecting Hindu law has been duly noticed and stated at the appropriate places. The text of such enactments has also been given in the form of an Appendix, thereby adding to the utility of the book. No really important decision has been missed and the citation of cases is full. To agree with some of the views expressed in the book may be difficult, as for instance, with the statement that the widow of a predeceased son would take an absolute estate under the Hindu Women's Rights to Property Act, 1937. (pp. 215, 432). This does not however in any way affect the merit of the work. We are sure that the book will constitute a useful and welcome addition to the library of every lawyer.

PLEADINGS IN INDIA—PRINCIPLES AND PRECEDENTS WITH NOTES by J. P. Agarwala, B.Sc., LL.B., 850 pages. Published by S. C. Sarkar and Sons, Ltd., 1-1-1 C, College Square, Calcutta, 1940.

In England, pleadings have long ago become an art and the work of Bullen and Leake constitutes a monumental treatise on that subject. In India so far there is nothing comparable to it.

and Mr. Agarwala has now attempted to place before the legal profession a book modelled on similar lines. The first ten chapters deal with matters like Rules of pleading, Alternate and inconsistent pleadings, Particulars, Signing and verification of pleadings, Attacking of opponent's pleadings, Amendment of pleadings, Construction of pleadings, Institution of suits, Parties to suits and Frame of suit. These are followed by as many as 336 forms of complaints each concerned with a different type of suit. The form in which the appropriate defences to such actions should be delivered is also elucidated elaborately. Notes explanatory of the relevant law have been given with each precedent, thereby enhancing the usefulness of the work. The statement of principles in certain places is not quite happy. On p. 121 it is stated: "No company, association or partnership shall consist of more than ten members for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking." What S. 4 of the Indian Companies Act really states is that a company with a larger membership should be registered under the Act if it is to carry on banking business legally and not that the formation of a banking company with a membership of over ten persons is altogether prohibited.

The book is on the whole a useful publication and is bound to afford valuable help to the members of the legal profession.

THE MADRAS AGRICULTURISTS' RELIEF ACT (IV OF 1938), by M. V. Varadachariar, B.A., Pleader, Chingleput. Published by Arpudha Press, Chingleput, Price Re. 1.

For such a short Act there is now a considerable mass of case-law bearing upon the construction of the different provisions of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, though but two years and a half have elapsed since the measure got into the statute-book. It is therefore inevitable that publications relating to the Act should frequently appear with commentaries noticing the decisions given up to date. In the present book the decisions up to May, 1940, seem to have been collected, though the views expressed in some of them have since then been revised. The rules framed under the Act till the 7th of May have been given as also the texts of a number of allied enactments, such as The Madras Debt Conciliation Act, 1936; The Usurious Loans Act, 1918; The Madras Debtors' Protection Act, 1934 and The Agriculturists' Loans Act, 1884, in the form of appendices.

We have great pleasure in welcoming this publication and we hope that the book will be of service to those for whom it is intended.

JOTTINGS.

Sir Maurice Gwyer on fee to Juniors.—The statement made by the Chief Justice of India on the 14th October relative to the payment of fee to juniors defines the code of duty to be observed by a Senior Advocate (corresponding to King's Counsel in England) and his junior in the case, where the fee payable to the latter bears to the fee payable to the former a proportion less than what the Federal Court Rules require. The rules of the Federal Court embody mainly the practice of the Supreme Court in England. Under those rules a Junior Advocate appearing with a Senior Advocate shall be entitled to a fee not less than one-third and not more than two-third of the fee marked on the brief of the senior, though in England a Junior Counsel will be allowed two-third of the fee of his leader and the taxing officer has no authority to give him less [*Re Park., Bott v. Chester*¹]. A Senior Advocate may however ask for a 'special fee in addition to the 'brief fee,' provided he had announced that he will not accept any brief or any brief of a specified class without a special fee of a named amount, and where the brief is so marked, the Junior can claim his proper proportion of the ordinary fee only. The practice is to pay the fees marked on the brief at the time of delivering the brief. Marking a fee is at best only an offer of payment and hence Counsel may refuse to accept a brief if the fee is not actually paid. If he does not insist on such prior payment, the payment will become only a matter of honour and not of legal obligation having regard to the dual agency system operating with reference to the Federal Court, as in England, though in some circumstances the non-payment of fees to Counsel by an Agent in possession of his client's funds for that purpose may become a ground for the exercise of the Court's disciplinary jurisdiction.

The statement of Sir Maurice Gwyer deals essentially with the marking of a proper fee for the junior. There are two aspects of the matter, first, where a lower fee is marked on the brief, the junior having agreed to accept the same, and second, where the marking is made in error or by oversight. The case which elicited the pronouncement of the Chief Justice of India on this matter belonged to the latter category but the learned Chief Justice has made it clear that that will make no difference in the result. It is always the duty of the junior to refuse to accept a brief not properly marked : it is equally the duty of the Senior Advocate to refuse to go into Court in such a case till a proper fee is marked on the junior's brief and also to bring to the notice of the Court through the Registrar the breach of the rules. Sir Maurice Gwyer has also pointed out that suitable action will be taken against any Agent who refuses to pay the proper fee or obtains a receipt for a fee not in fact paid. He has further declared that before a case is heard the fees should have been legibly marked on the brief and that the backsheets of the briefs so marked with Counsel's receipt upon it for the fees should be produced on taxation to the taxing master.

To what extent the principles postulated by the Chief Justice of India will be applicable and can be applied to the members of the Bar in the High Court and in the mofussil is a matter not susceptible of an easy solution. There is no recognised division of the Bar here into senior advocates and junior advocates ; nor is there any rule rendering it obligatory on any particular class of advocates to appear always with a junior. One of the rules of professional etiquette formulated by our Bar Council no doubt lays down that "in every case in which an advocate of over ten years' standing receives a fee of not less than Rs. 500/, he is expected to be instructed by a junior advocate, pleader, or solicitor"; but even if strictly observed the rule will not be of much help to juniors. Cases where an advocate is paid more than Rs. 500/- will not be considerable, but that apart, the rule does not prescribe the proportion which the junior's fee shall bear to that of the senior normally. Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar's suggestion in his Lectures on Professional Ethics that the fixing of the proportion will not result in any real advantage to the junior rests mainly on an apprehension that the client may not care to engage a junior at all or that he may go in for the services of the seniormost among the juniors rather than engage two advocates. The apprehension now stands considerably dispelled in consequence of the rule enunciated by the Bar Council that a senior should be instructed by a junior advocate under certain circumstances. The other reason mentioned by Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar will affect the position in a comparatively small degree only, for it is doubtful whether a client will prefer to be without the services of a senior with an acknowledged reputation and go in for a junior of some standing merely because the senior insists on being instructed by a junior. It is however gratifying to note that though the code of duty propounded by Sir Maurice Gwyer was directed to the members of the Federal Bar, it was accepted and acted upon, the moment he read the statement, by a leading member of our own Bar, by making the client agree to pay his junior in the case the fee which would be proper according to the standards laid down by the Chief Justice of India.

Tenure of Office of High Court Judges.—Anent the announcement extending the term of office of Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao, it may be interesting to recall the changes that have been progressively made in the rules relating to the tenure of High Court Judges in India. Originally all Judges held office during pleasure of the Crown and there was no prescribed age limit for their retirement. The English practice of those days permitting a Judge to continue in office till he himself felt that he should retire was evidently followed in India. Sir George Knox and Sir P. C. Banerjee among others constitute illustrious instances of Judges who continued on the Bench for a long time after passing their three score years with unimpaired vigour and unabated reputation. Sir George Knox's record was absolutely unique in the annals of public service in India. He was a Judge of the High Court for more than 30 years and remarkably enough, if the report be true, had availed himself of only a day's leave throughout his service, that day being his wedding day. Sir P. C. Banerjee also continued on the Bench for well nigh 30 years, retiring in his 75th year. In England there was the outstanding example afforded by Lord Macnaghten, some of whose scintillating judgments were delivered at the Privy Council after he had attained his 80th year, and in recent times there was the case of Mr. Justice Avory who continued on the Bench even after passing his 83rd year. These can however be regarded only as remarkable exceptions. For the first time by his Despatch of the 27th April 1899—No. 18 Judicial, the Secretary of State for India in Council intimated to the Government of India that it had been decided that every Chief Justice or Judge appointed to a High Court in India will be called upon to resign his office on attaining the sixtieth year, that notice to this effect should be given to a Judge at the time of appointment and that his acceptance of the condition was to be obtained and duly recorded. The Government of India was also informed that no relaxation of the rule would be practicable. Even after the Government of India Act, 1915, no statutory age limit existed but such a limit was in practice enforced by taking an undertaking from the Judges at the time of their appointment to retire on attainment of the sixtieth year. In certain cases however Government has been pleased for special reasons to continue in office Judges who shall have otherwise to retire in accordance with such undertaking. In our own High Court Mr. Justice Bhashyam Iyengar formerly,

Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar in 1920 and now Mr. Justice Venkataramana Rao had such extensions granted. It has sometimes been suggested that the prospect of an extension of the tenure of Judges at the choice of Government might react on the complete independence of the judiciary from the executive. At the same time it may be noted that a compulsory retirement of Judges on their completing sixty years will sometimes result in the services of Judges possessing talents and judicial qualities of an outstanding character being altogether lost. In the case of Judges of the Federal Court the age-limit is fixed at 65 and there can be no justification for the imposition of a different limit for the High Court unless it be that the work of the Federal Court is not expected to be so taxing as work on the Bench of the High Courts. In England there is always the possibility of the services of distinguished judges being utilised even after retirement by their being appointed to the Judicial Committee or being elevated to the peerage whereby they would become eligible to participate in the judicial business of the House of Lords. In India the tenure of Judges of the High Court falls to be governed now by S. 220 of the Government of India Act, 1935. The Judges hold office during good behaviour and can serve till they attain 60 years. Extension of term can lend itself to criticism only where it is courted but not where it results from an appreciation of the judicial qualities of a judge. The limit though negative being however statutory, no question of extension of the term of office of a judge will receive favourable consideration where the appointment has been made after the coming into operation of the Government of India Act, 1935. In the case of Judges appointed before the commencement of Part III of the Act, though they shall be deemed to be appointed under that Part, yet their term of office will not be affected by the Act [S. 231]. And if the proposals relating to the expansion of the powers and jurisdiction of the Federal Court materialise it may well be that a certain portion of the personnel of the Federal Bench will be recruited from judges of the High Courts having distinguished records of service, and in that manner the services of such Judges from the Bench will continue to be available till they attain 65 years.

A NOTE ON MUHAMMAD SAHIB V. KUNTHANMAL SOWCAR, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 185*

BY

R. KRISHNASWAMI AYYANGAR,

Advocate, Cuddalore.

Mr. Justice Horwill has laid down in this case dealing with a debt incurred subsequent to 1932, that S. 12 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938) entitled a creditor to interest on any sum remaining outstanding after the debt had been scaled down, from the date up to which it is scaled down, that is, only from the date of the decree and that the past interest having been paid off in full long before the Act came into force the plaintiff was entitled to a decree only for the balance of the principal outstanding.

The judgment does not indicate the rate of interest specified in the promissory note which was of the year 1933 and whether any payment was made towards interest in October of that year when the debtor paid Rs. 100 for principal out of the Rs. 300 for which the note was originally executed. Presumably it was, for no creditor will ordinarily allow any payment for principal without the interest till then due being paid. It may also be assumed that when the interest was paid in full on 18-11-35, it was paid according to the promissory note rate. The plaintiff in the suit had claimed interest from 22-3-38 up to the date of suit. No interest on Rs. 200 seems to have been claimed from 18-11-35 up to the date of suit. Evidently the interest paid on 18-11-35 very nearly equalled or exceeded the amount of interest calculated on the 5 per cent. basis from the date of the bond up to 22-3-38, for in that case alone will there be no interest outstanding on the 5 per cent. basis on 22-3-38. The Rs. 7-8-0 claimed for interest up to the date of suit should have been calculated on the 6½ per cent. basis on Rs. 200 from 22-3-38 up to the date of suit. His Lordship equates the date up to which the debt is scaled down with the date of the decree, and holds that from that date that amount carries future interest under S. 12 of the Act. With due respect to his Lordship, this does not appear to be the correct interpretation of S. 12. A distinction should be drawn between the time of scaling down and the date up to which the debts are scaled down as contemplated in S. 12. It is true that debts are scaled down under Ss. 8 and 9 so far as the principal and interest are concerned with a view to fix the legal liability under the statute intended to benefit the agriculturists coming within its scope. Under S. 8 the scaling down of interest takes place up to 1-10-37 in that it wipes off the interest outstanding altogether. The principal outstanding on that date carries subsequent interest at 6 per cent. from that date up to the date of payment. No question of the decree affording any starting point for payment of future interest can possibly arise. S. 8, sub-S. (2) provides for a case of wiping off the liability altogether. Sub-S. (3) provides alone for the payment of the amount that would make up the shortage between sums repaid by way of principal or interest and twice the amount of the principal. It may be that the principle of discharge by double payment or approximating to double payment can be applied even taking into consideration any payments made after 1-10-37 and even after 22-3-38. There has however been no decided case so far on this point.

The Act came into force on 22-3-38. The crucial dates mentioned in S. 8 are 1-10-32 and 1-10-37, the former with reference to the starting of the indebtedness and the latter with reference to the ascertainment of the amount repayable on that date, as mentioned in sub-S. (1) thereto. S. 12 refers to future interest on the debt that is scaled down in cases where the debt was incurred prior to the Act and S. 13 refers to those that are incurred subsequent to the Act. The application of S. 12 presents no difficulty. If Mr. Justice Horwill's interpretation is correct, a new date is introduced as the date up to which the debt is scaled down, viz., the date of the decree. Suppose the parties do not go to court but try out of court to settle the amount due under the Act, then according to the learned Judge that would be the date up to which the debt is scaled down for the purpose of carrying future interest if the settled amount is not paid. 1-10-37 and 22-3-38 will not be according to his Lordship the respective dates up to which the debt is scaled down according as S. 8 or S. 9 is applicable to the facts of the case. The correct interpretation will be that the words "from the date up to which it is scaled down" in S. 12 mean one or the other of the dates mentioned above; no matter when, after the commencement of the Act, the parties try to settle accounts out of court or through court. According to his Lordship's view the principal outstanding on 1-10-37 will carry no interest whatever; likewise, the principal outstanding on 22-3-38. This view will render S. 12 absolutely nugatory. In trying to interpret S. 12 his Lordship has virtually ignored its operation in respect of interest subsequent to the two dates implicit in the section. Post decree interest is provided for in the Civil Procedure Code at 6 per cent. S. 12 of the Act was not intended to provide for this. It was only intended to provide for interest after scaling down for, otherwise any delay on the part of the creditor to resort to court will result in his not getting any interest for the interval between 1-10-37 or 22-3-38, as the case may be, and the date of suit and this could hardly have been intended in an expropriatory legislation of this kind which must be interpreted strictly.

SUMMARY OF ENGLISH CASES.

NOBLE v. SOUTHERN RAILWAY CO., (1940) A.C. 583 (H.L.).

Workmen's Compensation Act (1925), S. 1 (2)—Death of Railway employee caused while walking along the railway line which was forbidden—Accident if arising out of and in the course of employment.

A fireman was employed on piloting duties, i.e., if a driver was not acquainted with the railroad, he had to travel in the engine cab and show it to him. A safe route from the depot to the station was provided and walking along the railway line was prohibited. The fireman while walking along the forbidden route to an engine was knocked down and killed by an electric train. In a claim by his widow for compensation,

Held, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal in (1939) 2 All.E.R. 817, that though the accident did not arise out of the employment but occurred while the deceased was contravening the regulations as to his proper route from the engine house to the station, still as the workman was walking along the line for the purpose of and in connection with his employers' trade or business the accident must be deemed to arise out of and in the course of the employment and his widow would be entitled to compensation.

Clarks v. Southern Railway Co., 96 L.J.K.B. 572, overruled.

KNIGHTSBRIDGE ESTATES TRUST, LTD. v. BYRNE, (1940) A.C. 613.

Trade Marks Act (1939)—Redemption—Provision for redemption in eighty half-yearly instalments—If clog on equity of redemption—If offends rule against perpetuities.

The respondents, the owners of a large freehold estate owed on a mortgage dated 6th May, 1927, carrying interest at $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum, 3,00,000/ to a certain company. In January, 1931, the appellant society agreed to grant to the respondents a loan of 3,10,000 at $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest per annum repayable over a period of forty years by half-yearly instalments, the whole money to become payable on any default. On 6th November, 1931, a mortgage embodying the agreement was executed in favour of the appellants. On 25th February, 1937, the respondents issued a writ claiming to be entitled to redeem the mortgaged property on the usual notice notwithstanding the provision for repayment by eighty instalments spread over forty years claiming that the condition was illegal and void as a clog on the right to redeem and not capable of being enforced.

Held [affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal in (1939) 1 Ch. 441]: (1) The mortgage was a debenture within the meaning of S. 74 of the Companies Act, 1929; (2) the rule against perpetuities did not apply to mortgages; and (3) the terms of the mortgage were not so stringent or oppressive as to justify interference of the Court.

COHEN v. COHEN, (1940) A.C. 631 (H.L.).

Divorce—Desertion—Presentation and service upon deserting spouse of petition for dissolution of marriage—Effect on period of desertion.

In so far as it lays down a general principle applicable to all cases in which a deserted spouse presents a petition for divorce or judicial separation, that filing a petition for judicial separation puts an end to desertion, the decision in Stevenson v. Stevenson, (1911) P. 191 is unacceptable and should be overruled. The question whether a deserting spouse has reasonable cause for not trying to bring the desertion to an end, and the corresponding question whether desertion without cause has existed for the necessary period must depend on the circumstances of the particular case.

(1939) 2 All.E.R. 596, reversed.

• LOWRY v. CONSOLIDATED AFRICAN SELECTION TRUST, LTD., (1940) A.C. 648 (H.L.).

Income-tax—Company—Shares issued to employees at par as remuneration for services—Premium which the shares would have brought to the company if issued to public—If deductible against profits.

A company by special resolutions increased its share capital by the creation of certain redeemable preference shares and 400,000 new ordinary shares of 5s. each and 10,000 of such shares were reserved for issue to the employees of the company. 6,000 of those shares were allotted to the employees at par, as remuneration for services rendered. If issued to the public the shares would have fetched a premium of £1-18-9 per share. In a claim to deduct such premium against profits, for income-tax purposes, Held [reversing (1939) 1 ALL.E.R. 353 (C.A.), Lord Wright and Lord Romer, dissenting].—Issuing shares is not a trading transaction and does not in any way affect the gains and profits of the company and hence the company is not entitled to the deduction claimed.

- SOUTHERN FOUNDRIES (1926), LTD. v. SHIRLAW, (1940) A.C. 701 (H.L.).

Company—Contract of employment of managing director for 10 years—Alteration of articles giving power to remove director—Exercise of power—Liability of company for breach of implied term.

The S. F. Company agreed by a contract of 21st December, 1933, to employ the plaintiff as managing director (of which he was to be a director also) for ten years and the company could not remove him under its articles of association. In April, 1936, the company altered its articles giving power to F. F. Ltd. (who had acquired financial control of S. F. Co.) to remove any director of S. F. Company and also providing that the appointment of any person as managing director should determine if he ceased from any cause to be a director. On 25th March, 1937, F. F. Ltd. exercised the power to remove plaintiff from being a director of S. F. and ipso facto his managing directorship ceased. In a claim for damages for breach of contract, Held [affirming (1939) 2 ALL.E.R. 113 (C.A.), Viscount Maugham and Lord Romer, dissenting].—Though the alteration of the articles was not in itself a breach of contract, the exercise of the power by F. F. Ltd. caused the breach of contract by S. F. company and the defendants were liable for damages.

- NICHOLAS v. COMMISSIONER OF TAXES, STATE OF VICTORIA, (1940) A.C. 744 (P.C.).

Income-tax—Bonus shares issued out of accumulated undistributed profits of company—Value of shares to be included in taxable income of shareholder.

Where fully paid bonus shares are issued out of the accumulated undistributed profits of a company, the value of such shares should be included in the assessment of taxable income of the shareholder.

- LIQUIDATOR, RHODESIA METALS, LTD. v. COMMISSIONER OF TAXES, (1940) A.C. 774 (P.C.).

Income-tax—Mining claims in Africa acquired by English company for development and sale—Sale of undertaking in England at profit—Capital appreciation—Liability to assessment in Africa as receipt within that territory.

The appellant company was incorporated on 30th November, 1935, as a private company with a nominal capital of £10,000. On the same day another company Swithin Ores and Metals was incorporated with a capital of £100,000. One E was a large shareholder and chairman of both the companies. On 5th December, 1935, E who was entitled to a number of mining claims in Southern Rhodesia sold some of them for £37,500 and on 12th December, 1935, sold certain others to the appellant company for £5,000 cash. On 20th January, 1936, Swithins increased its capital to £200,000. On 27th January, 1936, by special resolution the appellant company was voluntarily wound up and W was appointed liquidator. On 15th March, 1936, the whole undertaking of the appellant company was sold to Swithins for £152,000 payable as to £150,000 in fully paid shares and as to £2,000 in cash. All the purchases and sales were in England.

Held, on the evidence that this was the culminating step in a scheme designed when the claims were bought and was made for the purpose of concluding the operation of profit making which was on hand when the liquidation was commenced. The appellant company received the profits from a source within African territory (namely the mining claims which they had acquired and developed there for the very purpose of obtaining the particular receipt), and the receipt was therefore liable to assessment in Rhodesia.

UNITED STEEL COMPANIES, LTD. v. CULLINGTON, (1940) A.C. 812 (H.L.).

Income-tax—Finance Act (1926), Ss. 32 and 33—Amalgamated company—If entitled to deductions in respect of losses and wear and tear to machinery to which the old companies which were amalgamated were entitled to.

Two companies A and B were amalgamated into a new company in 1930. A and B companies continually showed losses for which they were unable to obtain relief under Income-tax Act, 1918, S. 34. B company was further unable to give effect to the deductions for wear and tear to machinery which it was entitled to. In respect of the deductions thus carried forward by the two old companies relief was now claimed by the amalgamated company, Held, the new company cannot claim the right to deductions in respect of the losses and wear and tear of the old companies. (1939) 1 K.B. 644 ; (1939) 1 All.E.R. 454 (C.A.), affirmed.

BISMAG, LTD. v. AMBLINS (CHEMISTS), LTD., (1940) 1 Ch. 667 (C.A.). . .

Trade Marks Act (1939), S. 44—Use by defendant of plaintiff's trade mark in relation to plaintiff's own goods—If infringement.

Plaintiffs had registered "bisurated," as trade mark in respect of (1) their patent medicines and (2) chemical substances for use in pharmacy. Defendants carrying on business of manufacture and sale of medicinal preparations issued pamphlets showing the exorbitant cost of patent medicines and their analysis and offering the same prescription at much less cost.

Held [MacKinnon, L.J., dissenting, reversing (1940) 1 All.E.R. 156].
—There was an infringement of the registered trade mark of the plaintiffs.

ESTATE OF THOMAS MILWARD, In re, (1940) 1 Ch. 698.

Will—Construction—Gift over on death of devisee leaving no "child or children"—To be construed as meaning "issue" when necessary.

Where there is a provision in a will for a gift over on the death of the devisee leaving no "child or children" as a matter of construction it is open to the Court if it thinks fit to do so to give a wider meaning to the expression "child or children" as meaning "issue" if the words were intended to have the wider meaning.

BARING'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, In re : BARING BROTHERS & Co. v. LIDDELL, (1940) 1 Ch. 737.

Settlement—Forfeiture—Provision for determination of life interest, if income "becomes payable to other person"—Writ of sequestration—Effect on provision.

A forfeiture clause in a settlement deed provided that in the event of a certain income becoming vested in or payable to another person a life estate was to determine. On the issue of a notice of writ of sequestration to the person entitled to the life interest,

Held, that it resulted in a forfeiture.

HENDERSON, In re : HENDERSON v. HENDERSON, (1940) 1 Ch. 764.

Will—Trustees under will—Friction between—Jurisdiction of Court to appoint new trustees against will of existing trustees—Trusts Act (1925), S. 41 (1).

Under Trusts Act (1925), S. 41 (1) a Court has jurisdiction in a proper case to appoint a new trustee against the will of an existing trustee. Accordingly where there is friction (not due to dispute as to facts) between the two trustees under a will the Court is entitled to appoint a new trustee.

DIGBY v. GENERAL ACCIDENT, FIRE AND LIFE ASSURANCE CORPORATION, LTD., (1940) 2 K.B. 226.

Insurance—Motor insurance—Indemnity against third party risks of policyholder with a similar indemnity to authorised driver—Claim of policyholder against his driver—Rights of driver to indemnity under policy—Arbitration clause—If binding on driver.

An insurance company (by the policy containing a section with marginal heading "Third party liability") undertook to indemnify the policyholder in respect of any claim by any person including passengers in the car against all risks through or in respect of his car. The indemnity was to extend to any person driving the car with the owner's order or permission. The owner having been injured in a collision and failing in his claim against the owner of the other car sued his own chauffeur for damages, who in turn claimed indemnity under the policy of insurance.

Held, (1) the chauffeur was bound by the arbitration clause in the policy. (2) (Luxmoore, J., dissenting).—The authorised driver or person driving with the consent of the policyholder could not claim indemnity in respect of his liability to the policyholder who was injured by the driving of the car, and the insured is not a "Third party." (1940) 1 All.E.R. 514, varied.

CHANDLER v. EMERTON AND OTHERS, JUSTICES, (1940) 2 K.B. 261.

Licence for sale of liquors—"Occasional licence"—Application regularly for licence for 3 days in a week in a particular month every year—If ceases to be "occasional."

Applications were made regularly year after year by the applicant for "occasional licence" to sell intoxicating liquors on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays in the month of June when dances were to be held in the premises. The Justices held that the word "occasional" was a complete bar to the grant of such licences. On appeal, Held, the word "occasional" does not constitute a complete bar to the grant of applications merely because they are made regularly.

GRIFFITHS v. DALTON, (1940) 2 K.B. 264.

Banking—Undated cheque—Right to fill in date—When to be exercised.

An undated cheque is not an instrument which the banker on whom it is drawn is bound to honour. But a person in possession of such a cheque must exercise his prima facie authority to fill in the date within a reasonable time. The question what is a reasonable time is a question of fact.

SOTHERN-SMITH v. CLANCY, (1940) 2 K.B. 276.

Income-tax—Insurance providing for annual payments in consideration of a single premium—Annual payments whether income or capital.

Under a contract called a "refund annuity" an insurance society in consideration of the payment by the annuitant of $65,243.22 (as capital invested) agreed to pay an annuity of $6510 annually during his lifetime. It was further guaranteed that the aggregate payments should not in any event amount to less than the amount of the capital invested.

Held, that the annual payments were capital and not income for purposes of income-tax.

JOPLING v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, (1940) 2 K.B. 282.

Stamps—Instrument of transfer of certain shares appropriated by the execution of a will in satisfaction of a legacy—Whether to be stamped as "conveyance or transfer on sale."

An instrument of transfer of certain shares appropriated by the execution of a will in satisfaction of a legacy left thereby to the transferee is chargeable with stamp duty as a conveyance or transfer on sale. The substance of the matter is that the executor proposes an appropriation, and the legatee consents to it, and by so consenting the legatee discharges the executor from his obligation to pay the legacy in money. It therefore amounts to a conveyance on sale.

KNESHAW v. ABERTOLL, (1940) 2 K.B. 295.

Income-tax—Payment for obtaining licence for monopoly of selling beer and wine—If deductible from profits for assessment.

A licence was granted to the assessee for three years for sale of beer and wine and the amount which was settled as the monopoly value was £75 payable in three annual instalments.

Held, this sum was a capital sum, and the fact that it was payable in instalments did not prevent those instalments from being capital for revenue purposes and the sum cannot be allowed as a deduction against the assessment in each year.

MILLS v. STANWAY COACHES, LTD., (1940) 2 K.B. 334.

Tort—Negligence—Damages for loss of expectation of life and for pain and suffering—Quantum.

The plaintiff's wife aged 34 and in good health was fatally injured in a motor accident and after being unconscious for 4 days died. In a claim for damages by the husband under the Fatal Accidents Act,

Held, that damages for loss of expectation of life should be moderate and ought not to exceed £1,000 in the case of adults.

FORSYTH v. THOMPSON, (1940) 2 K.B. 366.

Income-tax—Mutual society providing its members (who have to pay premiums) with weekly payments in the event of sickness—Amounts received by member—Liability to tax.

Sums payable by a mutual society to its members under their individual contracts with the mutual society are to be considered on the same basis as similar contracts with a proprietary company. If they result in annual payment or payments of annuities the recipients are taxable in respect of those annual payments or annuities. The fact of such payments or annuities being contingent on continuance of payment of premiums to the society will not prevent the sums from being annual payments.

ANDREWS v. ANDREWS, (1940) P. 184.

Divorce—Decree nisi—Petitioner's adultery before petition not disclosed—Intervention—Discretion of Court—Public policy.

A husband obtained a decree nisi on the ground of desertion without disclosing his own adulterous association with another woman through whom he had children. On the King's Proctor intervening, Held, though the petitioner's conduct in deliberately deceiving the Court was most reprehensible and public policy demanded that such deception should be discouraged, whether the decree should be rescinded and the petition dismissed must depend on the circumstances of the individual case. The prospect of the association with the woman leading to a happy married home should not be frustrated and in this case the public policy was in favour of allowing the decree to stand and the discretion of the Court should be exercised accordingly.

HORTON v. HORTON, (1940) P. 187.

Divorce—Wife's legal cruelty—What constitutes.

The charge against the wife was one of perpetual nagging, and hurling accusations against the husband of associating with other women, complaints about his absence from home on Masonic business, charges of hypocrisy about his religion and so on. This course of conduct was carried on at night. The medical evidence showed that the husband's health was affected by this and when he stayed away from the wife his health improved. Also in addition to small acts of violence to the husband, the wife out of jealous spite, from time to time, damaged various things (such as masonic clothing, hats, gold cigarette case, presentation silver salver, and the lens of his spectacles) which all disclosed malevolence likely to bear fruit in acts of cruelty. On the evidence,

Held, there was legal cruelty entitling the husband to a decree for divorce.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

In re Witnesses.—Countless are the stories that have been handed down from generation to generation regarding witnesses, their idiosyncracies in their mode of giving evidence, their endeavours to elude the little traps laid for them by the skilful cross-examiner, who has so often the witness at a disadvantage. Occasionally, it is true, the witness scores in the skirmish that takes place, but more often, unless he chances to be very astute, he is at a disadvantage. Some cynical person of a past generation, it will be remembered, classified witnesses into three categories, witnesses simpliciter, blank witnesses, and experts. But this is, perhaps, too strong a way of putting it.—L.T., 1940, p. 32.

Jeffreys and the Witness.—It is traditionally reported that in the reign of Charles II. in badgering a witness, no barrister could surpass George Jeffreys, of sanguinary fame. Nevertheless, on more than one occasion he met his match in the witness-box. "You fellow in the leathern doublet," he is reported to have said to a countryman whom he was about to cross-examine, "pray what are you paid for swearing?" "God bless you, sir," was the reply, "and make you an honest man," answered the witness, looking counsel full in the face and speaking with a voice of hearty good-humour, "if you had no more for lying than I have for swearing, you would wear a leathern doublet as well as I."—L.T., 1940, p. 32.

Erskine's Methods.—It is said that Erskine's treatment of witnesses was sometimes unfair, but his jocoseness was generally distinct from mere flippancy and his unfairness was redeemed by such delicacy of wit that his most cutting observations seldom annoyed the witness. A story has come down which tells us that a religious enthusiast, on entering the witness-box, objected to take the oath in the customary manner, but stated that though he would not kiss the book he was quite ready to hold up his hand and swear. On being asked by Erskine to give his reason for this departure from the usual mode of testifying in the courts, he answered that "it is written in the Book of Revelation that the angel standing on the sea held up his hand."

"But that," interjected Erskine, "cannot apply to your case, for in the first place you are no angel, secondly, you cannot tell how the angel would have sworn if he had stood on dry land as you do." The witness declined to budge from the position he had taken up and was permitted to give his testimony in his own way, and so impressed apparently was the jury by his evidence that they found a verdict adverse to Erskine's client. Erskine might have remembered, but for the moment he chose to forget, that in Scotland, his native country, the method of taking the oath is for the witness to hold up his right hand and repeat the words after the judge. Erskine was usually very happy in his sayings; one that has often been recalled, but which will bear repetition, is the opinion which he gave on a case laid before him by his friend, the Duke of Queensberry, popularly known as "Old Q," as to whether he could sue a certain tradesman for breach of contract about the painting of his house. The evidence available being in the view of Erskine totally insufficient to support the case, he wrote, "I am of opinion that this action will not lie, unless the witnesses lie too!" Not a few jokes that come down to us have a fairly long pedigree, and so it is in this case, for, as someone pointed out, the story is apparently a revival of the pun attributed to Lord Chancellor Hatton in Bacon's Apophthegms.—L.T., 1940, p. 32.

Clergymen as witnesses.—The late Mr. Balfour Browne, K.C., who specialised at the Parliamentary Bar, in his work, Forty Years at the Bar, expressed the view that clergymen do not, as a rule, make good witnesses. Having been used to an autocratic pulpit, he said, they did not take kindly to the chair where the bladders of their pomposity—his own word—might be pricked by a sharp question. But despite this general view he had known both clergymen of the Church of England and of Rome to give excellent straightforward evidence. Quakers, as Lamb recalled in one of his essays, have always been remarkable for their self-watchfulness, a quality which never gave way to the winds of persecution or to the violence of judge or accuser under trials and racking examinations. "You will never be the wiser, if I sit here answering your questions till midnight," said one of the Friends. "Thereafter, as the answer may be," retorted his examiner.—L.T., 1940, p. 33.

JOTTINGS AND CUTTINGS.

Retirement of Mr. Appa Rao.—It has been announced that Rao Bahadur D. Appa Rao, the Registrar of our High Court is proceeding on leave for 28 months from 1st December preparatory to retirement. Born in January, 1889, Mr. Appa Rao entered service in 1923 as Junior Law Reporter and was appointed Assistant Registrar, Appellate Side in 1926. Thereafter he held successively the posts of Official Referee, Deputy Registrar, Master and Registrar. He was also for some time on special duty in connection with the reorganisation of the Official Assignee's department. When Mr. Appa Rao was confirmed as Registrar in 1938 he had the distinction of being the first Indian and the first from among the members of the Bar to be appointed to that place in the Madras High Court. Quiet and reserved by temperament, Mr. Appa Rao was always kind and courteous towards the members of the Bar. He could appreciate their difficulties and view their grievances with sympathy. We wish Mr. Appa Rao all happiness in his retirement.

Our New Registrar.—Mr. S. P. Thompson, I.C.S., the incoming Registrar of the High Court is 38 years old and was confirmed as District and Sessions Judge in February last, after having served in that capacity in Ramnad, West Tanjore and Madura Districts for a period of nearly four years. Mr. Thompson is an University man being an Honours Graduate of the Cambridge University. This seems to be the first time when a permanent District Judge is appointed Registrar of the High Court in our province. We trust that the principle underlying the appointment is that the Registrar of the High Court should be a person who has already been in day to day contact with the members of the bar and conversant with their problems and needs. We hope that during his tenure of office as Registrar, the members of the bar will continue to be accorded by Mr. Thompson the same courtesy, sympathy and accommodation which had been extended to them by his predecessor. We should have been glad if the Registrar was always to be chosen from the ranks of the Bar, but surely the next best thing will be to have a person who has been in active touch with the Bar and has also had judicial experience for a number of years.

Legal Profession and Legal Education.—Sir Lionel Leach took advantage of the opportunity afforded to deliver the convocation address at Annamalainagar to speak about the legal profession. His speech is of more than passing interest to the members of the Bar. It attempts an analysis of problems like overcrowding at the Bar and suggests some remedial measures. Overcrowding in the legal profession is by no means peculiar to our country, but the acuteness of the problem here may be gauged by the fact that there are at present more than 8,500 legal practitioners of various classes and grades in this presidency alone of whom very many are not in a position to earn their livelihood and—in the words of the learned Chief Justice—“never will be”, and this number is being reinforced annually at the rate of about 200 members by fresh enrolments. How wastage of much of such talent could be avoided is thus a question which demands an effective and quick solution. The learned Chief Justice points out that suggestions like the closing down of the Law College or regulating admission thereto or stopping of fresh enrolments or restricting the same, far from affording a solution to the problem will only give rise to fresh difficulties.

In considering the matter, we are glad to note that the learned Chief Justice approaches the question with an expression of belief in the efficacy of the single agency system as best suited to the Indian temperament and as minimising the costs of litigation considerably without any real loss of efficiency in general. According to him the first step therefore to a better state of affairs is to improve the system of legal education so as to provide for the curative as well as the preventive side of law, by affording instruction not merely in subjects constituting the equipment of a forensic practitioner but also in subjects concerned with the solicitor's side of the profession, such as conveyancing, company law, etc. This has to be achieved not by cutting down part of the present curricula of law studies but by providing for supplementary instruction in such subjects, whether as part of the law course at the Law College or outside it under the auspices of the Bar Council. Such a training if afforded may at the choice of a law student enable him to decide even at the outset what branch of an advocate's work he would like to specialise in, whether he would like to equip himself for a forensic career or for the less obtrusive but equally important and probably more remunerative side of the profession, namely, conveyancing and drafting, which in view of the increasing industrial and commercial activities of the country might come into increasing prominence in the future. Sir Lionel Leach is not in favour of divorcing legal education in the practitioner's sense from the University but would suggest a full co-operation between the Bar Council and the University in all matters of legal education. This view derives considerable support from the Report of the Legal Education Committee appointed in England by the Lord Chancellor in 1932.

Another step suggested by the learned Chief Justice to make the profession healthier is that the profession must ensure that the high standard of professional conduct that is demanded should be maintained throughout the profession. If the suggestion of the Chief Justice is that we should always strive to keep aloft the high ideals of the profession it would be unexceptionable. If the suggestion however is that the present position requires improvement then we should like to have fuller information. We are under the impression, —to quote a recent writer—that it is a matter for congratulation that “with such large numbers at the Bar, with such varied activities in which he is called upon to take responsible part, and with such opportunities and temptations to misconduct himself, he has not fallen from ‘his high estate’ with any frequency”. It may be noted that during 1934-1939, with the strength of the Advocate Bar ranging from 2712 to 3729 there were only 6 cases where practitioners were found culpable and punished.

The learned Chief Justice has also stressed the necessity for the maintenance of regular accounts by advocates and the keeping of their clients' money entirely separate from their own. The Instructions to the members of the Bar issued by the Bar Council are to the same effect. We should like to suggest that greater publicity should be given to such rules and instructions by the Bar Council providing each advocate with a copy thereof. New entrants to the profession might be given a copy of such rules at the time of their enrolment.

Another interesting suggestion made by the learned Chief Justice is that advocates should form themselves into partnerships in which some of the partners will be persons conducting cases in Court while others would concern themselves with work akin to that done by solicitors. It is not to be a partnership put on a commercial basis but one “where an advocate puts nothing in when he joins it and takes nothing out when he leaves it.” Such a partnership will be able to cope with all types of legal work and find place for men of talents.

The learned Chief Justice also indicates the desirability of the Bar being divided into seniors and juniors with a definition of the work which should be left ordinarily to juniors only. Taken along with Sir Maurice Gwyer's statement some time back on payment of fees to junior advocates, it is hoped that this suggestion will be considered by the Bar Council and appropriate principles formulated.

The Chancellor's Pension.—Somebody recently saw fit to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, among the Parliamentary flourishes of question time, whether in the interests of economy he proposed to repeal 2 and 3 Will. IV, c. 3. Until the dawn of that salutary time when those who serve the nation in public business (whether as M. P.'s or in some more responsible capacity) do so gratuitously and without any thought of present or future reward there seems little reason why the great office of the Lord Chancellor should be shorn of any more of its emoluments. The Act in question, which secures to the occupant of the Woolsack an annuity of £5,000 after he vacates it, was itself considered to effect a grave diminution in the desirability of that seat. Till then he had revelled in patronage, and the sinecures at his disposal had enabled him to provide handsomely for his descendants by means of those which he did not retain for himself. In all they were worth about £24,000 a year, and their duties could very conveniently be handed over to a deputy.—S.J., 1940, p. 439.

The United States President.—In view of the acceptance by Mr. Roosevelt of nomination for a third term as President of the United States—a step unprecedented in the history of the nation—it may be of interest to remind ourselves of the precise relationship of the presidential office to the Legislature and the Judiciary. With regard to legislation, it is required that every Bill, when passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes law, be presented to the President. If he approves, he signs it and thereupon it becomes law, but if perchance he disapproves, he may return it with his objections for further consideration. If, however, it is again approved by a two-thirds majority it becomes law notwithstanding the views of the President. With regard to the Judiciary, the Constitution has devolved upon the President the function of the nomination, and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the appointment, of the judges of the Supreme Court. When the organisation of that great tribunal was settled the interesting question arose regarding the costume of the judges. Should they wear gowns and wigs like their English confreres? Hamilton was in favour of the English wig and gown. Jefferson was against any needless official apparel, but if the gown was to be adopted, he added, "For Heaven's sake discard the monstrous wig which makes the English judges look like rats peeping through bunches of oakum." Burr was also opposed to the "inverted woolsack termed a wig." Eventually, the gown was adopted and the wig discarded. In its history the Supreme Court has had many notable judges, among these being John Marshall, of whom the late Lord Bryce said that he rendered such incomparable services in the office that the Americans have been wont to regard him as a special gift of favouring Providence.—S.J., 1940, p. 445.

Jagannatha Aiyangar v. Suppiah Chettiar.
C.R.P. No. 2262 of 1939.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 14—Hindu family debt—Respective liability of agriculturist and non-agriculturist members—Applicability and scope of S. 14.

If a debt is a family debt it must be a family debt with regard to everybody and the members are personally liable for their proportionate share of debt and they cannot be liable unless the debt is a contractual one. S. 14 is applicable to such a debt. Where there are two non-agriculturist and five agriculturist members in a joint Hindu family the non-agriculturists are liable for 2/7 of the unscaled debt while the agriculturists are liable for 5/7 of the scaled down debts. It is not necessary that the property should be split up into individual shares and each share made liable only for its own share of the family debt.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), S. 7 (v), (c)—Valuation for court fees at 15 times the nett profits—Profits of year previous to the filing of suit; in the nature of a windfall—If to be excluded from consideration—C. P. Code, S. 113—Revision—Decision on court fee in favour of plaintiff—Decision affecting jurisdiction—Interference in Revision.

In a suit for possession of land it was found that a portion of the land had been leased to the Municipality during the year previous to the filing of the suit at an annual rental of Rs. 186 for use as a nightsoil dumping ground. It was contended that this profit was in the nature of a windfall and should be excluded from consideration in determining the court-fee.

Held, S. 7 (v), (c) does not give to the Court any option to consider whether or not the nett profits for the year preceding the presentation of the plaint are exceptional or unusual. Such profits cannot be excluded from consideration.

Held further, where a decision of the lower appellate Court though on a question of court-fee directs the trial Court to assume a jurisdiction which it has not got, the High Court can interfere in revision.

On 4th March, 1933, the defendant executed a promissory note for Rs. 300 in favour of the plaintiff. In October of that year he paid Rs. 100 towards principal. On 18th November, 1935 the interest outstanding was paid off. In a suit for the balance of principal and interest from the date of coming into force of Act IV of 1938 it was contended that interest at 5 per cent. must be calculated from date of debt and added to the principal and the amounts actually paid should be deducted.

Held, the interest having been paid off in full the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the balance of the principal outstanding.

Held further, S. 12 entitled a creditor to interest on any sum remaining outstanding after the debt has been scaled down from the date upto which it has been scaled down that is, only from the date of the decree.

On a promissory note executed on 29th October, 1929 a suit was brought on 3rd January, 1938 and the written statement filed on 30th January, 1938. Though Madras Act (IV of 1938) came into force when the suit was pending, the defendant failed to put forward a claim to have the debt scaled down in accordance with the Act and a decree was passed on 18th April, 1938 for the full amount claimed by the plaintiff. The defendant then applied for scaling down the debt on 29th April, 1938.

Held, reading the Act as a whole the word "decree" in Ss. 7, 8 and 9 must be taken to refer to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act and the decree passed after the commencement of the Act cannot be scaled down.

On 26th March, 1928, petitioner executed a promissory note in settlement of an account starting from 1922. On 3rd April, 1928, he executed a second promissory note for a fresh advance. On 20th July, 1929, he executed a promissory note, for Rs. 4,600 for the amount due on the two promissory notes and a small amount in cash advanced at that time. In a suit on the promote there was a compromise decree on 8th August, 1932, for Rs. 7,160 for the debt, costs and subsequent interest and time was given till 1st October, 1932, for payment. In an application to scale down this compromise decree, Held, when there is a decree passed before the 1st October, 1932, in terms of a compromise, which itself is demonstrably a renewal of an anterior debt, the Court must scale down the debt, under s. 8 of the Madras Act, IV of 1938, treating as the principal the amount originally advanced together with the amount of any sums subsequently advanced. Whether a compromise is or is not a renewal of a pre-existing liability must to a large extent be a question of fact in every case. When a judgment-debtor applies under S. 19 of Madras Act, IV of 1938, to scale down a decree, he can prove payments which have not been certified for the purpose of satisfying the decree regarding costs. For other purposes the debtor would have to establish those payments in the ordinary way under the Civil Procedure Code, by getting them certified in Court, if he wants them to be taken into consideration as payments towards the decree.

O.R.P. No. 482 of 1940.

Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936), S. 25—Stay under—Procedure—Duration of stay—If can be fixed by the Court.

When an application to the Debt Conciliation Board is rejected for a formal defect under S. 7, the stay granted under S. 25 will cease to operate but when that application is re-presented it becomes once more a subsisting application under S. 4 and the provisions of S. 25 will come into force and the executing Court will be obliged when the fact of this re-presented application is brought to its notice to stay proceedings in execution. That stay will operate until the application is dismissed subject of course to the legal requirement that the application shall be disposed of within one year. It is not open to the Court to order stay for any particular period. The duration of the stay is fixed by Statute and out of the hands of the Court altogether.

Madras Debt Conciliation Act—Ss. 4 and 25—Stay of execution of money decrees pending proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 4—Court if can impose any conditions in staying proceedings.

In staying proceedings under S. 25 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, the Court cannot impose any conditions, for the power to impose a condition implies a corresponding power to dismiss the application if the condition is not fulfilled. The imposition of any condition is therefore ultra vires. The Court has no discretion but to stay. No petition for stay is necessary. The Court upon its attention being drawn to the fact that proceedings are pending before the Debt Conciliation Board is bound to stay whatever proceedings are before it in connection with that debt.

A obtained a decree against B, C, and D. X obtained a decree against B and his sons E and F. A had B arrested who was released on M standing surety for him. X brought B's properties to sale, but before the realisation of the sale proceeds, A had filed an execution petition against the surety M and on the strength of that claimed rateable distribution in the assets realised by X. It was contended by X that as A had filed an execution petition only against the surety M and not against the common judgment-debtor, he was not entitled to apply under S. 78, Held, an application under S. 145, O.P. Code, to execute a decree passed against B by proceeding against his surety M is an application to execute a decree passed against B so as to entitle the decree-holder to apply under S. 78, O.P. The widow of an undischarged insolvent instituted a suit on 21st June, 1937, claiming that a mortgage decree had been nominally transferred in favour of the defendant by her husband and that the defendant in execution of that decree bought the mortgaged properties himself and had them re-sold in two lots on 21st June, 1934, for Rs. 900 and on 12th September, 1934, for Rs. 800. It was claimed that the defendant was bound to pay the plaintiff the said sums with interest. To this suit the Official Receiver was added as party defendant though a decree was prayed for in favour of the widow. The lower Court recorded a finding that the suit was maintainable on the issue raised by the defendant as to the maintainability of the suit which was tried as a preliminary issue.

Held, that the revision petition was maintainable as the question of the jurisdiction of the Court arose directly for decision and as a decision on this question will terminate unnecessary proceedings. Further held, that suits were not maintainable by the insolvent or his representative till the annulment of the insolvency and that a suit, bad at the inception, could not be validated by a subsequent annulment.

After an earlier successful suit for cancelling a certain lease the plaintiffs filed a suit for past mesne profits. It was contended that this suit was barred by C. P. Code, O. 2, r. 2, on the ground that the claim for mesne profits should have been included in the earlier suit inasmuch as it arose out of the same cause of action. In the plaint in the earlier suit the plaintiff had stated that he intended to bring a separate suit in respect of past mesne profits.

Held, following I.L.R. 88 Mad. 829 (F.B.) and 51 M.L.J. 252 that the claim for mesne profits need not be included in a suit for recovery of possession of property in respect of which mesne profits are claimed by reason of O. 2, r. 2, C.P. Code.

61 M.L.J. 294 (P.C.) distinguished.

Held, further, whatever the reasons for the Courts granting time for payment of deficit Court-fee, the effect of the grant of time, even if it is after the claim is barred by limitation, is that the plaint takes effect as if it had been presented along with the full Court-fee on the date of its first presentation.

On default of payment by the appellant the appeal was dismissed. An application for review of the dismissal order was made stamped with a Court-fee of Rs. 2. The Court-fee examiner raised the objection that the application should be stamped ad valorem under Art. 4 of Sch. I as on a memorandum of appeal.

Held, the order of dismissal of the appeal for non-payment of Court-fee consequential to the order of dispaupering as well as for the non-furnishing of security under O. 41, r. 10 (2), must be deemed to be an order of dismissal for default and therefore is not a decree under S. 2 (2) of the C. Execution—Executing Court—If can question validity of decree—Insolvency of one of the defendants and failure to obtain leave to sue from Insolvency Court—If ground for questioning validity of decree in execution proceedings.

The executing Court has no power to question the validity of the decree. See 27 Mad. 118 and 28 Mad. 28. The executing Court has no power to question the validity of the decree on the ground of the insolvency of one of the defendants and the failure to obtain leave to sue. It is particularly undesirable to allow a judgment-debtor to raise such a plea where the decree has remained unquestioned since it was passed in 1917 till the execution in 1936.

Payments were made and appropriated after 1—10—1937 towards costs and interest on a decree on a debt anterior to 1—10—1932. It was contended that the reopening of the appropriations and then reappropriation according to Ss. 7 and 8 (1) will amount to a "refund" within the meaning of S. 8 (4) and therefore not permissible.

A decree was passed on 26—9—1936 on a mortgage debt of 1920 (which itself was in consolidation of previous debts on promissory notes) for which payments towards "principal and interest" had been made in 1923 and 1924. In an application to scale down the decree,

A purchaser of a hypotheca executed a promissory note to the mortgagee for the balance due under the mortgage. The mortgagor obtained a decree on the promissory note against the maker and his sons as members of a joint family. In an application by the son for scaling down the decree,

Held, when a member of a joint family executes a fresh document for a pre-existing liability binding on the family, but incurred on its behalf by another member such previous debt can be regarded as renewed or included in a fresh document within the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of the Act as the debtor in each case is the same person, namely, the joint family.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 8, Explanation—Original debt evidenced by promissory note of A, along with X and Y—Renewal by A, along with B and C—If debt in renewal of or inclusion in a fresh document in favour of some creditor—Debt of joint family—Promote of one member—Renewal by another member—Effect.

Renewal of a debt or its inclusion in a fresh document must be by the same debtor and when a member of a joint Hindu family executes a fresh document for a pre-existing liability binding on the family but incurred on its behalf by another member, such previous debt can be regarded as renewed or included in a fresh document within the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of the Act as the debtor in each case is the same person, namely, the joint family, vide S. 3 (i) of the Act.

It is not necessary for the application of explanation to S. 8 that the parties to the earlier and later debts should be absolutely identical. There may be cases in which a debt due jointly and severally from A and B is included in a fresh document executed by A alone or cases in which a debt solely due by A is included in a fresh document executed by A and B. The explanation to S. 8 of the Act is applicable to cases of that sort when the applicant for scaling down is a debtor under both the instruments. Even if the later transaction in such cases cannot be said to be a "renewal" in the strict sense of the term, it would amount to an inclusion of the pre-existing liability of the common debtor in the later document.

Ryots had encroached on neighbouring lands of the Zamindar within 12 years of filing of suits for eviction. The suits were decided in favour of the ryots and the appeals also were dismissed on the ground that the ryots had been in long possession and the encroachment was not proved. Before the time for filing a second appeal had elapsed the ryots entered into an agreement with the landlord and executed certain promissory notes in favour of the Zamindar. In a suit on the promotes, it was contended that there was no consideration and also that payments under it was in the nature of premia which could not be demanded of the ryots after they had been admitted into possession, as it is forbidden under S. 25 of the Madras Estates Land Act.

Held, the forbearance to file the second appeal was good consideration for the suit promissory notes. But S. 25 of the Estates Land Act has no application here at all as the amounts which the ryots agreed to pay under the promissory notes are not premia at all but amounts payable to the landlord by way of settlement of their disputes. The promissory notes are therefore enforceable.

In respect of a mortgage loan to a Nidhi, the interest stipulated was 6¼ per cent. payable every month. The bond also provided for default interest in case the interest and certain subscriptions to the Nidhi were not paid on due dates. In respect of the transaction it was found that towards a sum of Rs. 1,500, borrowed in February, 1927, a sum of Rs. 1,396-3-3 had been credited as part payment and the balance of Rs. 807-13-2 was sued for on closing of accounts in March, 1932. This was due to default interest imposed under the contract for default in payment of interest and subscriptions. The actual payments worked out at more than 9 per cent. per annum interest though the primary rate of interest was only 6¼ per cent. In an application for scaling down,

Held, as the interest works out at more than 9 per cent. per annum, S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Act cannot apply. The debtor can claim to have the debt scaled down under S. 8 of the Act. When money is borrowed and a larger sum is repaid the excess over principal must be treated as interest.

An appeal was filed after Act IV of 1938 came into force against a dismissal of a suit before the Act came into force. But there was no application for scaling down before the appellate Court. But the appellate judgment reserved the defendant's right to apply for relief under Act IV of 1938. This reservation was not included in the appellate decree. Thereafter the petitioner applied to the trial Court to scale down the appellate decree under S. 19 of the Act.

Held, a decree passed after the Act came into force cannot be scaled down. Kotayya v. Purnayya, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 202, followed.

Held, further, when a liability is being declared in the appellate Court's decree for the first time and a plea is open to the defendant under the Madras Act (IV of 1938), there should be a written application raising this plea before the appellate Court and on such application the appellate Court should either give its own decision or reserve in its decree the right to have the matter decided by the Court below. But in the absence of reservation in the appellate decree, the proper course for the defendant is to have the appellate decree brought in accordance with the judgment embodying a direction to the trial Court to deal with the application for relief under Act IV of 1938.

A mortgage was executed for about Rs. 10,000. Some time later, but before 1-10-32 a promissory note was executed by the mortgagor in favour of the son of the mortgagee for interest then due. A decree was obtained on the promissory note and in (1939) 1 M.L.J. 68 (affirmed in L.P.A. 100 of 1938) the objection of the debtor that the said decree could not be executed against the mortgaged properties under O. 84, r. 14, O.P.C., was overruled. Then he applied under S. 19 for scaling down the decree debt, in accordance with S. 8 of the Act. He contended that as the promissory note was executed in respect of interest due on the mortgage and in favour of the sons of the mortgagee it must be deemed to be a renewal of the earlier debt in favour of the 'same creditor' within the meaning of the explanation to S. 8 of the Act, and hence it must be deemed to have been discharged.

Held, (1) the promissory note was a renewal of the earlier mortgage debt;

(2) in regard to decrees based on promissory note, it is not permissible to contend that the decree-holder is a benamidar for other persons.

In a suit against the endorser of a promissory note of 23rd January, 1924, which was endorsed to the plaintiff on 28-1-1933, a decree was passed against both. The endorser applied for scaling down.

Held, the liability of the endorser was a personal liability the basis of which was his endorsement though the quantum of liability was the original debt of the pre-existing promissory note and the debt is one incurred after 1-10-1932 and must be scaled down under S. 9 of the Act.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 10 (2) (ii)—Payment of price and execution of sale deed in favour of X—Agreement by X before registration to have the land conveyed by the vendor to Y direct—Y paying cash and executing a promissory note to X—Registered sale executed by vendor in favour of Y—Y executing a mortgage next day in favour of X to cover the amount due on the promissory note—Liability under—If excluded by S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938.

A sale deed in respect of land was executed in favour of X who paid the price to the vendor. But before the registration of the sale deed X entered into an agreement to have the land conveyed by the vendor to Y direct. Accordingly Y paid some cash and executed a promissory note to X. The sale deed in favour of Y was duly registered and the next day Y executed a mortgage in favour of X to cover the amount due on the promissory note executed the previous day. An application to scale down this debt was resisted on the ground that this was a liability excluded by S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938.

Held, X was not the seller of the property for he had no interest which he could convey. The title remained with the vendor at the time of the transfer to Y and though the vendor was under an obligation to X that obligation did not have the effect of vesting any title in the petitioner. X cannot therefore be regarded as a seller and the amount due from Y will not carry any charge such as if provided in S. 55 (4) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act.

59 Mad. 910 (P.C.) and 50 Mad. 193 distinguished.

The liability therefore is not excluded from the scaling down provisions by the operation of S. 10 (2) (ii) of Act IV of 1938.

In 1922 the territorial jurisdiction over the properties against which execution was sought was transferred to the District Court, Vizagapatam. In 1935 or 1936, the jurisdiction was again transferred from District Court, Vizagapatam, to Sub-Court, Chicacole. In July, 1933, an execution petition was filed in the Sub-Court, Vizagapatam, for attachment and sale of properties then situate within that Court's jurisdiction. There was however no application for transfer of decree to the proper Court for execution. In 1935, the decree-holder filed an original petition to the District Court, Vizagapatam requesting the District Judge to withdraw the execution petition of 1933 to the file of the District Court, which at that time had jurisdiction over the properties. But before the District Judge passed orders he ceased to have jurisdiction and so the application was dismissed by the District Judge. On 20th July, 1936, the Sub-Judge, Vizagapatam, suo motu, ordered the records in the Execution Petition to be sent to Sub-Court, Chicacole, for execution. At Chicacole the Execution Petition was given a new number.

N R C

The judgment-debtors took objection to the jurisdiction of the Court to proceed with the execution.

Held; where a decree is sent suo motu by the Court which passed the decree to another Court for execution (the other Court not being a subordinate Court) the transferee Court has no jurisdiction to execute the decree in the absence of an application from decree-holders for such transfer and in the absence of certificate of partial execution or non-execution from the Court which passed the decree.

Sale was ordered and notice of the proclamation of sale was issued under O. 21, r. 66 to the respondent (a claimant) who filed objections contending that the site in question was not included in the boundaries and that respondent had to be paid for buildings on the site as improvements. As respondent made no attempt to substantiate his contentions the sale was ordered to be held on 27th February 1935. There was no sale on that day and after a fresh proclamation 5th June was fixed for sale. On 4th June, 1935, the respondent applied under S. 47, C. P. Code, for an order excluding the property in dispute from the sale.

Held, the application is barred by res judicata.

Suit on mortgage—First mortgagee purchasing a part of the hypotheca in execution of decree on puisne mortgage in his own favour—Rights of parties.

A first mortgagee who had become a purchaser of a part of the hypotheca in Court sale in execution of a decree on a puisne mortgage in his own favour, filed a suit for the full mortgage amount due on his first mortgage against the other items of property. The defendants pleaded that they were liable to pay only proportionate part of the amount due as the properties purchased by the mortgagee would themselves be liable to contribute rateably, and claimed that the value of the properties as on the date of the mortgage must be taken as the basis for working out the ratio. The plaintiff contended that in any event the value as on the date of purchase should be taken, as a mortgagee would be entitled to the benefit of the subsequent improvements on the hypotheca which will be an accretion to the security.

Held, that the accretion only augmented the security and did not affect the quantum of the amount claimable by the plaintiff.

Held, further, that though S. 82 of the Transfer of Property Act did not directly apply, as this is not a suit for contribution, still the right of parties should be adjusted in the light of the principles underlying S. 82.

43 Mad. 372 (F.B.) followed.

Held, also, that for the purpose of calculating the proportionate liability the value of the property as on the date of mortgage should be taken.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 10 (2) (4)—Promissory note executed for balance of purchase price of land—Indorsee of promissory note—Liability—If excluded by S. 10 (2) (4) of the Act as one for which a charge is provided by S. 55 (iv) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act.

In February, 1923, a promissory note was executed for the balance of purchase price of certain lands. This promissory note was twice renewed and the last renewed note of 1923 was assigned in 1936 to the plaintiff by endorsement. The plaintiff obtained a decree on the promissory note. In an application for scaling down this debt the question arose whether S. 10 (2) (4) of Act IV of 1938 excluded the operation of the scaling down provisions to the liability as one in respect of which a charge was provided under S. 55 (iv) (b) of the Transfer of Property Act.

(Assuming that 44 Mad. 965 is correct, though there is some conflict of authority.)

Held, that the intention of the Legislature was to specify those classes of liabilities in respect of which the scaling down provisions of Act IV of 1938 were not to operate and that the exclusion of liabilities of these categories was not to depend on the actual subsistence of the charge but on the question whether in the beginning the liability was one belonging to that category in respect of which the Transfer of Property Act provided a charge. The applicability of S. 10 (2) (iv) of Act IV of 1938 is not affected by the assignment of this liability.

Under S. 15 of Act IV of 1938 ‘only arrears of rent payable to a jenmi or intermediary could be deemed to be discharged by depositing the rent for faslis 1346 and 1347 but the liability to an assignee of such arrears of rent could not be scaled down. Substantially the provisions of S. 72 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act are analogous to those of S. 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the Insolvency Court should give notice to the insolvent before directing his prosecution and a decision directing the prosecution for the offence of obtaining credit without disclosing his bankruptcy is a decision against which the insolvent as the aggrieved party has a right of appeal similar to that provided by S. 476 of Criminal Procedure Code. The correctness of the dismissal of such an appeal by the District Judge can be canvassed in revision.

A.I.R. 1938 Nag. 9, referred.

Where the Court had declined to proceed with a prosecution under S. 72 owing to the absence of the person who laid the information and subsequent proceedings are taken when the Court had before it more materials no question of res judicata arises and if it is a mere question whether the order of the Court is wise or unwise it is not a matter that should be gone into in revision. Where a prosecution is launched and the appellate Court declines to stop it the discharge of the insolvent before the appeal was dismissed cannot make those proceedings void.

S, executed a mortgage of his property to M, on 9th August, 1921, to secure Rs. 5,000 and he executed on 6th January, 1923, a second mortgage of the property to M, to secure a further advance of Rs. 1,000. On 4th July, 1924, S executed a usufructuary mortgage of the property in favour of E for Rs. 1,000 in which the following passage appeared: 'If we commit default in respect of any condition you shall bring the said property to a public or private sale take the principal and interest and also the auction expense as per account, pay M if any debts incurred for the benefit of our family has to be paid to him in respect of the said property and pay the balance if any to us'.

Held, there is no acknowledgment of the earlier mortgage debt within the meaning of S. 19 of the Limitation Act. For S. 19 to apply the words used must be words which clearly indicate an acknowledgment of liability of the particular debt.

A mortgage was executed by S on 16-8-1917 in favour of the plaintiffs. On 13-12-1923 the wife and daughter of S (defendants 1 and 2) executed a fresh mortgage in renewal of the earlier one, by S. On 27-12-1938 defendants 1 and 2 sold the hypotheca to the 4th defendant who undertook to discharge the mortgage by payment of Rs. 2,500 out of the purchase price. Then a suit on the mortgage resulted in a compromise decree by which defendants 2 and 4 were to satisfy the decree by paying Rs. 1,500 by 24th August, 1935 and Rs. 2,050 by 16th July, 1936 but in default of such payments the decree was to be a final decree for the full plaint claim (Rs. 4,848-8-0) with interest and costs. Towards the decree Rs. 500 was paid on 1-8-1936, Rs. 1,000 on 18-7-1936 and Rs. 1,000 on 5-1-1937.

The 4th defendant filed an application under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 for scaling down.

Held: (1) The Liability sought to be scaled down is not the Liability of the 4th defendant to her vendors but the Liability to the mortgagees and consequently S. 10 (2) (4) of Act IV of 1938 has no applicability. (2) The Liability under the compromise decree was a renewal of the previous mortgage Liability. (3) When both the original mortgagor and his purchaser are agriculturists, the purchaser can claim to have the debt scaled down on the basis that the mortgage debt for which the purchaser of the hypotheca became liable is itself a renewal of an earlier debt in favour of the same creditor. (4) The provisions of S. 11 like those of S. 19 relate only to costs originally decreed and do not cover costs of execution.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 8 (1), Proviso B and C—Assessment to profession-tax—Criterion for applying Proviso B—Date of assessment or period of assessment—Some properties assessed in name of husband and others in name of wife—Applicability of Proviso C to S. 8 (1).

The assessment to profession-tax of a debtor was actually made on 15-1-1938 but it was retrospective and covered the half year beginning 1-4-1937:

Held, S. 187-B of the City Municipal Act contemplates the assessment being retrospective but does not provide that the date of assessment shall be deemed to fall within the period to which the assessment relates. It is impossible to read the words of Proviso B to S. 3 (4) of Act 1938 as if the criterion for exclusion was the actual period for which the tax was payable and not the time within which the assessment was made. The absence of a provision for entry of date of assessment in form B cannot control the meaning of the Act.

A husband and wife were co-mortgagors and the husband was assessed on properties having an annual rental of Rs. 300 and the wife on properties with rental value of Rs. 432. The mortgagee claimed that the husband was the real owner and excluded from benefits of Act IV of 1938 by reason of Proviso C to S. 3 (*) of the Act.

Held, Proviso C to S. 3 (4) of the Act clearly requires that in order to come within its scope an individual must have been actually assessed, and it is not sufficient that he is interested in property in respect of which somebody else has been assessed.

On a promissory note dated 21—6—1933 for Rs. 8,000 a decree was passed for Rs. 8,400 principal and interest with Rs. 387 for costs. On 28—2—1937 the respondent purchased the judgment-debtor's property in execution for Rs. 8,406 for which amount part satisfaction was entered on 17—7—1937. On 30—8—1937 a fresh E. P. was filed claiming Rs. 678—18—0 as the balance due under the decree. In an application for scaling down;

Held, the payment of Rs. 8,406 cannot be regarded as a payment to the debt generally, kept in suspense and not appropriated. The payment being more than sufficient to cover all the interest on the debt, the debtor will not be benefited by any re-appropriation from principal to costs under the proviso to S. 19.

The petitioner owned the kudivaram in certain lands in an estate under the Madras Estates Land Act, which was paying Rs. 1,200 as peishkash. He purchased the samin rights and was recognised as landholder by the Collector. In 1934 he executed two usufructuary mortgages each covering one moiety of the samin right in the estate. He retained his ryoti lands and became the tenant of his mortgagees in respect of those lands. In 1935 the respondent one of the mortgagees obtained from the Collector recognition as the "landholder". In an application for scaling down, Held, notwithstanding the recognition of the respondent as the landholder the petitioner as owner of the estate must also be deemed to be a landholder within the definition in S. 3 (5) of the Madras Estates Land Act. He is therefore not an agriculturist under Act IV of 1938 and disentitled to the benefits conferred by S. 15 of the Act.

S. 23 is applicable to sales in execution of any decree whereby immovable property in which an agriculturist is entitled to the benefits of the Act has been sold and if the application is made within 90 days of the commencement of the Act the Court is obliged if satisfied that the applicant is entitled to the benefits of the Act, to set aside the sale after giving notice to the persons interested and hearing them. The absence in the section of a non obstante provision regarding what is contained in the Madras Estates Land Act, the absence of any necessity for confirmation of sale under S. 181 of the Estates Land Act, and the absence of provisions in S. 23 regarding setting aside sales under the summary provisions contained in Ss. 112 to 118 of the Estates Land Act are not an indication that S. 23 would have no application to sales for arrears of rent. "Any decree" in S. 23 will include decrees under the Estates Land Act.

The mere holding of a sale will not wipe off the arrears of rent. The arrears will remain outstanding until the proceeds of sale are paid to the landholder. Apart from the question whether the tenants were entitled to benefits under S. 15 they are clearly entitled to benefits under the Act in respect of the decrees as regards interest on costs and under Ss. 8 and 9 "Rent" includes rent covered by a decree.

The Court had therefore no option but to set aside the sales.

The tenant's legal representatives applied under S. 23 to have the sale set aside.

Held, though the tenant may not be entitled to any benefit under S. 15, as against the assignee decree-holder, the decree being for rent with interest and costs the tenant might be entitled to relief under Ss. 8 and 9 of the Act, and so the application under S. 23 is maintainable, as the tenant is an agriculturist entitled to the benefits of the Act, and the sale must be set aside.

The purchaser of the equity of redemption in a sale in execution of a money decree against the mortgagors claimed to have the mortgage decree amended under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938.

Held, in the absence of any definition in the Act, there is no obvious reason why the term "judgment-debtor" should not be understood as including a person whose liability is a "debt", as defined by the Act, more especially as that definition includes a judgment debt. 80 Mad. 537, applied. Decision of Horwilt, J., (1940) 2 M.L.J. 317, overruled.

A power-house was erected by the Palani Devasthanam on the Hill. It was contended that the Hill having been set apart for public worship and the Hill continuing to be used for public worship the power-house on the Hill was not taxable as it was exempted under S. 83 (i) (a).

Held, if electricity had been used only for lighting the temple and its approaches the Devasthanam will be entitled to exemption. Section 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938 has no application to decrees passed after the Act came into force, one reason being that any person who has a contention to urge which will affect such a decree must urge it in the pending proceedings, and if he does not so urge he must be taken to have waived it. There is no reason to apply a different principle to proceedings in appeal of which the affected party has notice. Accordingly where an application to scale down a decree (against which an appeal is pending) is dismissed, and an appeal against such order of dismissal is not clubbed with the main appeal which is allowed to be decreed ex parte by the debtor, then after the disposal of the main appeal substituting the appellate decree for the decree sought to be scaled down, the original decree cannot be scaled down and an appeal against dismissal of the application for scaling down under S. 19 becomes infructuous and must be dismissed.

Even in respect of sale of mortgaged properties after 1st October, 1937, it is not enough that the judgment-debtor is the owner of the mortgaged properties to entitle him to the benefit of Ss. 19 and 23 of the Act. Under the proviso to S. 23 notice to the puisne mortgagee is necessary and if he is not impleaded and notice has gone only to the decree-holder auction-purchaser, the terms of the proviso are not complied with.

One of three trustees filed a suit for recovering monies on behalf of the trust (impleading the other trustees as defendants) against certain 3rd parties. Pending the suit the plaintiff was removed from his office and as the successor did not come on record the trial Court dismissed the suit. Against the decision an appeal was filed by the plaintiff and three other worshippers (who were not parties to the suit) and the appellate Court remanded the suit on the ground that the plaintiff who was competent to institute the suit, could continue it. An appeal was filed against the order of remand and pending it the plaintiff died.

Held, that the worshippers who came on record for the first time in the appeal could not maintain the appeal and as the only person who could continue the suit was the plaintiff who is dead and as it is not a case where the legal representatives of the plaintiff could continue the suit, the order of remand has become inappropriate and should be set aside.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182, cl. (5)—"In accordance with law"—What is?

A suit on a promissory note was originally decreed ex parte on 1st October, 1929, against three defendants. Subsequently on the application of the first defendant the ex parte decree was set aside against him alone on his depositing a certain amount. Later on a revised decree was passed on 27-6-1930 against all the defendants for a certain amount, after giving credit to the deposit in Court made by the first defendant and drawn out by the plaintiff. Thereafter the decree-holder proceeded to execute the decree against the first defendant claiming by mistake the larger amount awarded under the decree of 1-10-1929 and also filing a certified copy of the said decree. When the decree-holder discovered the mistake, he hastened to rectify the same and have the sale of the first defendant's properties which had meanwhile taken place set aside.

Subsequently on 19-7-1937 the decree-holder filed an execution petition against defendants 2 and 3 who pleaded the bar of limitation on the ground that the previous petitions against the first defendant would not save limitation.

Held, reversing the decisions of the Courts below that the liability of the defendants was there all the time, that the decree-holder was all along seeking to enforce the liability of the defendants and that the claim for excessive amount and the non-mention of the later decree of 27-6-1930 would not make the petitions be otherwise than in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 182, cl. (5) of the Limitation Act.

The petitioner, the mother of the judgment-debtor who was mentally infirm, applied under O. 82, r. 16, C. P. Code, for the appointment of a guardian ad litem to apply for scaling down the decree debt. The petitioner was desirous of adducing evidence especially in the shape of a doctor's certificate, but no opportunity was given for this purpose as the lower Court was of opinion that the production of the medical certificate would not advance the case any further. In revision, Held, that as the effect of the dismissal of the application would be to prevent the application of the provisions of Madras Act IV of 1938 to a case to which they may apply, it was incumbent on the Court to hold a judicial inquiry and allow the parties to adduce evidence.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 144—Decree-holder assigning decree to third party during pendency of revision petition against decree—Third party realising decree amount—Re-trial ordered in revision—Decree for smaller amount in re-trial—Restitution.

S. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure is worded in the most comprehensive terms and it should be widely construed. Its object is to put right what was originally an error of the Court and to restore the parties to the position they would have occupied. The word 'party' should be given a wide meaning, so as to include persons who would become subsequently concerned.

Thus where a decree-holder when a revision petition was pending assigns the decree to a third party who realises the amount and in a re-trial a smaller amount is decreed a claim to restitution as against the original decree-holder arises.

The fact that a party to a suit (a plaintiff) who has obtained a decree wrongly against another person prefers to get the immediate benefit of it by a sale or transfer, rather than waiting to execute against the party, in no way affects the right of the original party defendant to recover in restitution what he has paid over under pressure of the original erroneous decree. The fact that he paid it over to a nominee of the original plaintiff is wholly irrelevant to his right to recover against the person who caused him to make that payment, namely the original plaintiff.

Defendants 1 and 2 executed a promissory note on 4-1-1931 and defendants 3 to 5 gave a letter of guarantee, dated 7-8-1938, in respect of the debt. There was a compromise decree for Rs. 5,000 for the debt including interest and costs against all the defendants. Subsequently defendants 1 and 5 applied by separate applications for scaling down the decree debt.

Held, (1) that the 5th defendant was entitled to have his liability under the letter of guarantee scaled down with reference to S. 9 and not with reference to S. 8 of the Act;

(2) that a decree on a compromise is substantially the same as a decree on any other contract and to the extent to which the compromise is a renewal of a pre-existing debt the decree has to be scaled down with reference to the principal originally advanced. (1940) 2 M.L.J. 298, followed;

(3) that it is not proper for the Court to reopen the compromise, tax the costs and appropriate the payment first towards the costs under the proviso to S. 19. (1940) 2 M.L.J. 478, followed;

A.A.O. No. 661 of 1938.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 8, Explanation—Scope—Son estopped from questioning liability under a mortgage after partition by his father which he had attested—Subsequent mortgage by the son of his own property in discharge of father's mortgage debt—If renewal of earlier debt.

Although it had been held that a son was estopped from disputing the liability of his property under a mortgage by his father after partition by reason of his attestation of the mortgage, it cannot be said that a fresh mortgage executed by the son alone binding only his own property and discharging his father's mortgage is merely a renewal of the son's own liability. There is a complete novatio which cannot be treated as a renewal by the same debtor.

O.M.A. No. 118 of 1939.

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 19—Final decree of 19-8-1937 on mortgage—Private sale of some items of hypotheca on 9-10-1937—Vendee directed to pay decree-holder—Balance remaining unpaid by vendee, a non-agriculturist—Debt scaled down to zero by operation of damdupat rule—Vendee if can be impleaded and made liable for the debt as a non-agriculturist.

After final decree on a mortgage some items of the hypotheca were sold on 9-10-1937 and the vendee was directed to pay the mortgagee decree-holder. A portion of the consideration remained unpaid when the debtor applied for entering up satisfaction of the decree, (more than twice the amount of the principal and costs having been paid towards the decree). The creditor sought to implead the vendee, a non-agriculturist, and make him liable for the balance due under the decree applying the principle laid down in O.B.P. No. 1534 of 1938.

Held, that the vendee cannot be impleaded as he has no separate rights to agitate in the execution of the decree, that he was not party to the decree and scaling down cannot be restricted to the judgment-debtor agriculturist's interest in the property in his possession inasmuch as that will result in splitting up of the decree against the only party to the decree, and that the principle in O.B.P. No. 1574 of 1938 will not apply in that the vendee was not a party to the suit.

Under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 the Court has no jurisdiction to reduce the principal of a decree debt except on the grounds laid down in the Act. A decree debt cannot be reduced merely on the basis that the decree did not give effect to a contention which might have been but was not raised. Accordingly where a decree fixed as the principal the total amount of the future instalments under a chit, the principal so fixed cannot be reduced in proceedings for scaling down.

In execution of a decree on two promissory notes the judgment-debtor's properties were sold in execution prior to 1-10-1937 and purchased by the decree-holder who had obtained leave to bid and set off the purchase-money towards his decree amount. An application to set aside the sale under Civil Procedure Code, O. 21, r. 90 was pending when the defendants applied under S. 19 of Act IV of 1938 for scaling down the debt.

A petition under S. 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act for annulment of adjudication was filed by another creditor who alleged that, there was no debt owing to the petitioning creditor and the adjudication ought not to have been made as it was the result of collusion. The District Judge after admitting the documents filed forwarded the records to the Official Receiver to inquire into the matter and record the deposition of witnesses. Acting on that evidence the District Judge annulled the adjudication. On appeal, objection was taken for the first time to the procedure adopted in delegating the taking of evidence to the Official Receiver. The respondent contended that the objection ought to have been taken at the earliest opportunity and should not be allowed to be raised for the first time on appeal and that on the authority of 22 C.W.N. 700 it was open to the District Judge to "direct the Official Receiver to enquire and report for his own information".

Held, that the District Judge had no power to delegate to the Official Receiver the duty to inquire into the facts of the case and the fictitious character of the debt due to the petitioning creditor.

On 18-8-1928 E and V and the other two sons of P who had not joined in the execution of the earlier promissory notes executed two promissory notes for Rs. 5,400 and Rs. 2,200 to X and Y respectively in renewal of the two promissory notes of 1925. In June, 1931, V separated himself from his brothers, and the other three brothers who continued joint, executed promissory notes for Rs. 5,968 and Rs. 2,425 respectively in settlement of the debts due under the notes of 1928. X and Y obtained decrees on 16-9-1933 and 6-2-1933 on their respective promissory notes. The lower Court scaled down the decrees with reference to the principal sum of the promissory note of 14-8-1922 apportioning the amount scaled down between the two decree-holders in the ratio of Rs. 4,900 to 2,600. On appeals by the decree-holders,

Held, (1) that the various notes were executed on behalf of the joint family of P and his sons, and the debtors were substantially the same being the joint family. (1940) 2 M.L.J. 651, followed;

(2) that the creditor in respect of each set of promissory notes executed subsequent to the partition in the creditor's family is the same, namely X and Y respectively. The debt due under each of these decrees can be traced back through successive renewals to the two promissory notes of 14-8-1922;

(3) the earliest note of 14-8-1922 having been executed to S the father, and the debt having been split up at the subsequent partition between X and Y cannot be said to be renewed or included in a fresh document within the meaning of the Explanation to S. 8, although the sums for which the later promissory notes were executed were equal in the aggregate to the original debt. The scaling down process will therefore have to stop with and not go beyond the two promissory notes in favour of X and Y respectively of 19-8-1925.

It was claimed that the declaration by the Local Government was final in regard to the factum of election and cannot be questioned in a Civil Court.

Held, that there is no provision making a declaration by the Local Government under S. 19 to be final in regard to the factum of election and the Civil Court was entitled to entertain the claim and adjudicate on the question whether the election was held or not. If the finding in the suit was that no election was held in fact the suit for declaration can be decreed and an injunction granted.

There is no necessity for any special letter of request from the Amherst Court. Hindu Law—Adoption by widow—Validity—Consent of sapindas—Absence of consent of nearest male sapinda—Consent of co-widow, mother-in-law and remoter male sapindas—If sufficient.

* Impartible estate—Renunciation by father in favour of eldest son—Effect on nature of estate in the hands of the son—Settlement deed by holder of impartible estate providing for maintenance of his brother—Rotal that there was to be no relationship except by blood—Effect on right of survivorship.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), Ss. 32 and 73—Affidavits in another suit not ante litem motam—Admissibility—Certified copies of letters filed in another suit—When admissible as public documents in evidence.

A, the senior widow of the holder of an impartible estate, adopted X with the written consent of her mother-in-law, her co-widow, and three other remoter male sapindas. The consent of her husband's paternal uncles B and C was not obtained. As regards B she formally wrote a letter asking for his consent but did not wait to ascertain his views on the propriety of the proposed adoption, and made the adoption before receiving any reply from him. As regards C she did not ask for his consent at all. In a suit by C for the recovery of possession of the zemindary properties on the footing that he was the nearest surviving coparcener, Held, (i) the consent of the co-widow and mother-in-law as female sapindas, in the absence of the consent of the nearest male sapindas was not sufficient to make the adoption valid. Observations in 12 M.I.A. 442 at p. 444, 39 Mad. 772 and 48 Mad. 1 at p. 204, explained. 41 Mad. 998 at 1004, applied.

(ii) The consent of the remoter sapindas will not validate the adoption in the absence of the consent of B and C, the nearer sapindas, without proof that their consent was improperly withheld.

(iii) When the consenting sapindas have been parties along with the widow in setting up a false case as to the existence of oral authority in favour of the widow by her husband, the consent cannot be held to be bona fide given in the spiritual interests of the deceased husband.

(iv) When the zemindar during his life time renounced his rights in favour of his eldest son and later on executed a will stating that he had already renounced his estate and disposing of his other separate property with provision for maintenance to his younger sons from the zemindary property in the hands of the holder, the property in the hands of the eldest son cannot be regarded as his separate property. It was merely an acceleration of succession by renunciation and there is no change in the joint family character of the estate. I.L.R. 1939 Mad. 448 : (1939) 1 M.L.J. 814, distinguished. Such a renunciation need not be in writing. S. 9 of the Transfer of Property Act applied and 24 Mad. 377, distinguished.

(v) Where a Zemindar and his brother entered into a settlement under which the latter was to receive maintenance from out of the income of the zemindary and the settlement recited that thenceforward 'except blood relationship there shall be no relationship as regards properties' the words are not enough to constitute an express renunciation of all the prospective rights of succession by survivorship to the zemindary which is necessary under Hindu law. 10 Mad. 834, 20 Mad. 265, applied. 1 Mad. 812, 5 C.L.B. 499, distinguished. 43 All. 228, 51 Mad. 189, 59 Cal. 1899, 56 All. 468, referred to.

(vi) Affidavits of third parties filed in proceedings in the revenue Courts in Hyderabad relating to the enquiry as to succession to zemindary property in Hyderabad stating that an adoption took place, tendered in evidence under S. 32 (6) of the Evidence Act will be inadmissible in evidence under that provision since they were not ante litem motam but are admissible under sub-S. (7) as relating to a transaction as is mentioned in S. 18 (a). Case-law discussed.

(vii) Copies of letters filed in proceedings in Hyderabad bearing certificates of the Resident that the document is the copy of a public document of the Hyderabad State are not public documents within the meaning of S. 74 of the Evidence Act in the absence of proof that the originals of the documents have ever been filed in those proceedings.

After an unconditional order of annulment under S. 43 a creditor applied for review of the order under O. 47, C.P. Code, which was refused. He preferred an appeal under S. 75 (1) to the District Judge who directed the revesting of the properties under S. 37. On revision to the High Court, Held, (1) that an appeal lies to the District Court under S. 75, CL (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act from every order of the Insolvency Court;

(2) that S. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act makes the review provisions applicable to the Insolvency Court;

(3) that an appeal can be preferred by an aggrieved person, and he is not barred from appealing from the order refusing to review. A.I.R. 1935 Pat. 177, dissented from;

Court-fees—Court's inherent power to order refund of court-fees—When exercised.

In an appeal in the High Court reversing the dismissal of a suit by the trial Court on the ground that there was no right of suit, the suit was remanded for trial on the merits. An appeal was preferred to the Privy Council. A stay prayed for by the defendant in the trial Court was opposed by the plaintiffs and was not granted and the suit was decided against the plaintiffs. Thereupon an appeal was preferred to the High Court and was pending when the decision of the Privy Council was announced deciding that there was no right of suit, which meant that the appeal could not be proceeded with. The appellant then applied for an order under the Court's inherent powers for the refund of the court-fees paid on the appeal.

Held, the appellants having opposed the application for stay and insisted that the suit should proceed notwithstanding that the appeal was pending in the Privy Council, there was no reason whatever for the Court to exercise its inherent powers to order refund of court-fees.

Where a decree-holder shortly before obtaining a decree had applied for attachment before judgment of another decree which his judgment-debtor had obtained and the attachment though ordered soon after, was effected actually some days after the judgment was passed, and was made absolute some months later, in an application for executing the decree made 5 years after its date and for a share in the rateable distribution of certain assets in deposit in Courts,

Held, that though attachment was ordered before judgment still as it was effected after judgment it was permissible to look upon it as an attachment in execution and though that attachment in consequence gave a right to the decree-holder, under O. 21, r. 53 (3), Civil Procedure Code, to execute the attached decree or to share in the realisations therefrom, nevertheless the execution of the decree in regard to any other asset should be deemed to be barred, because no application in execution had been made for 5 years.

Held also, that the pendency of a proceeding in regard to an attached property which was intended to make it available for the creditor, was no excuse to the decree-holder for not making his application earlier and the decree-holder's coming on the record of those proceedings and taking an interest in their prosecution could not be looked upon as a step-in-aid of execution so as to save the later application from the bar of limitation.

By the settlement properties were given by the settlor to his wife 'to live in and enjoy for her maintenance'. It was established that she had become unchaste after the lifetime of her husband and it was contended that the life estate was forfeited by her on account of misconduct.

Held, in the absence of any dum casta clause in the settlement deed under which the property had come to vest in the wife for her life, no forfeiture can be found to have been incurred by her on the ground of her subsequent unchastity.

A person who wants an agreement on conveyance to be declared invalid on account of its being opposed to public policy has to prove the grounds which would bring it under S. 28, Indian Contract Act.

Practice—Appeal—Official Receiver in insolvency refusing to appeal—Creditor if entitled to appeal.

N R C

An Official Receiver having failed in a suit to set aside a sale and in the first appeal thereon, a creditor obtained leave of the High Court to appeal in his own name on an ex parte application and filed the second appeal. On the question of the locus standi of the appellant (creditor) to file the appeal, Held, the Official Receiver is not a representative of the creditors and it is not possible for the creditors to ignore him or act independently of him and file an appeal against a decision which the Official Receiver refuses to appeal against. In a suit on behalf of the estate of the insolvent the Official Receiver appears in his individual capacity and a creditor has no independent right of appeal against the decision.

57 Mad. 670, followed.

The leave to file the appeal granted to the creditor ex parte in the High Court cannot prejudice the interests of those against whom the order was passed. The proper course for such a creditor wishing to appeal is to move the Insolvency Court under S. 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act and to apply for a reversal of the refusal of the Official Receiver to prefer an appeal to the High Court or for a direction to him to appeal or in the alternative ask for permission to appeal in the name of the Official Receiver.

Plaintiff sued to redeem a usufructuary mortgage of 1894 in which the defendant-mortgagee was allowed to utilise the profits towards the interest due to him but was directed to pay the rent due to the superior landlord the jennu every year. The mortgagee failed to pay the rent due to the jennu and the jennu filed a suit against the mortgagor and the mortgagee for eviction and obtained a decree therefor. The property of a deceased mortgagee was claimed by an alleged adopted son and X another claimant challenged the adoption in a suit. By a compromise in the suit the adopted son and X were recognised as entitled to a half-share each in the properties of the deceased mortgagee. In a suit on the mortgage by the adopted son X claiming that he was entitled to half of the mortgage amount applied under O. 1, r. 10, C. P. Code, to be impleaded as a party.

Held, although the claim of X is adverse to the plaintiff it is one which ought to be decided before a decree was given in the mortgage suit. Otherwise the mortgagor would be liable to another suit on the same mortgage and the decree in the plaintiff's suit would not enable the mortgagor to satisfy the claim under the mortgage by payment of the amount due to the plaintiff. O. 84, r. 1 requires that all persons having an interest in the mortgage security shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage. Accordingly X is entitled to be added as a necessary party to the suit.

Referred Case No. 28 of 1940.

Legal Practitioner—Addressing a letter to a clerk in a Magistrate's Office asking that an application filed by him should be dealt with urgently—Propriety.

It is improper for an advocate to address a letter to a clerk in a Magistrate's Office asking that an application filed by him should be dealt with urgently. The proper course for a legal practitioner, if there was any delay, is to bring the matter to the notice of the presiding officer of the Court.

Where the summons is served on a defendant too late to afford him sufficient opportunity of appearing at the hearing of the suit, it is not a case of a summons "duly served" within the meaning of O. 9, r. 18, C. P. Code. In such cases the Court ought to issue fresh summons. An omission on the part of such a defendant to prosecute inquiry which might have led to a knowledge of the date of hearing cannot be regarded as culpable or wilful so as to carry with it the consequence of "knowledge". Such a defendant will be within time if he applies for setting aside the ex parte decree within 80 days of actual knowledge of the decree.

NOTES OF INDIAN CASES.

GOKUL CHANDRA DAS v. MANAGER, BENIACHANG MAJUMDARI
WARD ESTATE, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 73.

The question considered in this case is whether a manager appointed by the Court of Wards of a ward's estate is a "public officer" within the meaning of S. 2 (17) of the Civil Procedure Code, and consequently whether a notice of suit should be given to him prior to the institution of a suit. The point arose under the Bengal Court of Wards Act (Bengal Act IX of 1879). The learned Judge has held dissenting from a previous decision of the same High Court in *Nanda Lal Bose v. Ashutosh Ghose*¹, that the manager of an estate under the Court of Wards is a "public officer" and that notice to him under S. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code, was a pre-requisite to the suit.

In coming to this conclusion the learned Judge has held that the manager is not a public officer within the meaning of S. 2 (17-g) of the Code and that he is not also an officer in the pay of the Government within the terms of S. 2 (17-h), but that he is an officer in the service of the Government under S. 2 (17-h), that therefore he is a "public officer" within the definition and that consequently two months' notice of suit to him is required under S. 80 of the Code.

It must be observed in this connection that a Collector acting as an agent of the Court of Wards is a public officer when he acts on behalf of the Court of Wards because it is by virtue of his office as Collector, he is under the Court of Wards Act functioning for the Court of Wards. See *The Collector of Bijnor, Manager of the Estate of Chaudhri Ranjit Singh v. Munuvar*². It has been pointed out in that case that if the Collector had been appointed as a manager specifically, he would only be a private individual and he could not be acting in his official capacity as a manager under the Court of Wards. See Per Straight, J., at pp. 23 and 24 and Pearson, J., at p. 22 of The Collector of Bijnor, Manager of the Estate of Chaudhri Ranjit Singh v. Munuvar.² If this view is correct, when a private person who is not a Collector has been appointed as a manager under the Court of Wards, it will not make any difference and he will not be a public officer and no notice will be required to him under S. 80 of the Code.

In this respect, the provisions of the Court of Wards Act of the other provinces are of some interest. The general lines of the other Court of Wards Acts are similar to those of the Bengal Act. S. 5 of the Madras Act enacts that the Board of Revenue should be the Court of Wards as does the Bengal Act by its 5th section. There is also provision in the Acts for the appointment of managers for the estates of disqualified proprietors. The powers and duties of such managers are also given in similar terms. There is, however, S. 30 of the Madras Court of Wards Act by which it is provided that every guardian, manager or other servant of the Court of Wards shall be deemed to be a "public servant" within the meaning of Ss. 161, 162, 163, 164 and 165 of the Indian Penal Code, and under the definition of legal remuneration contained in the said S. 161 the word "Government" shall for the purpose of this section be deemed to include the Court of Wards. There are similar provisions in the Court of Wards Acts of Bombay, the United Provinces and the Punjab. See S. 21 (2) of the Bombay Court of Wards Act of 1905, S. 33 of the United Provinces Court of Wards Act of 1912 and S. 42 of the Punjab Court of Wards Act of 1903. There is however no corresponding provision in the Bengal Court of Wards Act. It must be taken that the Madras, Bombay and the United Provinces Legislatures in enacting those sections must have done so in the view that the manager under the Court of Wards is not a public servant but for those provisions and that in other respects and for other purposes he is not a public servant. It is a well-known rule of statutory construction that when a thing is to be "deemed" something else, it is to be treated as that something else with the attendant consequences, but it is not that something else. See *Per Cave, J., in R. v. Norfolk, C. C.*¹. See also *Green v. Marsh*². It must be noticed that the definition of public servant in S. 21, cl. (9) of the Indian Penal Code, has words similar to S. 2 (17-h) of the Civil Procedure Code, that is "Every officer in the service. . . . of Government", words which are relied upon by the learned Judge in this case for holding that the manager under the Court of Wards is a "public servant". If notwithstanding these words a manager under the Court of Wards Acts of Madras and other provinces is not a public servant under the Indian Penal Code, and a special section has to be introduced to constitute him as a public servant for certain purposes, it is open to the argument that without a similar section in the Bengal Court of Wards Act, the manager under the Court of Wards would not be a "public servant" within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code, S. 21, cl. (9) or a "public officer" under S. 2 (17-h) of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the decision in *Nanda Lal Bose v. Ashutosh Ghose*¹, lays down the correct law on the point.

This decision brings out clearly the limits of the right to account between tenants in common. At common law, if one tenant in common occupied and took the whole profits, the other had no remedy against him whilst the tenancy in common continued unless he was put out of possession, when he might have his ejectment or, unless he appointed the other to be his bailiff as to his undivided moiety, and the other accepted the appointment, when an action of account would lie, as against the bailiff of the owner of the estate. This state of law continued until St. 4, Anne., Ch. 16 which by S. 27 provided that an action of account might be brought and maintained by a joint tenant or a tenant in common, his executors and administrators against the other for receiving more than comes to his just share or proportion, and against the executor and administrator of such joint tenant or tenant in common. By the effect of decisions, this section was restricted in its operation only to cases where the co-tenant received from a third person more than his just share of profits and it was understood not to extend to cases where the tenant in common was actually in occupation. In the latter case, that is, in the case where a co-tenant was in actual occupation, it was held by Baron Parke in *Henderson v. Eason*², that the other co-tenant had no right to account as it may be that the tenant in occupation may raise valuable crops by employing his capital and industry for which the other co-tenant did not contribute anything and it may also be that the tenant in possession may sustain a serious loss for which the other co-tenant may not be liable to contribute to any extent. Courts of Equity followed the provisions of the statute as they considered the rule of common law as inadequate to afford justice.

In India where there are no special rules of law on the subject, as in such a case, the rule of English law has been applied as being rules of equity and good conscience. See *Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin*³ and *Muhammad Raza v. Abbas Bandi Bibi*⁴. In this particular case, the rule of English common law as modified by the statute of Queen Anne and adopted by the Equity Courts has been accepted as the law, in the case under notice. The learned Judges have not clearly indicated whether they would extend the rule of accountability even to cases where the other co-tenant is in actual possession.

The next point dealt with in the case is the question of the proper article of limitation applicable to a suit for account against a tenant in common who had realised more than his share of the income from the common property. At one time it was held by the Indian Courts that the action to recover the excess collected by the other co-tenant was in the nature of one for money had and received for the plaintiff's use. Among the decisions which held to this effect were *Tellis v. Saldanha*¹, *Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyaswamy Aiyar*², *Ramalagu Servai v. Solai Servai*³, *Avancha Lakshminarasamma v. Avancha Lakshamma*⁴, *Binode Lal v. Preo Nath*⁵, *Segu Chidambaramma v. Segu Balayya*⁶. See also *Banoo Tewary v. Doonoo Tewary*⁷, *Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer*⁸, *Kundun Lal v. Bansri Dhar*⁹, *Masih-uddin v. Intias-un-nissa*¹⁰, *Thakur Prasad v. Partab*¹¹, *Amina Bibi v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi*¹² and *Abdul Ghaffar v. Nur Jahan Begam*¹³. The learned Judges in these cases did not realise that there could be no action for money had and received between tenants in common. This was pointed out as early as 1850 by Baron Parke in *Thomas v. Thomas*¹⁴. These decisions came up for review before a Full Bench of five Judges of the Madras High Court in *Yerukola v. Yerukola*¹⁵, where they laid down that no action for money had and received would lie between tenants in common and that therefore Art. 62 of the Limitation Act could not apply to a suit for account between tenants in common and that the proper article would be only 120 of the Limitation Act and that time would begin to run only when the account was demanded and refused. Where however a co-tenant acts as the agent of the other co-tenants, the suit for account would be governed by the special Art. 89 of the Limitation Act. The learned Judges in the case under notice have taken this view of the Madras Full Bench differing from the prior decision of the Calcutta High Court in *Banoo Tewary v. Doonoo Tewary*⁷, which had been previously doubted by the Bombay High Court in *Gabu v. Zipru*¹⁶.

SAIT SOGMULL LACHIRAM FIRM v. PARANDHAMAYYA, (1940)
2 M.L.J. 17.

S. 78 of the Provincial Insolvency Act has prescribed that the period between adjudication and annulment may be excluded in computing limitation for any suit or execution application which might have been brought but for the adjudication order, provided that the debt had been proved under the Act. S. 33 indicates that the proof should have been tendered after adjudication and S. 49 mentions the mode of such proof as the delivering or sending by post in a registered letter to the Court an affidavit verifying the debt. In England it has been held that admission of the debt by the insolvent will not be such proof, *Ex parte Revell*¹. Even where the debt had ripened into a judgment before adjudication, the trustee in bankruptcy can challenge the reality of the consideration for the debt, *Ex parte Lennox*², *Ex parte Kibble*³ and In re Kan Lann; *Ex parte Pattullo*⁴. The same principles have been applied in India in a number of cases—see *Fasal Asim v. Tulsi Ram*⁵, *Re an Advocate*⁶, *Ram Lal Tandon v. Kashi Charan*⁷ and *Sripot Singh v. Ram Sarup*⁸, etc.

It has however been held that S. 49 is not exhaustive of the modes of proving a debt, *Fasal Asim v. Tulsi Ram*⁵ and that it does not lay down any mode of proof that is mandatory, *Bhadermull v. Haji Mahomed*⁹. In fact S. 49 uses the word may and not shall as regards the mode of proof indicated there. In Madras, it has been held that obtaining a judgment on the debt subsequent to adjudication in proceedings to which the Official Receiver is a party is good proof though it is not the mode of proof specified in S. 49, *Ramalinga Aiyar Firm v. Rayalu Aiyar*¹⁰. Excepting for this, in all other cases, the Madras High Court has held that proof of debt for purposes of S. 78 should be in the mode set out in S. 49 and if proof has been lodged in conformity with that section it will suffice even if it has not been actually admitted by the Official Receiver, *Lakshmi Bai v. Rukmaji Rao*¹¹ and Veerayya v.

*Narasimha Rao*¹. If the creditor has done all that he should do and there has been no refusal by the Official Receiver, the benefit of S. 78 will be available, *Rali Ram v. Sant Ram*². In that view it has been held that mere admission of the debt by the insolvent in the course of the insolvency proceedings will not amount to the tender of proof under the Act, for purposes of S. 78, *Mannasao Kalesar Bani v. Rambharosa*³, *Veerayya v. Narasimha Rao*¹ and *Fazal Asim v. Tulsi Ram*⁴. In the present case the Madras High Court has reaffirmed that view and held that a debt can be held proved only if proof has been given of the kind which will enable a creditor to qualify for obtaining dividend—a proof to which objection could be taken by the Official Receiver or any of the creditors, that is, proof as laid down in S. 49. The Calcutta High Court has taken a different view in *Krishna Chandra Das v. Jatindra Nath Poria*⁵ and held that S. 49 has merely specified a simple but by no means the only mode of tendering proof and that proof of debt in the course of proceedings leading to or preceding adjudication will be sufficient proof for purposes of S. 78 also. The Calcutta view overlooks the words in the proviso to S. 78 that the proof should be “under this Act”, and that proof under the Act is specified in S. 49 only. It is also opposed to the very object of the proviso and fails to note that proof for purposes of Ss. 11 and 24 is directed to the making out of the debtor's insolvency and has no other object to serve.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL v. HUSSAIN SAHEB, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 13.

This decision holds that at any rate with regard to a first grant, patta is given to the person to whom the Government has granted the land, that though a patta is not a title deed it is yet a document of title, and that on cancellation of a tree patta there is a resumption of its rights by the Government. If the suggestion be that as regards lands, cultivated as well as waste, the ryot always came into existence under a letting by the sovereign and that the latter is the owner of all lands, the conclusion is certainly debatable. It is opposed to the view in *Venkatanarasimha v. Dandamudi Kotayya*¹, *Lekkamani v. Puchaya*² and other cases. It also runs counter to the Hindu as well as the Mahomedan theories regarding the origin of property in land.

As to the evidentiary value of a patta, though it had been suggested in cases like *Freeman v. Fairlie*³, *Mangamma v. Timmapaiah*⁴ and *Subramaniam Chetty v. Mahalingaswami Sivan*⁵, that it is not evidence of title but of possession only, it has now been recognised that the probative value of a patta varies according as the dispute is between the Government and a ryot or as between two rival ryots, and that in certain cases it will afford evidence of title also, *Donganna v. Jammanna*⁶. In *Gopal Chettiar v. Arasappa Pillai*⁷, it has been held that a patta granted by a landholder to a ryot under the Madras Estates Land Act is strong prima facie evidence of title so as to entitle a transferee from the pattadar to claim the protection of S. 41 of the T. P. Act. In fact it may be sufficient evidence of title to create an equitable mortgage of property, *Official Assignee v. Badri Narain*⁸.

As to the effect of cancellation of a tree patta it had been held in *Sengoda Goundan v. Varadappan*⁹, that it merely puts an end to the revenue demand in respect of the trees and does not ipso facto operate as a resumption of its rights by the Government. That where the land pattadar and the tree pattadar were different persons, refusal to issue fresh tree pattas will not extinguish the tree pattadar's rights was the view of Ramesam, J., in Chinnappa.

RAM SARUP SINGH v. MOHAN SINGH, I.L.R. (1939) All. 713.

One of the points that fell to be decided in this case was whether the property acquired by a widow by adverse possession would be her stridhana. Commenting on Yagnavalkya's text (II, 143) the Mithakshara has declared that property obtained by seizure would be regarded as stridhana. Apararka has also taken the same view of the text². That a widow can prescribe for an absolute estate is now indisputable: see *Satgur Prasad v. Kishore Lal*³ and *Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal*⁴. As early as 1894, the Privy Council laid down in *Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram*⁵ that "unless it was clearly shown that when the widow took possession she professed to do it as claiming only the limited estate of the widow," she should be held to take an absolute estate. In *Lajawanti v. Safa Chand*⁶, however, the Privy Council declared that "if possessing as widow she possesses adversely to any one as to certain parcels, she does not acquire the parcels as stridhan; but she makes them good to her husband's estate."

The two observations were held to be not inconsistent and that it is a question of fact in each case whether the widow claimed to take through her husband and so limited her claim to a claim for a widow's estate or whether there is no evidence that she so limited her claim, in which case she will take an absolute estate, see *Dungar Singh v. Mt. Maid Kunwar*⁷. A mere recital that she had acquired the property as heir to the husband does not necessarily involve the legal inference that she was asserting only a limited right, particularly where there were other pieces of evidence to indicate that she had claimed absolute rights on other occasions, see *Sham Kaer v. Dah Koer*⁸ and *Uma Shankar v. Aisha Khatun*⁹.

In the present case, on her husband's death, a widow took possession of his properties as well as of certain other properties which did not belong to him and of which he was never in possession.

sion. The High Court took the view that the crucial factor in determining the character of these other properties was the animus of the widow at the time of taking possession and that the burden of proof will lie on the person challenging the stridhana character of the acquisition to prove the contrary. Though seemingly the decision suggests the existence of a presumption in favour of a widow's acquisition by adverse possession being regarded as stridhana, the conclusion is really one resting on the facts of the case.

RUPCHAND V. GURDIAL, I.L.R. (1939) All. 162.

This case decides an important question of procedural law involving the interpretation of the relative scope of Ss. 63 and 73 of the Civil Procedure Code. The point was whether holders of decrees of inferior courts whereof execution has been stopped by the operation of S. 63 are entitled to apply to the superior court for rateable distribution under that section read with S. 73, without getting a transfer of their decrees to the latter court for purposes of execution. In the present case the plaintiff had obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor in the Munsif's Court and attached his property in execution. Subsequently the first defendant who had obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor in the Sub-Court took out execution and had the self-same property sold by the Sub-Court. The plaintiff applied to the Sub-Court for rateable distribution, but the claim was rejected. Thereupon he filed a regular suit for the vindication of his claim to such distribution.

Three different views are gatherable from the decided cases. According to one view, unless the holder of the decree of the inferior Court gets it transferred to the Court realising the property for purposes of execution and complies with S. 73 he cannot claim rateable distribution—see *Muttalagiri v. Muttayyar*¹, *Nimbaji Tulsiram v. Vadia Venkati*², *Ramjus Agarwala v. Guru Charan Sen*³ and *Narasayya v. Obbayya*⁴. A second view was that where the attachment of the inferior Court was prior in point of time to that of the superior Court realising the property no application to the latter Court will be necessary to entitle the decree-holder, attaching earlier, to rateable distribution; otherwise a regular application under S. 73 to the latter Court will be needed, see *Krishna Kumar Ghosh v. Pasupati Banerjee*⁵. The third and the last view was, that S. 73 does not postulate any self-contained rule regarding rateable distribution, that that section should be read with S. 63 which forms an exception to it, and that the Court realising the assets can grant rateable distribution under the latter section to the holder of the decree of the inferior Court, though that decree has not been transferred to the superior Court and no execution proceedings have been initiated there. (See *Clark v. Alexander*¹, *Arimuthu v. Vyapuri*², *Narasimhachari v. Krishnamachariar*³, *Girindra Nath Ray v. Kedar Nath*⁴, *Kwai Tong Kee v. Lim Chaung Ghee*⁵, *S. R. A. R. M. Firm v. A. L. S. P. P. L. Firm*⁶, *Sarju Ram Sahu v. Partap Narain*⁷, *Gourgopal De Sarkar v. Kamalkalika Datta*⁸, *Thanmull v. Krishnaswami*⁹, *Dhirendrarao Krishnarao v. Virbhadrappa*¹⁰, *Iswardas v. Corporation of Madras*¹¹, *Surendra Kumar Guha v. Jaimini Kumar Guha*¹² and *Zumberlal Chhotelal v. Sitaram*¹³.)

It is clear that the question concerns more a matter of procedure than of substantive right. It is equally clear that uniformity should above all be desired in the matter. Considerations of justice and convenience should therefore guide the interpretation of Ss. 63 and 73. To construe them so as to render nugatory the attachment obtained by the decree-holder in the inferior Court will certainly cause unnecessary hardship. The view favoured in *Ranjus Agarwala's case*¹⁴ and like decisions was based partly on the fact that the words "shall determine any claim" in S. 285 of the old Civil Procedure Code, must refer to the claims referred to in Ss. 278 to 281. Those sections no longer precede S. 63 of the Code of 1908, but are now reproduced in O. 21, rr. 58 to 61. The chief basis of that view has thus disappeared. Again whereas under S. 295 of the earlier Code, application for rateable distribution had to be made to the Court which realised the assets, under the present S. 73 it is not clear that such application should be made only to the Court which held the assets. As pointed out in *Narasimhachari's case*³, the receipt of assets by the collecting Court is really a receipt on behalf of all the Courts who have attached the same property of the judgment-debtor and hence the attaching decree-holders in each of the Courts should be held entitled to rateable distribution in the assets in the actual custody of the collecting Court. It is to be noted that at any rate all the later decisions of all the High Courts have recognised the soundness of this view and the present decision of the Allahabad High Court adopts the same conclusion.

FIRM LADURAM SAGARMAL v. JAMUNA PRASAD CHAUDHURI, I.L.R. (1939) Pat. 114.

The Indian Partnership Act does not in terms make the registration of firms compulsory. Still the effect of the prohibitions specified in S. 69 will practically necessitate the registration of a firm at some time or other. S. 69 (2) lays down that no suit can be instituted by an unregistered firm against any third party to enforce a right arising from a contract. Judicial opinion is conflicting whether non-registration is fatal to the very institution of the suit or merely precludes relief being given and whether registration subsequent to institution can relate back to the filing of the plaint or at least enable the plaint to be amended and treated as presented immediately after such registration. The Calcutta High Court has favoured the construction of the section in "accordance with justice," rather than with the strict letter of it, and held that a suit filed by an unregistered firm may be deemed to have been instituted on the day following the registration, if there has been such subsequent registration, *Radha Charan Saha v. Matilal Saha*¹. According to that Court the section does not deprive the Court of its jurisdiction but merely keeps it suspended pending registration. The same view has been taken in *Varadarajulu Naidu v. Rajamanicka Mudaliar*², though it is recognised that a logical construction of the section may lead to a different result. Where under O. 33, r. 15, C.P. Code, a person whose application to sue in forma pauperis has been refused, has been given liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner provided he has first paid the costs awarded to the Government and the opposite party in his application to sue as a pauper and he institutes such a suit without satisfying the condition but pays the costs later on it has been held that the suit need not be dismissed but may be treated as instituted on the day the condition was satisfied, *Ramakrishna Nadar v. Thirumalai Vandaya Thevan*³. By parity of reasoning, the registration of a firm subsequent to the institution of a suit by it, may be regarded as having the same effect. A strict construction of the section has however been adopted by the Allahabad and Lahore High Courts, and suits instituted by unregistered firms have been held to be altogether incompetent and incapable of being regularised by subsequent registration, *Ram Prasad v. Kampta Prasad*⁴, *Firm Kishen Lal v. Abdul Ghafar Khan*⁵, *Chhagan Lal v. Firm Mangal Sain*⁶; see also *Subramania Mudaliar v. East Asiatic Company*⁷.

The present case follows this view in preference to that adopted in Calcutta and in the later decision of the Madras High Court. There is no real analogy between a plaint presented by an unregistered firm and one filed prematurely when the cause of action had not yet arisen. Registration of firms is after all designed primarily to protect third parties. There can be no frustration of this object or of any policy of the law, in any degree, by construing S. 69 (2) liberally, as enabling a suit brought before registration of the firm to be regarded as validly instituted immediately after registration, where that has been done, instead of being liable to be dismissed outright. The policy underlying O. 26, r. 4 of the Supreme Court Rules may well be followed in India as well. Again as pointed out in *Mt. Suga Kuer v. Firm Brijraj*¹, the Partnership Act has not been in force for any long period and it would be inappropriate to enforce the provisions too rigidly.

SITAL PRASAD SINGH v. AJABLAL MANDER, I.L.R. (1939) Pat. 306.

The main point for decision in this case related to the power of a manager of a joint Hindu family to mortgage ancestral property to find funds for the acquisition of new properties for the family. After deprecating any alienation of immovable property in general the Mitakshara postulates in Ch. I, S. 1, cl. 28, an exception, on the authority of a text of Brihaspati :

एकोऽपि स्थावरे कुर्याद् दानाधमनविक्रयम् ।

आपत्काले कुटुम्बार्थे धर्मार्थे च विशेषतः ॥

Even one person may conclude a gift, hypothecation or sale of immovable property during a calamity or for the sake of the family or for indispensable religious duties. The exposition of the text in cl. 29 by the Mitakshara makes it clear that the three circumstances specified therein should pertain to the entire family. The Privy Council has recognised in *Benares Bank v. Hari Narayan*², that this exposition defines the power of a joint family manager to alienate family property, and that the judgment of the Board in *Hanuman Prasad's case*³ was apparently founded on that authority. Need or benefit of the estate will alone justify an alienation. These expressions correspond evidently to आपत्काले and कुटुम्बार्थे in Brihaspati's text. It is clear that the two phrases refer to two different situations. Nevertheless there are to be found dicta of the Privy Council, which suggest that alienation of joint family property will be justified only if there is a compelling necessity, see *Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad*⁴ and *Benares Bank v. Hari Narayan*². That such an inference will not be valid is clear from observations of the Privy Council in other cases. *Hanuman Prasad's case*³ itself speaks of "need" or "benefit of the estate" as justifying an alienation and draws a distinction between "a danger to be averted from the estate" and "the benefit to be conferred upon it"; see also *Sahu Ram v. Bhup Singh*¹ and *Sri Thakur RamaKrishna v. Ratan Chand*².

The meaning of the phrase "benefit of the estate" has been considered by the Privy Council in *Palaniappa v. Devasikamani*³. While recognising that a precise definition of it would be impossible, Lord Atkinson held that the preservation of the estate from extinction, the protection of it from deterioration and such like things would obviously be benefits. This lent colour to the view that that expression must be understood to refer to acts of a purely protective or defensive character, *Ragho v. Zaga*⁴ and *Ramkaran Thakur v. Baldeo Thakur*⁵. It was in that view that a sale or mortgage of family property for the purchase of other properties for the family was considered in some cases to be bad, see *In re Krishnaswami*⁶, *Subramania v. Chidambara*⁷, *Tula Ram v. Tulsi Ram*⁸, *Inspector Singh v. Kharak Singh*⁹, etc. There is not much warrant for so restricting the scope of the expression "benefit of the estate." The Sanskrit equivalent कुटुम्बार्थे refers to family purpose in general and not to the protection of the family only. Even as early as Hanuman Prasad's case, the propriety of an alienation by a limited owner was judged by the test whether the transaction was one into which a prudent owner would enter in the ordinary course of business, with the knowledge available to him at that time; see also *Jagat Narain v. Mathura Prasad*¹⁰, *Amrej Singh v. Shambu Singh*¹¹ and *Ram Nath v. Chiranjilal*¹². Applying this test and regarding it as a question of fact depending upon the circumstances of each case, it has been held in a series of decisions that an alienation of joint family property for buying other properties for the family may be permissible as an act beneficial to the family, see *Muthuswami v. Sundara Velan*¹³, *Mahalakshmanamma v. Ramaswami*¹⁴, *Amrej Singh v. Shambu Singh*¹⁵, *Ram Bilas Singh v. Ramyad Singh*¹⁶, *Sheikh Jan Mohammad v. Bikoo Mahto*¹⁷, *Bajinath Prasad v. Binda Prasad*¹⁸, etc. The decision under review takes the same view and holds that it is for the Court to consider on the facts whether the impugned transaction is for the benefit of the family, in the larger sense of that expression.

The proviso to O. 21, r. 90, C. P. Code, framed by the Patna High Court lays down that no application under that rule shall be admitted unless the applicant deposits along with his application such an amount not exceeding 12½ per cent. of the proceeds of the sale or such other security as the Court may fix unless the Court dispenses with the deposit altogether. Two questions arose for decision on this proviso, namely, (1) whether the deposit should have been made at the time of the presentation itself of the application or may be made at any time before its admission, and (2) whether the proviso is intra vires the rule-making powers of the Patna High Court. On the first question, the first Full Bench held that the deposit may be made at any time before the admission of the application, a view which was accepted by the second Full Bench also. As regards the second question, the earlier Full Bench left the matter open but the later Full Bench decided that the proviso is perfectly valid.

It is difficult to agree with the construction of the proviso adopted by the Full Bench. Their Lordships have argued that the proviso draws a distinction between the presentation of an application and its admission, and that it prohibits the Court only from admitting an application before the deposit is made, but does not bar the filing of the application itself. In other words while the application will have to be filed within 30 days of the sale as prescribed by the Limitation Act, the deposit may be made later. Reliance is also placed for such a construction by a reference to the difference in language employed in S. 17 (1) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which provides that an applicant for an order to set aside an ex parte decree or for a review of judgment shall at the time of its presentation be accompanied by a deposit in Court of the amount decreed unless the Court on a previous application had directed him to give security. Under this section it has been held that the deposit should be made in any event before the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed for the application, *Ahmed Haji Ibrahim v. Abdul Hussain*¹ and *Qabul Singh v. Jai Prakash*². The absence of the term 'presentation' in the proviso to O. 21, r. 90 can hardly make any difference. The proviso is wholly clear that the deposit should be made "along with the application." The words "along with" can never mean "later on" or "subsequently." It cannot in any event contemplate a period beyond that prescribed for the application itself. If deposit is to be dispensed with, it should have been ordered on an earlier application for that purpose. The view of the Full Bench ignores altogether the requirement in the proviso that the deposit should be made along with the application.

2. I.L.R. (1939) All. 554.

As to the validity of the amendment to O. 21, r. 90, it depends mainly on the actual language of the amendment and its effect. The rule-making power of the High Court flows from S. 122 and is conditioned by S. 128, C.P. Code. The rules framed can annul, alter or add to the rules in the First Schedule. The only limitations are that they should not clash with the body of the Code or with any other enactment in force. The question thus will be whether the proviso to O. 21, r. 90 framed by the Patna High Court cuts at any substantive right or merely deals with a matter of procedure. "Procedure" merely "denotes the mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced as distinguished from the law which gives or defines that right." (*Poyser v. Minors*¹.) It is doubtful if a litigant has, apart from the provisions of the statute under which a sale is held, any common law right to avoid the sale—see however *In re O. N. R. M. M. Chettyar Firm v. The Central Bank of India*². Even if the right to have the sale set aside is a common law right, it must be deemed to have been merged in and replaced by the statutory right conferred by O. 21, r. 90. In any event the validity of the proviso to that rule will depend upon the question, whether it imposes an indispensable preliminary before any proceedings take place at all or whether it merely seeks to put the applicant upon terms as part of the procedure in the hearing of the application. In Rangoon, the amendment to the rule laid down that no application to set aside a sale shall be admitted unless the applicant deposits with his application the amount mentioned in the sale warrant or an amount equal to that realised by the sale whichever is less. The deposit was a condition precedent. Nothing was left to the discretion of the Court in that matter. The amendment stifled altogether the right of being heard to impeach the sale and hence was rightly held to be ultra vires. Where the effect of the amendment is however merely to put the applicant upon terms, stringent though they might be, as part of the procedure in hearing the application, no objection can be taken to its validity. Thus on a construction of the rules framed under S. 9 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act requiring an applicant for a new trial either to deposit the decree amount or furnish security therefor as a condition precedent to such application, it was held that the rule failed as being repugnant to S. 38, though it would be competent to the Small Cause Court to impose such a condition when a retrial was actually ordered, *Madurai Pillai v. Muthu Chetty*¹. Where a power to make regulations is given by a statute the general rule is that no regulation thereunder can abridge a right conferred by the statute itself.² To make an absolute rule which has the effect of debarring a man from the exercise of an absolute statutory right unless he complies with a number of requirements, is clearly ultra vires, per Kennedy, J. in *Queen v. Bird*³. Where on an appeal preferred under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court, against the rejection by that Court in its original jurisdiction of an application under the Probate and Administration Act of 1881, the High Court applied O. 41, r. 10, C. P. Code and asked the appellant to furnish security for costs, it was held by the Privy Council that such an order neither limits nor takes away the right of appeal under the Letters Patent but is only a rule of procedure applicable to Letters Patent Appeals also, *Sabitri v. Savi*⁴. The test therefore of the validity of any amendment to O. 21, r. 90 effected under the rule-making power will depend on the nature of the amendment and its effect. In Madras, the proviso framed states that the Court may before admitting an application under O. 21, r. 90 call upon the applicant to furnish security for the amount mentioned in the sale warrant or that realised by the sale whichever is less, or to deposit such amount into Court. There is no bar whatever to the presentation of the application, and whether a deposit is to be required or security should be called for is a matter left entirely to the discretion of the Court. There was thus no violation of any substantive right and the amendment was held to be *intra vires*⁴. The language of the proviso framed by the Patna High Court however requires the deposit to be made along with the application under O. 21, r. 90, unless it had been dispensed with. But for the rather curious construction of the proviso adopted by that High Court, namely, that the deposit may be made at any time before admission of the application the validity of the proviso would have been extremely doubtful.

SUSHIL KUMAR GHATIK v. SATYA GOPAL CHATTERJI, I.L.R. (1940) 1 Cal. 153.

In this case, the learned Judges have held that a purchaser under a private sale from a judgment-debtor after the sale of an agricultural holding under Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act and before its confirmation is a person whose interests are affected by the sale within the meaning of S. 174 (1) of the Act and is entitled to get the sale set aside under that section. The provisions of S. 174 (1) entitle "any person whose interests are affected by the sale" to apply to set aside the sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act. In this respect, the terms of the section bear a close resemblance to those of O. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, which also entitles "any person whose interests are affected by the sale to apply for setting aside the sale". Under this rule, it has been held by a single Judge of the Calcutta High Court in *Kiran Bala v. Sumiti Prava*¹, that a purchaser from a judgment-debtor after the Court sale is not entitled to apply for setting aside the sale, under O. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code. In this latter case, the learned Judge has held that the applicant should have had a subsisting interest on the date of the execution sale and that as the subsequent purchaser had no such interest, he could not apply.

The learned Judges in the case under notice have pointed out that there is nothing in S. 174 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act to indicate that the interest of the person making the application for setting aside the sale must be in existence on the date of the sale. These observations apply with equal force to the provisions of O. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code. If the legislature had intended to restrict the right to persons who had an interest on the date of the sale, it could well have used the language similar to O. 21, r. 89 of the present Code of Civil Procedure.

There is a conflict of opinion on the question whether an execution purchaser would come within those words of O. 21, r. 90. The Calcutta High Court, the Lahore High Court and the Rangoon High Court have held that if his interest is not anterior to the sale, he could not apply to set aside the sale under O. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code. (See *Surendra Nath Das v. Alauddin Mistry*², *K. V. A. L. Chettiar Firm v. M. P. Maricar*³ and *Nihal Chand Gopal Das v. Pritam Singh*⁴.) On the other hand, the Madras High Court, the Allahabad High Court and the latest decision of the Patna High Court have held that the auction purchaser is entitled to apply for setting aside the sale under O. 21, r. 90. (See *Gopala Krishnayya v. Sanjeevareddi*¹, *Ravinandan v. Jagannath*² and *Mahadeo Ram v. Raja Mohan Vikram Sah*³, overruling *Khetro Mohan Datta v. Sheikh Dilwar*⁴.) We venture to submit that on the plain language of O. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, as contradistinguished from that of O. 21, r. 89, the view of the Madras, Allahabad and Patna decisions seems to be well founded. The decision under notice also lends colour to the same view.

The learned Judges in the present case however seem to distinguish the case of rent sales under the Bengal Tenancy Act from those of sales under the Civil Procedure Code by reason of the fact that the title of the purchaser under a rent sale only commences from the date of confirmation while in the case of an execution sale under the Civil Procedure Code, on confirmation of the sale, the title of the purchaser relates back to the date of the sale. We are not however sure that this distinction has any bearing on the question of the construction of O. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, or of S. 174 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. On the date of the application to set aside the sale and before the date of its confirmation, even under the Civil Procedure Code, the title remains with the judgment-debtor and he cannot be ousted from possession by the auction purchaser. (See *Mukhi Narumal Tilokchand v. Allahbux Bahadur*⁵ and *Ghirdhari Lal v. Mohd. Ishrat Ali*⁶.) Reference may be made by way of analogy to S. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act under which though the title relates back on the adjudication to the date of the petition in insolvency, until adjudication the title to the property remains with the debtor. See Mulla's Law of Insolvency, page 414.

It may be noticed that under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882, it was held by the Madras High Court under S. 310-A that a purchaser from the judgment-debtor after the execution sale could deposit the amount into Court and have the execution sale set aside, *Appayya Shetti v. Kunhati Beari*⁷ and *Manicka Odayan v. Rajagopala Pillai*⁸, though the contrary view had been taken in *Hasari Ram v. Badai Ram and Nanda Lal*⁹. The Code has since been amended. We, however, refer to these cases to show that even after execution sale the judgment-debtor has a saleable interest in the property and it will be affected by the sale being confirmed, Cf. *Sundaram v. Mause Mavulhar*¹. This view supports the construction placed on S. 174 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the sole criterion for determining whether a person's interest is affected by the sale is to find out whether his interest will be affected if the sale be ultimately confirmed. We venture to submit that is the correct test to be applied and judged by this test the decision in *Kiran Bala Saha v. Suniti Proba Saha*², under O. 21, r. 90 of the Code of Civil Procedure, may require reconsideration.

The proper article of the Limitation Act applicable to a suit for recovery of unpaid instalments due under an ordinary money instalment bond with a defeasance clause and the starting point of limitation in such a case were the main points decided in this case. It was held that Art. 75 would apply and that time will begin to run from the date of the first default where there was no waiver of it, and from the date of the fresh default where there was a waiver. Some of the earlier decisions had, on the analogy of mortgage bonds payable by instalments and containing defeasance clauses, taken the view that the plaintiff was entitled either to bring his action when any instalment became due or to wait until the whole became payable—*Rup Narain Bhattacharya v. Gopi Nath Mandol*³, *Ramchandra Nayak v. Gharbaran Ahir*⁴, etc. This view overlooked the difference in the language contained in the third column of Arts. 75 and 132 respectively. Under Art. 132, limitation starts from the time when the money sued for became due, whereas under Art. 75 time begins to run from the date when the default is made. A mortgage is for a term certain, which may be as much for the benefit of the mortgagee as of the mortgagor, though the default clause is exclusively for the benefit of the mortgagee. Thus the mortgagee may either sue on default or wait. Limitation will start only from the date when the period stipulated under the mortgage document expired, although a default by the mortgagor had occurred during that period and by the terms of the mortgage, the mortgagee thereupon had an immediate right to enforce the mortgage, *Lasa Din v. Gulab Kunwar*⁵,

*Panchain v. Ansar Husain*¹ and *Narna v. Ammani Amma*². But Art. 75 is in very special terms and on the happening of the default the cause of action arises. In the case of ordinary instalment bonds with a defeasance clause, as pointed out by Lord Denman in *Reeves v. Butcher*³, if the plaintiff "chose to wait till all the instalments fell due, no doubt he might do so; but that which was optional on the part of the plaintiff would not affect the right of the defendant, who might well consider the action as accruing from the time that the plaintiff had a right to maintain it. The Statute of Limitation runs from the time the plaintiff might have brought his action."

Nor is it that Art. 74 which applies to instalment bonds generally will govern where the creditor did not choose to sue on the default clause for the entire amount. To so hold will be to render Art. 75 nugatory and redundant. Art. 74 can apply only where there is no default clause, and where there is one it is Art. 75 that will operate. After *Lasa Din's case*⁴ the Allahabad High Court has consistently held that in the case of a simple money bond payable by instalments with a default clause, Art. 75 applies and time runs from the date of the first default, *Jawahar Lal v. Mathura Prasad*⁵ and *Sukh Lal v. Bhoora*⁶. The present decision takes the same view of the question.

The question in this case was whether a mortgagor who has lost all interest in the mortgaged property and the personal covenant against whom has become barred, can by an acknowledgment within the meaning of S. 19 or by part payment within the meaning of S. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act bind the person on whom his interest has devolved. Four different views have been expressed as to the effect generally of an acknowledgment by a mortgagor on assignees from him of the mortgaged property. One view is that the acknowledgment cannot at all bind any prior assignee, per Mookerjee, J., *Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Prasad*¹; *Yagnanarayana v. Venkatakrishna*²; see also *Baldeo Prasad v. The Collector of Philibhit*³, *Rajeshwari v. Binoda*⁴ etc. According to the second view the acknowledgment will bind the prior assignees from the mortgagor only if at the time of making it he had retained a substantial interest in the mortgaged properties, *Krishnachandra Saha v. Bhairab Chandra Saha*⁵, *Lakshmanan Chetty v. Muthaya Chetty*⁶, per Krishnan Pandalai, J., in *Muthu Chettyar v. Muthuswami Iyengar*⁷. A third view is that the acknowledgment will bind all the assignees, prior as well as subsequent—per Jackson, J., in *Muthu Chettyar v. Muthuswami Iyengar*⁷; *Narayana v. Venkataramana*⁸. According to the fourth view it is the character of the acknowledgment and not the time when it is made that affects the result. The test will be whether the acknowledgment was lawful i.e., not a merely friendly or collusive act between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, *Arabindaksh v. Jageshwar Rai*⁹. It is submitted that the first of these views alone is warranted by the language of S. 19. The statute of Limitation is not a statute of repose. Equitable considerations are out of place in its construction and the strict grammatical meaning of the words is the only safe guide, *Nagendranath De v. Suresh Chandra De*¹⁰. S. 19 expressly states that acknowledgment, where it is not by the party sought to be charged in the suit, furnishes a fresh start only if it had been made by "some person through whom he derives title or liability." The user of the present tense indicates that the title contemplated as being bound is one assigned by the mortgagor subsequent to the acknowledgment. A similar construction has been adopted regarding the expression "parties under whom they or any of them claim" in S. 11 of the C. P. Code, i.e., that to make a person privy to an action he must have acquired an interest either by inheritance, succession, or purchase from a party subsequent to the action. If this be right, then it is wholly immaterial whether the mortgagor has at the time of making the acknowledgment any substantial interest in the mortgaged property or not. Further acknowledgment being a statement against one's interest can affect only such interest as one has at that time and cannot fasten on an interest that had already been conveyed. The decision under review has adopted this conclusion and this is in consonance with the view indicated in *Bolding v. Lane*¹ and *Newbould v. Smith*².

As regards the effect of part payment of interest or principal, different provisions existed in English law according as the debt was one charged upon the land or a specialty debt merely. The statute 3 and 4 Wm. IV, C. 27, Ss. 40 and 42 governed the former as regards recovery of the sum secured or the interest thereon respectively. In regard to bond debts S. 5 of 3 & 4 Wm. IV., C. 42 operated. Though these statutes had postulated that acknowledgment would save limitation only if made by the person 'by whom the amount was payable' in the one case and by 'the party liable on the indenture' in the other case, so far as part payment was concerned they did not specify by whom it should be made. It was however held that the payment relied on should have been made by "a party interested" or "concerned to answer the debt" and not by a "stranger," *Roddam v. Morley*³, *Chinnery v. Evans*⁴, *Lewis v. Wilson*⁵, *In re Lacey*⁶. S. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act has embodied practically the same rule. Under it the part payment of interest as such or of the principal should be by "the person liable to pay the debt" or "the debtor" respectively or by the agent of such person duly authorised in that behalf. The effect of payment by a proper person is in English law to keep alive the right of action in all its original integrity and force and set the action free against all the persons interested, a consequence resting on the joint liability of a number of persons standing in equal peril of suit and who all benefit by the discharge of all or any part of such liability, *In re Lacey*⁶. There is however a cleavage of opinion as to the effect of payment by a mortgagor on the prior assignees from him of mortgaged items. At one end it has been held that a mortgagor who has parted with the equity of redemption completely is not 'a person interested' and a payment by him would not prevent limitation running against the assignees of the equity of redemption *Newbould v. Smith*². At the other end the suggestion seems to be that even if the properties sought to be bound are with assignees, so long as the personal liability remains, a payment by the mortgagor would bind the prior assignees from him,—see Velayudha v. Vaithalinga.⁷ In between these two views there is another line of thought, that at any rate if the mortgagor making the payment has at that time some interest in the mortgaged properties, prior assignees from him would be bound by such payment. *Chinnery v. Evans*¹⁻², *Krishna Chandra v. Bhatrab Chandra*³, *Domi Lal Sahu v. Roshan*⁴. The correctness of the rule laid down by the Court of Appeal in Newbould v. Smith seems to have been questioned in England itself, though the House of Lords has left the matter open⁵. Even where the mortgagor has parted with the equity of redemption in its entirety, still he will not cease to be a 'debtor' within the meaning of S. 20 so long as the personal remedy against him is not barred, and as such he will be competent by his payment to afford a fresh starting point of limitation. In the decision under review the learned Chief Justice has stated: "In certain of the cases.....the mortgagor retained an interest in part of the mortgaged properties sold, but I do not consider that this makes any difference in principle.... If he cannot bind the purchaser of the equity of redemption, when the purchase covers the whole of the mortgaged properties obviously he cannot bind the purchaser of part of the mortgaged properties." This is an obiter dictum but the position so stated does not seem to allow for the rather wide language in S. 20 which on the principles of the English rulings like *Roddam v. Morley*⁶, enable any person 'interested' in the property or 'concerned to answer the debt' to give a fresh start, setting free thereby the action against all persons interested in the property. The reason is that the integrity of the mortgagee's right cannot in any wise be affected by any subsequent dealing of the mortgagor with the equity of redemption, see *Chinnery v. Evans*¹⁻². The decision in *Bolding v. Lane*⁷ on which reliance was placed was one concerning the effect of an acknowledgment by a mortgagor under 3 & 4, Wm. IV, C. 27, S. 42 on the puisne mortgagee's liability regarding arrears of interest due to a prior mortgagee and cannot govern a case of part payment under S. 20 of the Indian Act, resting on entirely different considerations, particularly in view of the later ruling of the House of Lords in *Chinnery v. Evans*¹⁻² as to the effect of a part payment by a mortgagor on prior assignees from him of the equity of redemption of some of the mortgaged items.

amendment of the decree will not have the effect of affording a fresh start for purposes of limitation. Different views have been held on this question as is apparent from the decisions. One view is that the expression 'decree sought to be executed' in S. 48 is wide enough to include the amended decree so as to make the date of the amendment a fresh starting point of computation of the twelve year period see *Baldeo Shukul v. Syed Yusuf*¹. Another view is that where the original decree was incapable of execution and amendment of it was therefore necessary it is the date of the amended decree that would furnish the starting point, *Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan*², *Narhar Raghunath v. Krishnaji Govind*³, *Venkatamma v. Manikyan Nayani*⁴. Yet another view is that no execution at all is permissible after twelve years from the date of the original decree and it is entirely irrelevant whether the decree was amended or not subsequently, see *Pydel v. Chathappa*⁵, *Paramashrayya v. Seshagiriappa*⁶, *Narasim Rao v. Bando Krishna*⁷, *Faqir Chand v. Kundan Singh*⁸, *Ganesh Das v. Kishan Das*⁹, *Mst Dulhin v. Mahanath Harihar Gir*¹⁰. The last of these constructions seems to represent the position correctly. Art. 179 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877 prescribed three years from the date of the decree for purposes of execution and there was no provision for the period to run from the date of the amended decree. Art. 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908 however made provision for the same, but prescribed that the article shall apply only "for the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court not provided for by Art. 183 or S. 48, C. P. Code 1908." This can only mean that where execution stands controlled by S. 48, C.P. Code, Art. 182 of the Limitation Act will afford no help. S. 48 of the C.P. Code in this matter has been left unamended all along, suggesting that it has been so left advisedly. The twelve year period thereunder is directed to be computed from the date of the decree sought to be executed. Under O. 20, r. 7 the decree is to bear the date of the judgment. So even if there is any amendment of the decree to make it conform to the judgment, the date of the decree will still be the date of the judgment only. Again an amendment is in no sense a novation. It merely expresses the real intention which the decree was intended to express but which it did not completely express. It does not vary the transaction in substance but merely rectifies the inaccurate description. Hence the amended decree should be deemed to be in force from the date of the original decree and limitation will start running from that date alone. The decision under review takes the same view and definitely brings the law in Madras in line with that prevailing in the other provinces.

VENKATA GOPALA NARASIMHA RAO v. VENKATARAMAYYA, (1940)
2 M.L.J. 257 (F.B.).

The question that fell to be decided in this case was whether an income-tax return and the statements accompanying it are public documents of which certified copies would be admissible in evidence. The Evidence Act allows secondary evidence to be given of public documents (S. 65); certified copies would constitute such evidence, (S. 77), and such copies can be obtained according to S. 76 by persons having a right to inspect the originals. Documents forming the acts or records of the acts of public officers would be public documents under S. 74. It was held in some cases that the term 'act' in the context means an act of the nature indicated in S. 78, i.e., a final completed act as distinguished from an act of a preparatory or tentative character and that it is only a document recording such a completed act that would be a public document, per Shepherd, J., in *Empress v. Asumugham*¹; *Chandi Churn v. Boistab Churn*². Agreeably to such a construction it was held in a number of cases that an income-tax return was not a public document, *Anwar Ali v. Tafezal Ahmed*³, *Devidatt v. Shriram*⁴, *Venkataramana v. Varahalu*⁵, *Varadarajan Chetty v. Kanakaiah*⁶. In *Mythili v. Janaki*⁷, it was held that it is only the notice of demand under S. 29 of the Income-tax Act, in which the Income-tax Officer communicates his decision to the assessee and not any earlier statement made or return submitted by the assessee to such officer that can be regarded as the record of the acts of the officer. Though in that case the contention that the return which forms the basis of the assessment should be deemed to be a part of the act of the Income-tax Officer or part of the record of such act was repelled as "absurd" on the very face of it, it has however been accepted by the Full Bench in the instant decision. The learned Chief Justice has stated how "it would be putting an unwarranted restriction on the words 'documents forming the acts or record of the acts' to say that they should be confined to those parts of an income tax record which the Income-tax Officer has himself prepared and to exclude documents which he has himself called for or which have been admitted to the record for purposes of the assessment."

In effect, the decision under notice constitutes a repudiation of the strict interpretation of S. 74 favoured by Shepherd J., in *Empress v. Asumugham*¹. The adoption of a liberal construction is supported by the English Practice also. Under the English Public Record Office Act, 1838, depositions, affidavits, bills, answers etc., filed in Court, though not records in the strict sense of the term are yet deemed to partake so much of their nature that they are allowed to be proved by means of copies to the same extent as records proper¹. O. 37, r. 4, of the Supreme Court Rules renders office copies of writs and pleadings admissible in evidence in all causes and matters and between all persons and parties to the same extent as the original would be admissible². In India also it has been held that a petition which was the subject matter of an order passed would be a part of the record, *Bhagain Megh Ranee Koor v. Gooroo Pershad*³, likewise the plaint filed in a suit, *Shazada Mahomed Shahabooddeen v. Wedgeberry*⁴, *contra Tarakeshpour v. Devendra*⁵. By parity of reasoning the return made to the Income-tax Officer on which he passes the assessment order would be part of the record of the acts of that officer.

Paragraph 85 of the Instructions compiled by the Income-tax Department for the guidance of its officers provides for inspection being allowed to a party making the return as well as to any partner of the firm to which the return relates. Rule 99 of the Income-tax Rules provides for the grant of certified copies. It is thus open to a party making the return or to any partner where the return relates to a firm to obtain lawfully a certified copy thereof. The copy being one given to a person entitled to inspect and of a public document it would be admissible as secondary evidence in the absence of any statutory prohibition of its reception. Does S. 54 of the Income-tax Act constitute such a bar? Sub-section 1 of that section declares the particulars contained in the return to be confidential and provides that no Court shall require except in the specified cases any public servant to produce such a document. Sub-section 2 penalises the disclosure of such particulars. The purpose of the section is no doubt to afford protection to the assesses from any possible user against them of the information imparted in the Income-tax returns by third persons¹. The section does not however render inadmissible in evidence the certified copies of such returns; nor is any policy of the law defeated where the very person who made the return proposes to prove its contents or where one partner of a firm uses it against the other partners. Any argument depending merely on the possible intention of the legislature as rendering the document inadmissible apart from the actual language of S. 54 will be no sufficient ground for shutting out such evidence.

AMBU BAI AMMAL v. SONI BAI AMMAL, (1940) 2 M.L.J. 298 (F.B.).

In this case it has been held that a sonless destitute widowed daughter is entitled to maintenance out of her father's estate in the hands of his heirs. It is rather curious that there should be a paucity of direct textual authority in regard to this question. Manu has declared the maintenance of an infant child (शिशुः सुतः) to be a personal obligation of the father. This is in conformity with the Law of Nature as well as that of civilized communities. Infancy in the case of a daughter has been practically equated with the period prior to marriage. For on marriage the obligation is shoved on to the husband whose duty it becomes to maintain his chaste wife (सखी मर्यादा) thereafter. Does that mean that the parental obligation is extinguished or merely remains suspended so long as the husband and his family can maintain her? Some cases take the view that on marriage a daughter ceases to be a member of her father's family, *Janki v. Nandram*¹, *Kartick Chunder Ghuttuck v. Saroda Sundari Debi*², *Bachadi v. Udai Singh*³, that marriage detaches the status of the girl from the parental family and attaches it to that of her husband or his father, *Mokhada Dassee v. Nundo Lall Haldar*⁴, that she becomes incorporated in her husband's family⁵ and is born again in that family, *Janki v. Nandram*¹. Applying the theory of cessation in the parental family and substitution in the husband's family it has sometimes been stated that a destitute married daughter will have only a moral and social but not a legal right to maintenance in the parental family even after the father's death leaving property—see *Janki v. Nandram*¹, *Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukmini*⁶, *Shanmugha Velayudhan v. Koyappa*⁷. A contrary view has been taken by Miller and Sadasiva Aiyar JJ., in *Venkatarazu v. Kotayya*⁸, and in the opinion of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., such a daughter will have a legal right to maintenance even while her father was alive. The Calcutta High Court has pursued an intermediate course: According to Ameer Ali, J., if a daughter and son-in-law had been in fact maintained by the father as dependent members of his own family it will ripen into a legal obligation against the heirs inheriting her father's estate, *Mokhada Dassee v. Nando Lall Haldar*⁴. A Full Bench of that Court held in the same case on appeal that the real test will be to see, whether the husband's family is not in a position to maintain her⁸.

To push the analogy of marriage operating as a rebirth of the girl in her husband's family to its extreme limit will be to carry legal fictions to absurd lengths. Marriage of a girl is not like the adoption of a boy. In adoption the boy sheds his status as a son in one family and stands invested with the same status in another. A daughter however never ceases to be a daughter though she becomes a wife and acquires membership in her husband's family. That is the reason why her rights of inheritance in the parental family remain preserved despite her marriage. Surrender by a widow though spoken of as a "figurative suicide" by her leaves her very much alive for purposes of adopting a son to her husband or claiming maintenance out of his estate, for surrender does not destroy her status as her husband's widow. In a like manner a daughter's status is not destroyed by her marriage. The obligation to maintain a daughter is the consequence of parentage, *Kusum v. Krishnaji*¹, and will ordinarily continue so long as that relationship subsists and the daughter is actually dependent on the father for her subsistence. Such dependence may arise either during her husband's lifetime or after his death by reason of the destitution of the husband and his family. Under such circumstances the policy of the shastras is to regard the daughter as आमाष्य पोष्या, as one who should be maintained by her parents. Manu has enjoined upon the head of a family the duty of maintaining all the poor dependents दीनाः समाभिताः. A destitute married daughter might well fall within the ambit of that expression, but it is difficult to interpret the text as importing a legal obligation, for in the context the duty of maintaining the poor dependents is clubbed along with the duty of providing maintenance to guests and mendicants which obviously can only be a moral obligation. Shyama Charan Sarkar has stated that according to the Shastras a sonless widowed daughter would be entitled to maintenance as a dependent member of her father's family², and Justice Norris is reported as having said: "Even if there be a shred to hang a peg on to support this decision we will do it."³ The view taken by the Courts that there is no legal obligation on the part of a father to provide for the marriage expenses of his daughter in the absence of ancestral property has largely reacted on the nature of the daughter's right to maintenance and though much can be said in favour of the obiter dictum of Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in *Venkataram v. Kotayya*⁴, that a married daughter will have a legal right personally against her father for maintenance where he has means and she is destitute, no Court has so far affirmed that view directly.

Assuming that a father is only under a moral and social but not a legal obligation to maintain his destitute daughter out of his self acquired property there seems to be very little reason for denying to her a legal right to be maintained from such property after it has devolved on his heirs. The nearness of the relationship between her and the deceased and considerations of natural love and affection can point only to that conclusion. If a daughter-in-law will have a legal claim for maintenance against her father-in-law's self acquired property in the hands of his heirs the claim of a daughter will stand almost a fortiori. The view of Ranade J., in *Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukhmini*¹, stands as an isolated instance of the negation of such right. An heir succeeding to property takes it subject to a legal obligation to maintain persons whom the late proprietor was legally or morally bound to support, and who all were so entitled to be morally supported by the deceased will no doubt depend on the relationship, the means and other circumstances of the late proprietor as well as on the principles of Hindu Law and the usages and practices of the people, *Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pote Mondla*²; see also *Rajimongy Dassee v. Shib Chunder*³; *Khetramani Dasi v. Kashinath Das*⁴; *Janki v. Nandram*⁵; *Yamuna Bai v. Manu Bai*⁶; *Mt. Bholi Bai v. Dwarka Das*⁷ and *Rajani Kanta Pal v. Sajani Sundari Dassya*⁸.

The case under review is noteworthy as being almost the first of its kind regarding the maintenance right of a daughter whose father had predeceased her husband against the estate of the former. If the principle be that inability of the husband and his family to maintain her would give rise to a moral obligation against the father, then it will be immaterial whether her husband had predeceased her father or died subsequently. If, on the other hand, the obligation against her father even in a moral sense can spring into existence only on the death of her husband, his family being destitute, then in the present case there would have been no such obligation against the father and as such there would be no obligation enforceable against his estate after his death. The decision under review must be taken to have affirmed the former of these two views.

1st October 1937 towards a promissory note cannot be theoretically appropriated towards the interest due under the note and in the absence of actual appropriation that way such interest will be deemed to be outstanding on 1st October, 1937 and as such wiped off under S. 8 of the Agriculturists Relief Act. In coming to that conclusion the learned Judges have argued firstly, that the rule that payments are to be applied first towards interest is more a rule for the guidance of the Court than a presumption of law regarding what has in fact been done, and secondly, that the rule that a notional appropriation cannot take the place of an actual appropriation for purposes of S. 20 of the Limitation Act will equally govern questions of appropriation as between capital and interest under Madras Act IV of 1938. It is submitted that the conclusion as well as the reasoning are weak. The general law as to appropriation is well settled. While making a payment, a debtor has the right to intimate how it is to be appropriated and the creditor must apply it accordingly, *Cory Brothers Co., v. Owners of the Turkish Steamship "Mecca"*¹. The intimation should be synchronous with the payment or made within a reasonable time thereafter, *Cory's case*¹. If the debtor fails to so intimate his intention he loses his right in this behalf altogether, *Sreenivasachariar v. Krishnaiah Chetty*², and the right of application devolves on the creditor, *Cory's case*¹; Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham edition) Vol. 7, p. 244, para 335. The view taken in *Chegganmull Sowcar v. Manicka Mudaliar*³, that so long as neither debtor nor creditor has made an appropriation, the debtor can intimate the appropriation he wishes, has not been supported by later decisions and is also inconsistent with the theory of the right having devolved on the creditor on failure of intimation by the debtor either immediately on payment or within a reasonable time thereafter. The creditor acquires a right to have the appropriation made in the manner best advantageous to him, *Bamundass Mookerjee v. Omeish Chunder Raes*⁴, *Nemi Chand v. Radha Kishen*⁵. He has the right of election up to the "very last moment," *Cory's case*¹, even while in the witness box, *Seymour v. Pickett*⁷, or before judgment is delivered, *Gajram Singh v. Kalyan Mal*⁸. What is the 'last moment' must depend upon the circumstances of each case.⁹ The right may be exercised until the creditor has finally exercised the right or something has happened to render it inequitable for him to exercise it¹. If the payment is open and there is no specific appropriation by either debtor or creditor, the creditor has a right to consider it as a payment on account of interest, *Luchmashwar v. Syad Lutf Ali Khan*², for the rule is that the money is first applied in payment of interest and then when that is satisfied in payment of the capital, *Venkatadri Appa Rao v. Parthasarathy Appa Rao*³. This is the well settled practice of the Courts, *Maharaja of Benares v. Har Narayan Singh*⁴. Where the creditor receives an open payment from the debtor without any appropriation of it as between capital and interest by either debtor or creditor, and it is left to the Court to construe the effect of the payment, the presumption arises that the payment is attributable in the first instance towards outstanding interest and the presumption is operative in questions between debtor and creditor primarily, *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa v. Maharajadhiraja of Dharbhanga*⁵. The presumption is that what would have been done by the creditor in the ordinary course has in fact been done; in other words, the Court will do what the parties are in conscience bound to do,—see *Moonesappa v. Venkataraydoo*⁶. This is not a principle for the guidance of the Court merely but constitutes a presumption of what in fact has been done. The debtor has a right to express his intention, but if he failed to intimate the same he loses the right effectively and will be deemed to have agreed to the appropriation of his payment by the creditor first to the outstanding interest. The creditor may not have exercised his right either. In such a case the Court will attribute the payment to interest first and will presume that it stands constructively so appropriated even at the time the payment was made. The presumption is, however, rebuttable and could be destroyed by proof that the creditor had in fact either expressly or impliedly elected to treat the payment otherwise. Where there is no such proof, but the creditor had remained silent the Court will draw the presumption as one founded upon the debtor's intention. In so far as the decision under review treats the rule as one for the guidance of the Courts only and not having any higher force it seems to run counter to Lord Macmillan's observations in the Patna case⁷.

This presumption of law stands excluded for purposes of the Limitation Act by reason of the special language contained in S. 20 which declares that payment towards interest should have been made by the debtor "as such" for purposes of saving limitation.

It is positive and not any constructive intent of the debtor that that section contemplates as necessary. Absence of intimation by the debtor of his intention when he makes the payment has a negative value merely and does not afford proof of any positive intent on his part. In the absence of proof of positive intent, a payment will not amount to a payment of interest as such by reason merely of what Sir George Rankin calls "the old rule," namely, that it is the right of the creditor to have payments treated in account as liquidating the interest before principal, *Ram Shah v. Lal Chand*¹. The Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act does not employ any similar language. To extend therefore the exclusion of the "old rule" to questions of appropriation between principal and interest for purposes of that Act seems to be hardly justified. There seems to be nothing in that Act to suggest that appropriation to interest must be specific and actual and not constructive or notional.

According to Act IV of 1938 interest will be wiped off only if it was in fact outstanding on 1st October, 1937. The provision is penal and therefore to be strictly construed. The burden is on the debtor to show that interest was actually outstanding on that date. Where the debtor had made a payment prior to that date he may prove an intimation by him that it was to be applied to principal only or he may prove acts, declarations and conduct on the part of his creditor suggesting an intention on the part of the latter to apply the amount otherwise than to interest. In the absence of such proof the presumption of law will apply, namely, that the payment should be attributed to interest outstanding in respect of the debt in the first instance, even at the time it was made, with the result that to the extent of such payment there will be no interest remaining due on 1st October 1937, for the provisions of Act IV of 1938 to operate.

IN THE MATTER OF AN ADVOCATE, I.L.R. 1940 All. 60 (F.B.).

This decision deals with an important point concerning the members of the legal profession, namely, within what limits an advocate can carry on money-lending transactions. In England, though there is an enumeration of offices which a practising Barrister cannot hold there is no rule in terms prohibiting a member of the Bar from entering into money lending transactions, see *Muni Reddi v. Venkata Rao*¹. It is however always understood that a practising Barrister should conform to the rulings given from time to time concerning extra professional activities open to him and that if at any time he was in doubt as to the propriety or otherwise of undertaking a particular matter he should request the opinion of the profession in the absence of express rules on the point.² In India the rules framed under S. 15 of the Indian Bar Councils Act (XXXVIII of 1928) have prescribed that "no advocate while practising shall engage in trade or business or accept an appointment carrying a salary without previously obtaining the permission of the Bar Council and the High Court. Similar rules exist under the Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879) as well. Money-lending transactions by advocates without the prior sanction of the Bar Council will thus become reprehensible where they are carried on as a business. The line of demarcation between cases where the transactions afford evidence of a business pursued and cases where they don't cannot be defined with closeness or indicated by any specific formula. Each case must depend on its own facts, and it is ever a question of degree, *Edgelow v. MacEkose*³. The term business imports the notion of system, repetition and continuity⁴. It is the sum of acts repeated which constitutes the business, *Smith v. Anderson*⁵; *Kirkwood v. Gadd*⁶. There should be a series of acts done with the acquisition of gain for its object, *Smith v. Anderson*⁵. The nature and the number of the transactions have a material bearing, *Fagot v. Fins*⁷. An isolated transaction will not constitute a 'business,' *Newman v. Oughton*⁸. If the transactions are not habitual or systematic there is no proof of 'business,' Halsbury's Laws of England (Hailsham edition) vol. 32, p. 307, para 490; *Grainger & Son v. Gough*⁹. Lending at remunerative rates of interest will not per se be a proper test either, *Newton v. Pyke*¹⁰.

A person can be said to carry on a money-lending business only if he is ready and willing to lend to all and sundry provided that they are from his point of view eligible, *Litchfield v. Dreyfus*¹. System, continuity, object, class of persons to whom money is lent, nature of the transactions and their number are the relevant criteria in judging whether the transactions are tantamount to the carrying on of a business. Eight instances spread over a period of three years, though speculative in character were held insufficient to make out a business, *In re Tika Ram, Vakil*²; a hundred transactions within the same period, some in his own name and others in the name of his son, were, however, held to be ample proof of money-lending being pursued as a business, *see Chinnarappa v. Thimma Reddi*³. In the decision under review an advocate had within the space of ten years advanced loans on twelve occasions, three on mortgages and nine on pro-notes, the former in the name of his son and the latter in his own name, and all of them were to friends and relatives. The Full Bench held that the case was one on the "border line" and that the advocate had "dangerously sailed near the wind."

Where an advocate happens to be a member of a joint and undivided Hindu family carrying on an ancestral money lending business, so long as he is not in charge of the business, his conduct will not be culpable, though he draws regularly a share of the profits of the business. If, however he enters into a partnership with the other members of the family in the starting of a new business there will be no protection afforded to him, where he has not obtained the previous sanction of the Court to his participating in the venture. Likewise where being the manager of the joint family, a practising advocate is looking after a family business as well without the Court's permission, his conduct will become reprehensible, *see Muni Reddi v. Venkata Rao*⁴. The Allahabad High Court has taken a slightly different view in one case, namely, that the running of an ancestral business may not amount to entering into a business but still it was proper that the advocate should give notice to the Court and obtain its permission, *see In re Tika Ram, Vakil*². Likewise it will be unavailing for an advocate to plead that he is running the money-lending business not for his own gain nor with his own money but as the guardian of a minor, with the minor's funds and for the minor's benefit, *Chinnarappa v. Thimma Reddi*³.

The Allahabad High Court has suggested in the instant decision that "it is in the interest of the advocates themselves that before they make advances by way of loans they should obtain the previous sanction of the Bar Council and of the Court." Couched in such terms the direction seems to be too wide and rather startling. Surely it cannot be intended that even where a legal practitioner gives loans to friends or relatives, on ordinary terms by way of assistance or accommodation such permission should be obtained. If in the case of even isolated transactions, the permission of the Bar Council and the Court is to be sought for the projected loan, the injunction will easily tend to become oppressive and unworkable in practice. If there is no question of a practising lawyer carrying on money-lending transactions as a business where is the need for any sanction of Court or of any other authority, except possibly where the advocate occupies a fiduciary or quasi-fiduciary character towards the borrower, or is lending on usurious terms or by way of speculation, or the borrower stands shut off from independent advice? If there is nothing objectionable in an advocate buying land, erecting buildings and letting them out to tenants thereby securing to himself a regular supplementary income, equally there cannot be any objection to an advocate giving loans and deriving an income thereby. To call the former alone an investment and therefore unobjectionable, but not the latter is not warranted by any intelligible consideration. In every case the proper test will be to see whether the transactions serving as a source of supplementary income, whether by way of money-lending or otherwise, amount in fact to the carrying on of a 'business', in the sense explained supra.

RANDIR KARAM SINGH v. BHATTACHARJI, I.L.R. 1940 All. 100.

The construction of the term "rights" in S. 1 of the Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), which declares inter alia that so much of any law or usage now in force as inflicts on any person forfeiture of rights or property on change of religion shall cease to be enforced as law, was one of the points dealt with in this case. The question was whether it would be competent to an Indian Christian who prior to conversion had been a Sikh governed by the principles of Hindu law and custom to adopt a son. Answering the question in the negative, the Allahabad High Court has held that the Act preserves only rights to property and not any other class of rights. It is but reasonable that such rights of the apostate as were attributable to and flowed from his adherence to Hinduism should on apostasy be deemed to have been deliberately abandoned by him. Intention to change one's faith must necessarily import with it an intention to forego the rights founded on the doctrines of the original faith and compatible with them only. Acceptance of a new faith involves the acceptance of a system of law consistent with the tenets of the new faith. The rights and obligations incident to the original status will cease and the Act XXI of 1850 only preserves his rights to property but not his original status, *Adam Haji Peer Muhammad Issac Sait v. Kunkam*¹. Monogamy is an essential part of Christianity and a Hindu convert to that religion cannot possibly take a second wife, while his first wife is alive and the marriage with her remains undissolved. Likewise Christianity does not recognise the right to adopt a son in the sense in which the Hindu law allows it. Hence it will be unavailing to rely on Act XXI of 1850 as preserving to a person the right of adoption which he had as a Hindu, even as it would be unavailing for him to rely on the Act as enabling him to have a plurality of wives. The object of Act XXI of 1850 was really to relieve a person of forfeiture of property rights imposed by the systems of personal laws in this country, on apostasy, so that evangelical enterprise may not labour under any handicap. Thus neither the policy of the Act nor the implications of a change of faith would warrant a larger construction of the term "rights" in S. 1. On apostasy the law of adoption recognised by Hindu law should be taken to have been given up by the convert, *Bai Machhbai v. Bai Hirbai*². The Bombay High Court however recognises the possibility of the convert retaining the usage and law in question even in his new status by way of custom³. It is questionable how far such a custom can be recognised where its effect will be to enable the apostate to do something which is repugnant to the tenets of his new faith. It is true that conversion will not deprive a convert of his right to give his Hindu son in adoption, *Shamsingh v. Shantabai*⁴, or of his rights of guardianship over his Hindu children, see *Mahomed v. Radhibai*⁵, *Dwijapad v. Baileau*⁶, unless the interests and welfare of the minors would dictate a contrary course, *Skinner v. Orde*⁶. The true explanation for the preservation of these rights despite apostasy is that they are not in any wise repugnant to the articles of his new faith and they also sound in property. The protection afforded to the convert by S. 1 of the Act XXI of 1850 is thus available in such cases. The right to adopt a son or to have a plurality of wives stands on an altogether different footing and is therefore outside the scope of such protection.

PANNA LAL v. COLLECTOR OF MEERUT, I. L. R. 1940 ALL. 181.

What precisely is the meaning of the expression "as if it were an arrear of land revenue" used in connection with the recovery of dues payable to a Co-operative Society by R. 137 (1) (U.P.) framed under S. 43 of the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912 was one of the points decided in this case. This expression in the same or cognate forms occurs in a number of statutory enactments containing prescriptions for recovery of sums payable to Government or other public bodies. In Madras, some enactments provide that such sums may be recovered "by the same means by which arrears of land revenue are recoverable", see S. 5 of the Compulsory Labour Act (Madras Act I of 1858). Some other enactments direct their recovery "in the same manner as arrears of land revenue", see S. 52 of the Revenue Recovery Act (Madras Act II of 1864); S. 2 of the Irrigation Cess Act (Madras Act VIII of 1865); and S. 58 (1) of the Co-operative Societies Act (Madras Act VI of 1932). A number of other statutes prescribe the realisation of any such sum "as if it were arrears of land revenue", see S. 66 of the Forest Act (Madras Act V of 1882); S. 28 of the Abkari Act (Madras Act I of 1886); S. 89 of the Salt Act (Madras Act IV of 1889); S. 60 of the Court of Wards Act (Madras Act I of 1902); S. 91 of the Local Boards Act (Madras Act XIV of 1920); and S. 70 (2) (ii) (c) of the Hindu Religious Endowments Act (Madras Act II of 1927); Cf., also S. 30 of the Indian Income-tax Act (Act II of 1886); S. 7 of the Land Improvement Loans Act (Act XIX of 1883); S. 5 of the Agriculturists Loans Act (Act XII of 1884); S. 194 of the City of Rangoon Municipal Act (Burma Act VI of 1922) etc. A few statutes have directed recovery of the demand "as an arrear of land revenue", see S. 9 of the Land Encroachment Act (Madras Act III of 1905); S. 6 of the Electricity Duty Act (Madras Act V of 1939); Cf., also S. 44 of the Co-operative Societies Act (Act VI of 1912).

In Madras, the procedure regarding recovery of arrears of public revenue is set out in the Revenue Recovery Act, 1864. S. 42 postulates the effect of a sale of land on account of arrears of revenue under the Act as passing the property free of all antecedent encumbrances thereon to the purchaser. S. 52 prescribes that arrears of revenue other than land revenue, as well as cesses lawfully imposed upon land etc., may be recovered in the same manner as arrears of land revenue under the Act. The question whether S. 42 would stand extended by S. 52 to a sale on account of arrears of abkari revenue, which according to S. 10 of the Madras Abkari Act, 1864 were to be recovered in like manner as arrears of land revenue, so as to pass the property free of encumbrances to the purchaser at the revenue sale, has been answered in the negative, *Ramachandra v. Pitchaikanni*¹. The reason is that land remains security only for public revenue (S. 2), that abkari dues are not included in the definition of public revenue in S. 1 and that a reading of Ss. 3 and 4 suggests that an arrear of revenue under the Act means only an arrear of public revenue. Consequently though recovery of arrears of abkari revenue may be effected in like manner as recovery of arrears of land revenue, still a sale of land on account of the former will not give a preferential title to the purchaser free of encumbrances. In the case, however, of a sale on account of water cess, it has been held that the purchaser would get a free title despite the fact that S. 2 of the Irrigation Cess Act has used language similar to that found in S. 10 of the Abkari Act of 1864, namely, that the cess shall be realised in the same manner as arrears of land revenue, see *Vellapalay Ambalam v. Karupiah Pillai*², *Dorayya v. Ayyanna Charyulu*³. This difference in the legal result is based upon the inclusion of water cess within the meaning of the term "public revenue" in S. 1 of the Revenue Recovery Act, which would proprio vigore attract S. 42 of that Act to sales held on account of public revenue. It was held that S. 2 of the Irrigation Cess Act regarding recovery of water cess should be deemed to be a superfluity which cannot detract from the legal effect of the sale as set out in the Revenue Recovery Act, ibid.

Whether the expression "as if it were an arrear of land revenue" connotes something different from the expression "in like manner as arrears of land revenue", as regards the legal effect of a sale held on account of arrears of particular dues so made recoverable has also been answered in the negative, *Chinnaswami Mudali v. Thirumalai Pillai*⁴, *Ibrahim Khan Sahib v. Rangaswami Naicken*⁵. So wherever a statute directs the recovery of any sum "as if it were an arrear of land revenue," prima facie it is only the procedure prescribed by the Revenue Recovery Act that will stand incorporated by reference and a sale held in pursuance of such procedure will not yield to the purchaser a preferential title free of encumbrances, *Chinnaswami Mudali v. Thirumalai Pillai*⁶, *Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar*⁷, *Lachmi Narain Singh v. Nand Kishore Lal Das*⁸, *Ibrahim Khan Sahib v. Rangaswami Naicken*⁹, *Muthusamier v. *Thammayya v. Ramanna*¹, *R. M. V. M. Chettyar Firm v. Subramaniam*², *Nagabushanam v. Venkanna*³, *Chinnammal v. Saithakkathi*⁴. No doubt it has been sometimes suggested that the phrase "as if it were an arrear of land revenue" if strictly construed, would import that the property is sold free of encumbrances, see Govindarajulu Naidu v. The Secretary of State for India,⁵ and that the term "as if" cannot be said to have reference solely to procedure or to have been intended by the Legislature not to import the operation of S. 42 of the Revenue Recovery Act, *Sankaran Nambudripad v. Ramaswami Ayyar*⁶. The weight of authorities indicating a contrary conclusion has however been recognised and followed in these very cases. The decision under review also holds that recovery of any sum in the same manner as an arrear of revenue has reference only to the procedure to be adopted and does not import the substantive right of a purchaser at a sale held on account of arrears of land revenue.

Even the use of the phrase "as an arrear of revenue" instead of "as if it were an arrear of revenue" in some of the statutory provisions for realisation of sums due either to Government or to a public body may not per se point to a different result, inasmuch as the right of the purchaser to get a preferential title free of encumbrances would always depend upon the character of the dues, whether they are such that in law the property sold could have been regarded as a security therefor.

One of the points decided in this case was that a successful prosecution for defamation resulting in conviction will be no reason to reduce the amount of damages awardable to the defamed party in a subsequent civil action. It has always been considered that in such cases the pursuit of the civil remedy in addition to the criminal is not incompetent, *Misr Ramji v. Jivan Ram*⁷; *Jodhi Ram v. Abdul Mian*⁸; *Akhil Chandra Biswas v. Akhil Chandra Dey*⁹; *Md. Samiullah Khan v. Bishu Nath*¹⁰. A Bench of the Calcutta High Court has, however, taken the extreme view that where after securing a conviction, a civil suit is subsequently brought for damages in respect of the same injury, the civil Court is not bound as a matter of law to award any damages at all, *see Ooma Churn v. Girish Chunder*¹. Another view is to be gathered from some cases, namely, that if punishment in person, was resorted to, that must always be an important element in mitigation in subsequently estimating the amount of penalty to be inflicted in pocket, *Misr Ramji v. Jiwan Ram*²; *Ma Sein Tin v. U Kyaw Maung*³. The decision under review has marked its dissent from these views and it is submitted that there is ample justification for the same. The recognition of criminal and civil responsibility as distinct in character, though one and the same act may be both a wrong and an offence is noticeable from mediaeval times. The civil responsibility is directed towards compensating the injured individual: the criminal liability on the other hand arises because of the disturbance to the peace of the society or the State. The liabilities being distinct, there is no reason why the right of the injured party to damages should be affected by the conviction suffered by the wrong-doer.

An interesting point and one more or less of first impression relating to the immunity of the Rulers of Indian States from the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts arose for decision in the above case. The question was whether an insolvency petition was maintainable without the previous consent of the Crown Representative under S. 86, Civil Procedure Code, where an applicant's only creditor was a Ruling Chief. In answering the question in the affirmative the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court have suggested: (1) the immunity of a foreign prince from the jurisdiction of British Courts extends only to his person and public property; (2) in India such immunity must be sought within the language of S. 86, Civil Procedure Code, which will not cover cases like the present; (3) in view of the provisions contained in the Provincial Insolvency Act making specific provisions of the Civil Procedure Code applicable to insolvency proceedings it will be doubtful if the rule contained in S. 86 could be extended to such proceedings; and (4) the mere issue of a notice to a creditor under S. 19 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act can hardly be described as a legal process. It is submitted that these reasons are not quite valid.

Founded essentially on the principle par in parem non habet imperium and partly on the difficulties attendant upon enforcing the judgment of the Courts of one State against a foreign State as well as on considerations of reciprocity the rule has been recognised that a foreign sovereign is immune from the jurisdiction of the municipal courts of a country. According to Dicey the rule is that "no action or other proceeding can be taken in the courts of this country against a foreign sovereign, nor can the property of a foreign sovereign be seized or arrested."¹ Two propositions of international law seem to be well established and beyond doubt, namely, (1) the courts will not implead either directly or otherwise a foreign sovereign, i.e., will not by their process make him against his will a party to legal proceedings whether they involve process against his person or seek recovery of specific property or damages, and (2) courts will not by their process, whether the sovereign is a party to the proceedings or not, seize or detain property which is his or of which he is in possession or control.² The term 'property' in the context is not limited to ownership but covers also lesser interests, which may not merely be not proprietary but not even possessory.¹ Nor is the immunity confined only to property used for the commercial or military purposes of the sovereign. At the present time it seems to extend also to his personal private property.² That no distinction can be allowed between the public and private property of a sovereign has been recognised in India also.³ The rule that a foreign sovereign cannot be impleaded is by no means absolute and possible exceptions are cases of suits to administer a trust fund in Court in which a foreign sovereign is interested,⁴ or cases of winding up of banks and companies in the assets of which a foreign sovereign may have an interest.⁵ The reason for recognising such exceptions is that otherwise the administering of justice to the other casus quo trustent will be frustrated and there is no comity of nations either allowing immunity to foreign sovereigns in such circumstances. Subject therefore to these limitations founded on considerations of expediency, a foreign sovereign is held otherwise immune from the jurisdiction of British courts even in regard to his private property. Save in the case of a cross bill or bill of discovery in aid of a defence and in the case of a sovereign voluntarily coming in to make or resist a claim he cannot be effectually cited. In the words of Lord Langdale, M.R., "even the failure of justice in some particular cases would be less prejudicial than attempts to obtain it by violating immunities thought necessary to the independence of princes and nations."⁶

It is true that in India the immunity of the Ruling Chiefs is defined by S. 86, Civil Procedure Code. The rule being statutory the express provisions thereof are imperative and must be observed and cannot be waived.⁷ S. 86 provides that a Ruling Chief may be sued in any competent court with the consent of the Crown Representative but not without such consent. S. 141 of the Code prescribes that the procedure provided in the Code in regard to suits shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any court of civil jurisdiction. It has been pointed out by the Privy Council that "the proceedings spoken of in S. 647 (S. 141 of Act V of 1908) include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth and do not include executions."¹ The antithesis seems to be between non-execution proceedings and other proceedings. The Calcutta High Court has however added to this dictum the word "only" and laid down that S. 141 extends the procedure of the Code only to original proceedings in the nature of suits.² A larger view of the scope of S. 141 has been taken in other High Courts.³ S. 86, Civil Procedure Code, is really a statutory adaptation of the English rule under which no action or other proceeding can be brought in a British Court against a foreign sovereign and in Statham v. Statham,⁴ it was held that the principle of S. 86 will apply to proceedings in divorce in which a Ruling Chief is sought to be made co-respondent, though such proceedings are commenced only by a petition and not by a plaint. The expression 'action or other proceeding' though not a term of art is yet familiar as regards its sense. Where a person cannot be heard to protect his interest unless he appears as a party he will be deemed to be a person claiming an interest and as such by the very terms of any notice issuing to him impleaded.⁵ A proceeding in insolvency is no doubt initiated by a petition,⁶ yet, the latter has to be signed and verified in the manner prescribed in the Civil Procedure Code for signing and verifying plaints⁷ and the procedure contained in the Civil Procedure Code with respect to the admission of plaints is to be followed in the case of insolvency petitions.⁸ It is thus a proceeding in the nature of a suit and in any event the person affected by the petition being unable to be heard in protection of his rights unless he appears before the Insolvency Court he should be deemed impleaded by the notice issuing to him under S. 19 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and thereby brought within the ambit of S. 86, Civil Procedure Code, read with S. 141. The decision in *Official Liquidators, Dehra Dun Mussoorie Electric Tramway Co. v. Nabha State*⁹ supports this conclusion. It was there held that a proceeding under S. 184 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913, which directs the Court to settle a list of contributories after an order for winding up is not one to which S. 86, Civil Procedure Code, will be attracted, for, by merely settling a list no interest in property of the Ruler is actually affected, whereas where there was any case of an order to be made under S. 186 of the Companies Act for payment of money due from a person the order can be made by the Court only in cases where a suit to recover the amount would be maintainable, which in the case of a Ruling Chief would automatically bring in the provisions of S. 86, Civil Procedure Code.

The reasoning founded on specific provisions of the Civil Procedure Code being made applicable to proceedings in insolvency by express provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act¹ as a pointer to the non-applicability by implication of other parts of the Civil Procedure Code is unacceptable. S. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act lays down that subject to the provisions of that Act, the Court in regard to proceedings under that Act shall follow the same procedure as it follows in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction. The section can only mean that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code shall govern proceedings in insolvency except where different provisions are to be found in the Insolvency Act itself. There is no warrant for circumscribing the scope of that section by arguing that if by the combined operation of S. 5 of the Insolvency Act and S. 141 of the Civil Procedure Code all the provisions of the Code relating to suits are to be attracted then the provisions of the Insolvency Act making certain specific provisions of the Code applicable to insolvency proceedings would be wholly redundant. Surely the more correct mode of appreciation will be to construe that except as otherwise provided in the Insolvency Act ordinarily all the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to suits will apply to insolvency proceedings and more particularly those provisions of the Code which are in terms made applicable to specific matters by specific sections of the Insolvency Act.

The last of the reasons mentioned in the instant decision, namely, that the issue of a notice to a Ruling Chief under S. 19 (2) of the Insolvency Act can hardly be described as a legal process stands contradicted by the recognition in another part of the judgment that it could be argued that by the issue of such notice "there is an indirect attack upon his personal immunity" and that the necessary result of it where the Ruling Chief is amongst the creditors is "indirectly to subject him to legal process on pain of the debt being extinguished." This will be a fortiori where the only creditor is a Ruling Prince. It is submitted that the correct view would be to hold that in such a case the previous consent of the Crown Representative will be necessary to the maintainability of the debtor's petition for adjudication.

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), S. 193—Power of President of Panchayat Board to grant or refuse a licence.

Under S. 193 of the Madras Local Boards Act the president of a Local Board has in a proper case the power to refuse to renew a licence. His order can only be set aside if he has exercised that power in an arbitrary or illegal manner.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith the High Court will be pleased to issue a writ of certiorari to the President, Panchayat Board, Karimangalam to send all the papers and orders dated 24th February, 1939 and 1st April, 1939 in the issue of license to the petitioner and quash his proceedings declining to issue the license for the full period.

K. Bashyam Aiyangar and T. M. Venugopal Mudaliar for Petitioner.

K. Rajah Aiyar for Respondent.

The order of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—Since the year 1930 the petitioner has been carrying on a rice milling business at Karimangalam in premises which had been used for the same purpose from 1920 to 1930 by his brother. By virtue of the provisions of S. 193 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1930, the Panchayat Board of Karimangalam was empowered to require the petitioner to take out a license in respect of the premises. Licenses were issued to the petitioner from year to year but in 1939 the Board refused a further renewal. The petitioner says that in doing so the Board has acted in excess of its powers and asks that its order be quashed.

Sub-S. (1) of S. 193 states that the Panchayat Board may notify that no place within the limits of the village shall be used for any one or more of the purposes specified in Sch. VII without a license issued by the President of the Board and except in accordance with the conditions specified in the license, provided that no notification shall take effect until 60 days from the date of publication. The purposes for which premises may not be used without a license include the "using for any industrial purpose any fuel or machinery". Sub-S. (2) says that the owner or occupier shall within thirty days of the publication of the notification under sub-S. (1) apply to the president of the Board for a license for the use of the premises for the purpose intended. Sub-S. (3) says that the president may, by an order and under such restrictions and regulations as he thinks fit, grant a license or refuse to grant it.

On the 20th September, 1932, the Panchayat Board caused a notification to be issued under S. 193 (1) to the effect that no place within the limits of its jurisdiction should be used for specified purposes without a license from the president. The notification applied expressly to rice mills and the license fee was fixed at Rs. 5. In pursuance of this notification the petitioner applied for and was granted a license by the Board and he renewed his application every year. On the 21st January, 1938, a fresh notification was published by the Board. It differed from the earlier notification only in that it increased the license fee from Rs. 5 to 10. On the 18th February, 1938, the Board issued a notification under S. 215-A of the Act. This section says:

"Whenever a local board sets apart any place for any purpose or prohibits the doing of anything in any place, the president shall forthwith cause to be put up a notice in the chief vernacular language of the locality specifying the purpose for which such place has been set apart or the act prohibited in such place."

The notification purported to create an industrial area within the jurisdiction of the board.

On the 19th February, 1938, the board issued to the persons having Mills in Karimangalam a notice in these terms:

"As the sites noted in the margin have been declared as the Industrial area of this Board, with the approval of the District Health Officer and Director of Town Planning and as the District Health Officer insists upon removing all the mills to the Industrial area in the interest of Public Health, I hereby give you three months notice to shift your mills to the Industrial areas approved by this Board failing which action will be taken to remove the mills."

On this date there were six persons carrying on milling businesses in Karimangalam, of which the petitioner was one. The record discloses that the Health Officer considered that from the standpoint of health it was undesirable to have mills in the residential part of Karimangalam. In his opinion the petitioner's mill was particularly objectionable.

On the 6th April, 1938, the special officer who had been appointed by the Government to fulfil the duties of the Panchayat Board for the time being, wrote to the millowners informing them that they would be granted temporary licences upto the 18th May, 1938, the intention being that after that date no licences would be issued to them unless they removed their mills to the industrial area. On receipt of this letter the mill owners moved the Government to cancel the notification of the 19th February, 1938. Pending inquiry into the matter the Government suspended the operation of the notification and allowed the mill owners to run their mills in the premises they then occupied. On the 16th January, 1939, the Government passed an order which in effect rejected the application of the mill owners. The order was in these terms:

"The President, Panchayat Board, Karimangalam, (Salem District) is informed that the rice mill owners who have not yet moved to the industrial area should be directed to do so at an early date. They may be given time for the purpose, as may be fixed by the Panchayat Board. The time limit should not however exceed one year. Meanwhile the prosecutions pending against them may be withdrawn."

On the 12th February, 1939, the Board gave the mill owners six months time from the 1st February, 1939, to remove their mills to the industrial area. With the exception of the petitioner all the mill owners have complied with this direction. On the 15th February, 1939, the petitioner applied for a licence in respect of his mill in the residential area for the year commencing the 1st April, 1938, and the licence was issued to him. On the 23rd February, 1939, he applied for a licence for the year commencing the 1st April, 1939. This was refused, but he was informed that he could apply for a temporary licence until the 31st July, 1939, subject to the condition that he should then remove his mill to the industrial area. This permission was in accordance with the notice issued to the mill owners on the 12th January, 1939. In spite of this decision the petitioner wrote to the president of the board on the 30th March, 1939, requesting that licence be issued to him 'according to mamool', which means according to the usual practice. This letter resulted in an order granting a temporary licence from the 1st April, 1939, to the 31st July, 1939, subject to the condition that he should then remove his mill to the industrial area. The board refused to alter this decision and consequently refused to issue a licence to the petitioner after the 1st August, 1939. The petitioner has now moved this Court to quash the orders of the 24th February, and of the 30th March, 1939.

The petitioner says that the Board had no power to notify an industrial area and, as it has not got this power, it is not entitled to refuse him a licence in respect of the premises in which he has carried on a milling business for so many years. For the purposes of the present application the Court may assume that the board had no power to notify an industrial area. It is not necessary for the Court to examine S. 215-A and the relevant sections which precede it, because it is clear that the petition must be dismissed on another ground. S. 193 (3) empowers the president of the Board to grant or refuse a licence; and as pointed out by this Bench in *Khan Bahadur Abdul Kareem Sahib v. The Commissioner, Corporation of Madras*¹, when considering the corresponding section in the City Municipal Act, 1919, the section must be construed according to the words used therein and when it is so construed there is no room for reasonable doubt that the president has in a proper case the power to refuse to renew a licence. Of course, if the refusal were arbitrary or prompted by some ulterior motive the position would be different. In this case it cannot be said that the Board has acted arbitrarily or in any way improperly. There was material before the Board on which it could come to the conclusion that it was in the interest of the residents of Karimangalam that the mills in the residential quarters should be removed to another area. The board gave ample opportunity to the mill owners to remove their mills from the residential area and when refusing licenses for their old premises the board made it quite clear that licenses would be issued in respect of premises within the industrial area. It is not disputed that the board acted entirely bona fide. Its action is only challenged on the ground that it had no power to notify an industrial area. That is not sufficient to entitle the petitioner to succeed, even assuming that his contention in this respect is correct. The president had power to refuse to renew and his order can only be set aside if he has exercised that power in an arbitrary or illegal manner, which is not the case.

The petition will be dismissed with costs.

Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863)—Trustees appointed by Hindu Devasthanam Committee—Dismissal by Committee—Whether can be at its own pleasure or must be only for good and sufficient cause—Power of Committee to appoint trustees for limited period.

Trustees to be in management of Thiruvateeswarar Devasthanam in Madras, were appointed under Act XX of 1863 by Madras Hindu Devasthanam Committee. When a vacancy occurred in 1934 the committee appointed a trustee for a period of 3 years. A previously appointed trustee objected to the new trustee taking charge on the ground that he could not be appointed for a limited period and could only be appointed for life. On the failure of the protesting trustee to appear before the Committee to consider his conduct in disobeying the Committee's orders, he was dismissed. That trustee then filed a suit for a declaration that his dismissal was illegal and he had also filed a suit for declaration that the new trustee was not lawfully appointed. The City Civil Judge dismissed both the suits and on appeal Held, (1) The status of a trustee is not that of a servant and he can be dismissed only on good and sufficient grounds and after an enquiry into the facts and a dismissal which is not justified may be set aside by the Courts of law.

Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar, 21 Mad. 179 (F.B.) followed.

On the facts the action of the trustee was not malà fide and his dismissal was wrongful.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—These appeals are concerned with the affairs of the Sri Thiruvateeswarar Devasthanam in Madras. It is common ground that it has been the usual custom for two trustees or Dharmakartas to be in joint management of those affairs. They are appointed under Act XX of 1863 by the Madras Hindu Devasthanam Committee, and are subject to whatever control is given to the Committee by that Act. Appellant was thus appointed in 1929. In 1934 appellant's colleague died, and his vacancy was finally filled up by the appointment of one M. N. Rajabathar Mudaliar (hereinafter to be referred to as respondent 2) on 18th November, 1935, the appointment being expressly limited to a period of three years. On 27th November, respondent 2 informed appellant that he proposed to take charge of his office at the temple the next morning. Appellant refused however to recognise the validity of respondent 2's appointment on the ground that a trustee could be appointed only for life and so did not permit respondent 2 to assume joint charge with him. After waiting some days respondent 2 on 4th December, affixed his own lock and seal to the temple office. On 5th December, appellant filed the first of his two suits (1095/1935) in the City Civil Court. In that suit he prayed for a declaration that respondent 2 was not a lawfully appointed trustee, and an injunction to restrain him from interfering with appellant's management. An interim injunction was granted, but was revoked on 12th December.

Meanwhile on 9th December, a notice was sent by the Honorary Joint Secretaries of the Committee to appellant informing him that an urgent meeting of the Committee would be held on the 11th to consider his conduct in disobeying the Committee's orders to give joint charge of the temple management to respondent 2; and calling upon him to attend that meeting if he wished to show cause against the proposal to remove him from his office. Appellant sent a lawyer's notice protesting against the Committee's actions and procedure, and refused to attend the meeting. The meeting was held, and the five members who attended it (out of a total strength of fourteen) unanimously resolved to dismiss the appellant. Appellant thereupon filed his second suit 1130 of 1935 in which he prayed for a declaration that his dismissal was illegal, and that he was therefore entitled to continue in office; and for an injunction restraining the Committee and respondent 2 from interfering with his possession and management. The two suits were tried together by the learned City Civil Judge and were both dismissed. These are appeals against the decrees in the two suits.

Thiru-

Mudaliar
v.
Rajabadar
Mudaliar.

There are three questions for determination in these appeals; (i) what are the powers of the Committee in the matter of the dismissal of a trustee? Can it dismiss him at its own pleasure, or must a dismissal be only for good and sufficient cause?

(ii) If the latter, did such good and sufficient cause exist? and

(iii) Has the Committee power to appoint respondent 2 (or any other trustee) for a limited period?

The learned City Civil Judge held that there must be good and sufficient cause; that the conduct of appellant afforded that good and sufficient cause; and that the appointment of respondent 2 for three years was within the Committee's powers.

The learned advocate for the respondents attempted to argue that a trustee is a mere servant of the Committee who can be dismissed at the Committee's will and pleasure, and cited *Golam Hossain Shah v. Altaf Hossain*¹, in support of this proposition. It is however too late in the day for any such argument to be upheld by a judge sitting singly in Madras. Ever since *Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar*², it has been uniformly held by a long series of decisions in this Court that the status of a trustee is not that of a servant, that he can be dismissed only on good and sufficient grounds and after an enquiry into the facts, and that a dismissal which is not so justified may be set aside by the Courts of law. I am bound by these decisions and must agree with the learned City Civil Judge in finding for the appellant on this point.

The second point now therefore arises. It must be stated at the outset that the sole reason pleaded by the Committee for the dismissal of the appellant was his disobedience of its orders in the matter of respondent 2's taking over charge and that in the arguments before me on this question it was very properly conceded by respondent's learned Advocate that the dismissal must stand or fall according to whether that reason is found sufficient or not. The question has, however, been somewhat complicated by the admission during the trial of evidence on the general conduct of the appellant as a trustee—even though that evidence was confined to the cross-examination of appellant himself and there certainly appear from appellant's own admissions plausible grounds for the view that he has been inefficient and negligent in his care of the temple property. This evidence it seems to me, is irrelevant except in so far as it bears upon appellant's motive in disobeying the Committee's orders, and it is significant that the learned City Civil Judge does not specifically accept the contention of the respondents that appellant's purpose was to remain as long as possible in sole charge of the temple. It is also unfortunate for the appellant that he should have thought fit in the circumstances of the present case to have exasperated the Committee by action which I can only characterise as misguided and unnecessary. Appellant had no personal complaint to make against the Committee's choice, and ex-hypothesi was willing to be associated with respondent 2 in the management of the temple for the rest of their lives. He was evidently determined to bring the question of the validity of respondent 2's appointment before the Civil Court and it could not have prejudiced that case for him to have made a dignified protest and accepted respondent 2 as his colleague for the time being. But when all this has been said I am unable to hold that mere disobedience in the circumstances of this case will justify dismissal. It does not, I think, fall within the grounds set out in S. 14 of the Act. A careful perusal of the correspondence in this case will show that appellant's principal motive was to make a formal protest against the terms of respondent 2's appointment—and he may well have thought that the interest of logic and consistency required the extension of that protest to the refusal to permit respondent 2 to assume charge. Nor do I think he acted from any unworthy motive to continue for his own private ends as sole trustee unhampered and unchecked by the surveillance of any colleague. Appellant filed his suit with commendable promptitude, and by asking for a temporary injunction made it certain that the Court itself would provide an urgent solution for the immediate deadlock. In these circumstances, whether appellant's objection to the terms of second respondent's appointment be one which the law will uphold or not, I hold that his action was not mala fide, and that it does not afford good and sufficient cause for his dismissal. Appeal No. 55 will therefore be in part allowed, and appellant given a declaration that his dismissal was wrongful and that he is entitled to continue in office. He cannot, however, have any injunction restraining the respondents in general terms from 'interference' with his possession and management.

venkata
Mudaliar
v.
Rajabadar
Mudaliar.

There now remains the third question which is the subject-matter of Appeal No. 54. In support of his contention that an appointment of any trustee for only three years in the case of this temple is invalid, appellant's learned advocate is unable to point to any provision in the Act itself but he argues that that proposition must necessarily follow from a study of some of the decided cases. In this, as I shall show, I am unable to agree with him. *Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar*¹ is a case which is concerned with the validity of an order of suspension. It was no doubt necessary in that case to consider what powers of dismissal a Committee possessed and under what restrictions they should be exercised, but it was not necessary to consider its powers of appointment. The learned Chief Justice certainly does say on page 220 that a trustee holds his office 'permanently' but that word must, I think, be read in its context and be contrasted not with a definite limited period, but with a period which can be arbitrarily terminated by dismissal. The next case is *Ganapathi Ayyar v. Vedavyasa Alasinga Bhattar*² which deals with the appointment of two temporary additional trustees to the Srirangam temple. That appointment was held invalid on two grounds (i) because it radically altered a scheme settled by the Board of Revenue for the temple in 1842, and (ii) because it was 'altogether temporary' and to permit such appointments would give the committee a control over the management inconsistent with the policy of the Act. The first ground does not apply to the present case. There is here no concrete scheme, and as the learned City Civil Judge has pointed out, no sufficient proof of a custom so rigid that it compels the appointment of a trustee for the rest of his life. Neither appellant nor respondent 2 had any vested right (such as existed in Srirangam in members of certain families) to be appointed at all, and unless the Act lays it down that an appointment must be for life I cannot see that either of them can object to a limited term. It is not without significance in this case that respondent 2 does not so object. The second ground is more to the point, but it must be remembered that the appointments in Srirangam were interim and provisional rather than for a definite term, and the distinction between the two kinds of appointment is an important one. *Seetharama Chetty v. Sir S. Subramania Aiyar*¹ the next case, continues the history of the Srirangam temple. It was there held that though the Committee had no power to modify the 1842 scheme, the Court had such power under S. 92, Civil Procedure Code and it is interesting to observe that in framing the new scheme the Court provided for the appointment of additional trustees to hold office for five years only. Finally, of the Madras authorities, comes *Govindaraja Mudaliar v. Sabapathi Mudaliar*². There the validity of the appointment of temple trustees came up for consideration, though a final adjudication on that question was not necessary. Sir John Wallis, C. J., held that such appointments were legally permissible and Sadasiva Aiyar agreed to the extent that committees might make temporary appointments in certain emergencies or exceptional cases.

1. (1898) I.L.R. 21 Mad. 179.

This analysis of the Madras cases shows (i) that no case is precisely in point and (ii) that the latest pronouncement is that a 'temporary' appointment (if that word can be held to apply to the present case) cannot be held to be void in all circumstances.

2. (1920) 13 L.W. 153.

I do not consider therefore that the Madras authorities compel me to hold that the appointment of second respondent was invalid. On the other hand *Golam Hossain Shah v. Altaf Hoosain*¹, is a direct authority on this point to the contrary. Appeal No. 54 accordingly fails and is dismissed.

There will be no order for costs throughout in either appeal.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by the fact is indeed admitted that the house was being used as a dyeing factory and that large quantities of chemicals and mordanted yarn, that is, yarn in the process of being dyed, were being stored in different parts of the building. It is clear from the evidence that these articles are liable to spontaneous combustion, and in particular the mordanted yarn. The case of the defendants was that there were watchmen employed to guard against fire and that the usual precautions were taken. The evidence, however, adduced in support of this contention was disbelieved by the Court below and after going through the evidence we see no reason to come to a different conclusion. Only one of the two watchmen was examined as a witness, namely, Krishna Ayyar, and he admits that for some time before the fire was observed, he and his fellow-watchman were "dozing" near the gate. Secondly the evidence adduced as regards buckets of water being kept handy to extinguish fire is not worthy of credit and it has been rejected by the Court below which heard it. In fact, the learned Subordinate Judge is not satisfied at all that any watchman was at the premises during the night in question. It is also clearly established that, beyond making a belated call for a fire engine, no real steps were taken by any one interested in the premises to put out the fire. It is certainly noteworthy that while the factory had insured its own goods against fire, it made no attempt to insure the building itself against fire. It must however be said that there is no satisfactory evidence in support of the suggestion that the fire was deliberately started. We might assume for the purpose of this case that the fire was accidental, but the question is whether the accident was due to negligence on the part of the defendant and his servants. On this point, having regard to the nature and quantity of the material stored in the premises, it was clearly the duty of the person in occupation to take special care and precaution against fire and it is clear that no such precautions were taken. It is admitted in the evidence that no attempt was made to rescue anything from the fire, and apparently no attempt was made even to get water from the well hard by. This is a case to which the maxim of res ipsa loquitur would apply, having regard to the circumstances of the case. The duty of the person in occupation was clear, having regard to the nature and quantity of the material stored in the premises, namely, to have efficient watchman to guard against spontaneous combustion and to have all reasonable fire equipment ready at hand. In this particular case, there is very good reason to doubt whether any watchmen were actually guarding the premises that night; and even if they did, they were admittedly negligent in the sense that they were sleeping when they ought to have been awake. As regards fire extinguishing appliances, there is no satisfactory evidence that any of them were supplied or were at hand. Even the telephone which could have been used for summoning the fire brigade in time was in a room which was locked and the key was not with the watchmen. On the whole, therefore, we see no reason to differ from the finding of the Court below that the fire in question was due to negligence on the part of the person in occupation. There is no objection taken to the quantum of damages awarded by the Court below.

An attempt was made to argue that the amount of damages for use and occupation awarded for the period subsequent to the fire ought to be reduced. But no such plea appears to have been raised in the Court below or in the grounds of appeal. We are, therefore, unable to allow it to be raised for the first time in appeal.

It follows that this appeal must fail and it is hereby dismissed with costs of respondents 1 to 4. The appellant must pay the court fee payable on the memorandum of appeal.

The tree patta gives the person to whom it is issued a right to enjoy the usufruct of the trees, the patta being liable to cancellation at the end of the year or at three months' notice. The Government have a right to resume them and grant them to others along with the land.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff held a tree patta from the Government for five tamarind trees standing on a house site, S. No. 848. That site had admittedly been vacant for some years; but five or six years ago defendants 2 to 6 came and settled there. S. No. 848 was a site reserved for the houses of Madigas. In accordance with the policy of the Government, set out in Board's Standing Order No. 18, the tree patta to the plaintiff was cancelled when defendants 2 to 6 came to settle on the site and the trees were offered to them. As they could not afford to purchase them, the tree patta was granted to them. The plaintiff was aggrieved at losing his tree patta and has brought this suit for a declaration of his right to enjoy the tamarind trees on his paying tree tax as usual and for recovery of possession and for mesne profits. The Government, as the first defendant, contended that the trees belonged to them and that they had a perfect right to grant the trees to whomsoever they pleased. The respective rights of Government and the tree pattadars were dealt with at great length by the Munsiff, who decreed the suit as prayed for.

In appeal, the learned District Judge disposed of the matter briefly by saying that a patta was not a document of title but was a mere bill for rent or tax which, being of little or no value, proved nothing. As that was the only evidence on which the Government could rely, the plaintiff was entitled to succeed.

With due deference to the opinion of the learned District Judge, I do not consider that a patta is quite such a valueless document as he thinks. As was pointed out by Srinivasa Ayyangar, J. in *The Official Assignee of Madras v. Badri Narayan Doss*¹, although a patta is not a title deed, it is a document of title, to which great weight is generally given both by the possessor and by the Government. It is true that a patta is not a title deed in the sense of a document, the grant of which conclusively passes title from the Government to the pattadar; but with regard to a first grant, at any rate, a patta is granted as a matter of course to the person to whom the Government has granted the land. The value of a patta generally comes up for consideration in proceedings between the pattadar and a third party; but as between the Government and the pattadar, a patta clearly has a greater value. The Government cannot say that the pattadar is not entitled to the land or the trees granted under the patta nor can the pattadar say that he is not holding title from the Government. A tree patta, moreover, differs from an ordinary ryotwari patta in being more in the nature of a lease, which was the original meaning of the word patta.

The case on which the plaintiff placed the most reliance in this Court (as in the trial Court) is Chinnappa Naidu v. Raju Goundan,² in which Ramesam, J. dealt with the question of the nature of a patta given to a tree pattadar in a case where the land on which the trees were standing was afterwards granted to another person. It is the policy of the Government in such circumstances to offer the tree pattadar the patta for the land also. If he is not willing to take it or if, for any other reason, a grant to that person is not desirable, then the land may be given to another; but in any event the tree patta is cancelled. The trees are then included in the patta of the land pattadar and his rent is fixed according to the value of the land and the trees. Ramesam, J. did not however dispose of the appeal on the ground that the tree pattadar has retained his title; for he finds that the trees were not actually standing on the land in question. I think the wording of Board's Standing Order 18 (2) indicates that the Government assert their ownership in the trees. If they do not, it is difficult to see how they can charge the pattadar of the land rent for the trees. In Sengoda Goundan v. Varadappan,³ two learned Judges of this Court were inclined to think that when the Government cancelled the tree patta, they did not intend to resume their rights in the trees; but to that case the Government were not parties; and the appeal was decided on the ground that even if the Government had intended to cancel the patta and to take away the rights of the former tree pattadar, they did not in fact grant these rights to the pattadar of the land. So the latter acquired no title to the trees at all and the enjoyment of the former tree pattadar could be protected against the land pattadars.

In the present instance the tree patta was issued under Board's Standing Order, 18 (2), which relates to unoccupied lands. The evidence of P. Ws. 1 to 3 is to the effect that the lands remained occupied until a few years before defendants 2 to 6 came into occupation; but the evidence of these three witnesses is interested, as they themselves attempted to pass title, under sale deeds, of these trees. The plaintiff in paragraph 8 of his claim says:

"The said Madigapalli became abandoned several years ago as the Madigas shifted to a different locality. Thereupon, the Government were collecting tree tax at the rate of 12 annas per tree from the persons who owned the said trees from time to time including the plaintiff."

I think this must be true, or a patta under Board's Standing Order 18 (2) would not have been issued. The relevant date is the 13th November, 1909, the date on which a tree patta was first granted to Babu Sahib. Appendix 20 of Board's Standing Orders says that "If a building.....is erected and is subsequently abandoned, that is, left unoccupied and is in disrepair for a period of one year, the Government shall have the right to re-enter forthwith and take possession of the said site or the site and building and shall not be liable to pay any compensation for any buildings or other improvements then existing on the land".

Although the Government do not ordinarily charge any tax for trees that are raised on unoccupied sites by the occupiers, there is nothing in Board's Standing Order 18 which suggests that the Government do not regard the trees as their property. They may not wish to discourage the occupiers from making improvements; but they do not thereby give up their rights to these improvements; and it is clear from Appendix 20 just quoted that where a site is abandoned, the Government are entitled to take over anything that remains standing on it, including the building and trees. If, therefore, on the 13th November, 1909, this land was unoccupied, the Government had a perfect right to the trees that were standing on that land and had therefore a right to issue a tree patta for them. The Government are certainly not bound by the various sales that took place from 1885 onwards.

Moreover, the plaintiff seems estopped from asserting that the trees do not belong to Government, because he and his predecessors-in-title accepted pattas from the Government which, as I have pointed out, is tantamount to an admission that they held title to the trees from the Government. Even if the payment of tree tax under Ex. 5 does not estop the plaintiff from denying that the land was unoccupied in 1909, it at any rate affords very strong evidence that the land was unoccupied in 1909 and that the Government therefore had a right to take over the land and all that stood thereon. The pattas issued to the plaintiff and his predecessor gave them a right to enjoy the usufruct of the trees, the patta being liable to cancellation at the end of the year or at three months' notice.

I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiff had no title to the trees at all and that the Government had a right to resume them and to grant them to defendants 2 to 6.

The appeal is allowed with the costs throughout of the 1st defendant and the suit dismissed.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), S. 78 (2)—Annulment of adjudication—Suit on debt beyond period of limitation—Debt provable but not proved in insolvency—If saved from the bar of limitation—"Proof of debt"—Meaning.

A promissory note was executed on 10th April, 1930, by the first respondent in favour of the plaintiff. The first respondent had been adjudicated an insolvent on 14th January, 1933, by an order which fixed 14th January, 1934, for applying for discharge. The adjudication was annulled under S. 43 on 16th August, 1934, as the insolvent defaulted in applying for discharge within time. A suit on the pronote was filed on 12th November, 1934. debt was given before adjudication under S. 24 but no proof as required by S. 49 was made. The plaintiff claimed an exclusion of the time during which the insolvency remained pending to save the suit from the bar of limitation.

Held, proof of debt in insolvency means that kind of proof only which entitles a creditor to have his name entered in the schedule and none other and unless a creditor tenders proof of his debt in the manner indicated by S. 49 his name cannot be entered in the schedule and however true his debt may be he cannot be allowed to come in for a dividend. Nor can he be permitted to claim in a suit for the recovery of the debt after annulment of the insolvency an exclusion of the time during which the insolvency remained pending.

JUDGMENT.—A somewhat interesting question relating to the construction of the proviso to S. 78 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 arises for consideration in this revision petition. The petitioner was the plaintiff in a small cause suit in which he sued to recover a sum of Rs. 1,000 on foot of a promissory note executed on 10th April, 1930, by the first respondent. The other respondents are the undivided sons of the first respondent. The suit was filed on 12th November, 1934, that is to say, one year seven months and two days after the period of limitation and is therefore prima facie time barred unless the plaintiff could claim the benefit of an exemption. To this end he relies on S. 78 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act which runs as follows:—

"Where an order of adjudication has been annulled under this Act, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit or application for the execution of a decree (other than a suit or application in respect of which the leave of the Court was obtained under sub-S. (2) of S. 28) which might have been brought or made but for the making of an order of adjudication under this Act, the period from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment shall be excluded:

Provided that nothing in this section shall apply to a suit or application in respect of a debt provable but not proved under this Act."

The first respondent had been adjudicated an insolvent on 14th January, 1933, by an order which fixed 14th January, 1934, as the last day for applying for discharge. The insolvent defaulted to make the application within time with the result, that the adjudication was annulled under S. 43 on 16th August, 1934. It will be seen that, if the period which elapsed from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment, namely, one year seven months and two days is excluded, the suit would just be in time. The question is whether the petitioner is entitled to have this period excluded. It may be mentioned that he would be entitled to have one more day excluded as the 11th November, 1934, the day previous to the institution of the suit happened to be a Sunday. If the section is applicable, there can be no doubt that the suit is in time.

Sait
Sogmull
Lachiram Firm
v.
Parandhamayya.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that S. 78 is not applicable and that the suit is barred by limitation, as the petitioner's debt though one provable under the Act had not been proved in the manner directed by the Act. It is clear on a consideration of the provisions of Ss. 28 and 78 of the Act, that two conditions have to be satisfied, before a party can claim the benefit of the exclusion enacted by the latter section. The suit or application in which limitation is pleaded must be in respect of a debt provable under the Act, and it must also have been proved under the Act. There can be no doubt that the debt in suit is one provable under the Act. The question is whether the second requisite has been satisfied in this case; in other words whether the debt had been proved under the Act.

The petitioner here was the petitioning creditor on whose petition the first respondent had been adjudicated insolvent. It is common ground that the promissory note in suit was the debt on which the petitioner successfully founded his right to present the insolvency petition. It may therefore be presumed that proof of the debt was given under S. 24 of the Act, before the adjudication order came to be made. It is also common ground that no proof as required by S. 49 had been made. Mr. Subramaniam appearing for the petitioner has urged that the word 'proved' in S. 78 should receive a liberal interpretation, that S. 49 merely indicates one method of proof, which should not be regarded as the only method of proof recognised by the Act. He has relied on a ruling of the Calcutta High Court in *Krishna Chandra Das v. Jotindra Nath Poria*¹, where Ghose and Bose, JJ., have expressed the opinion that S. 49 only specifies a simple mode of proof but does not exclude any other mode of proof, and that a debt should be held proved under S. 78, if it had been proved in the course of the proceedings leading to the adjudication of an insolvent. With respect, I find myself wholly unable to accept this interpretation as correct, whether we look at the meaning of the word itself, or the object behind the proviso to S. 78.

Proof of a debt in insolvency is an expression well known to courts and lawyers, and there can be little doubt that it is the kind of proof that a creditor is called upon to give in order to enable him to obtain a dividend in the rateable distribution of the assets of the insolvent. 'Proof' in this connection has almost become a word of technical import, and is not to be understood as meaning any kind of proof at any stage of a proceeding without reference to the purpose for, and the manner in which it is given. Proof given and accepted in a Civil Court, and not open to challenge there is still open to question when its validity is impugned in an insolvency Court. Proof of a debt for the purposes of Ss. 11 and 24 is merely proof that a person is insolvent and is in the nature of a preliminary step which leads to the Court taking up the administration of an insolvent's estate, but proof in insolvency is proof adduced after the Court has taken up the administration and in order to enable it to make a proper distribution. Proof under S. 11 is ordinarily in a proceeding between the petitioning creditor and the insolvent, but proof under S. 49, which is proof proper in insolvency, is one to which objection can be taken by the Official Receiver or any of the creditors.

S. 34 defines debts provable under the Act, and includes all debts and demands except demands in the nature of unliquidated damages arising otherwise than by a contract or a breach of trust. S. 33 calls upon all persons alleging themselves to be creditors in respect of debts provable under the Act to tender proof of their respective debts by producing evidence of the amount and particulars thereof, and then the Court is directed by order to determine the persons who have proved themselves to be creditors, and the amount of their debts, so that it may be enabled to frame the all important schedule which is to form the basis of the distribution of the realized assets in dividends, subject, of course, to the provisions of Ss. 56, 62, 63 and 64. To no person whose name is not included in the schedule can a dividend be paid. S. 61 (5) provides that subject to the provisions of the Act, all debts entered in the schedule shall be paid rateably, and S. 64 relating to the final dividend makes it clear that the property of the insolvent is to be divided among the creditors entered in the schedule only, and without regard to the claims of any other persons. I feel no doubt whatever that proof of debt in insolvency means that kind of proof only which entitles a creditor to have his name entered in the schedule and none other. The opposite construction is in my judgment entirely opposed to the fundamental scheme of the Act. It follows that evidence given to make out that a petitioning creditor is qualified to apply to have the debtor adjudicated insolvent, is not proof in insolvency, and unless he tenders proof of his debt in the manner indicated by S. 49, his name cannot be entered in the schedule; and however true his debt may be, he cannot be allowed to come in for a dividend. Nor can he be permitted to claim in a suit for the recovery of the debt after annulment of the insolvency, an exclusion of the time during which the insolvency remained pending if he had not proved the debt in the sense explained above. The decision of this Court in *Ramalinga Iyer Firm v. Rayalu Ayyar Nagasami Iyer Firm*¹ proceeded on the special circumstances that a decree for the debt had been obtained, after adjudication against the insolvent and the Official Receiver, and the learned judges while holding that the debt must be taken to have been proved within S. 78 by the decree being obtained, expressly guarded themselves against being understood as laying down a general rule as regards the meaning of the word "proved".

It is to be observed that S. 78 was newly introduced into the present Act, in view of the Full Bench decision of this Court in *Lingayya v. Chinna Narayana*² that the general provisions of the Limitation Act could not be held applicable to proceedings under the old Act, vis., III of 1907. In *Ramaswami Pillai v. Govindasami Naicker*³ a Division Bench of this Court held that the provisions of S. 15 of the Limitation Act could not be invoked so as to secure an exclusion of the time during which an insolvency might be pending, inasmuch as an order of adjudication did not amount to an absolute injunction or stay, but only made it necessary that leave of Court should be obtained before a suit could be filed. The position would be different if leave had been asked for and refused as in that case the creditor would be precluded from pursuing his remedy by suit against the debtor until the adjudication is annulled. It was to meet this situation, that S. 78 was inserted in the new Act. This section and the amended S. 29 of the Limitation Act have tended to remedy the hardship arising out of the Full Bench decision to which reference has been made.

The question which arises for consideration here is somewhat different from the question of the applicability of the general provisions of the Limitation Act to a special Act such as the Insolvency Act is, though it does appear to me that the intention behind S. 78 was not to extend the Limitation Act but rather to exclude it. In my judgment, S. 78 (2) was intended to incorporate the principle of S. 14 of the Limitation Act, so as to meet the situation which is likely to arise frequently in insolvencies. That principle operates to enable a person who was prosecuting with due diligence another proceeding founded upon the same cause of action, in another Court, to exclude the time during which he was so prosecuting that proceeding. The section withholds help to a person who has not shown due diligence, as where he obtains leave of Court under S. 28 (2) but omits to take action. Similarly it insists that the creditor should so far as the Act permits, prosecute his claim to recover the whole or portion of the debt, by tendering a proof under S. 49, by which he will be deemed to have proved the debt as held in *Lakshmi Bai v. Rukmaji Rao*¹. Want of diligence, and failure to do what could be done to recover the debt in spite of the insolvency, that is to say, a failure to prove for the debt, would deprive a party of the benefit of the section.

From what has been said, the petition fails as neither S. 78 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act nor S. 14 of the Limitation Act can avail a party in respect of a debt provable but not proved under the Act. The Civil Revision Petition is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The Official Receiver was authorised to sell in the father's insolvency the non-insolvent son's share also within three months and pay the money into execution Court. The sale did not take place within the time and pending proceedings to withdraw the sale from the Official Receiver and for sale through Court, the Official Receiver actually sold the property on 28th October, 1935, the price being received by the Official Receiver in two instalments on 29th October, 1935, and 7th November, 1935. Two other creditors filed execution petitions on 30th November, 1935, and 20th December, 1935, respectively. Sale deed was drawn up on 30th March, 1936, and son's share of sale proceeds paid into Court by the Official Receiver. The sale was finally ratified by the Court on 8th April, 1936.

Held, the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court must be the date on which the money was actually paid by the Official Receiver into the Court. The two creditors who filed the subsequent execution petitions will be entitled to share rateably in the sale proceeds.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Devakottai dated 14th April, 1936, and made in E. P. No. 381 of 1935 in O. S. No. 165 of 1934.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This petition raises a question relating to rateable distribution which is not, so far as I am aware, covered by any precise authority. The petitioner, the first respondent and the second respondent, all had decrees against the third respondent and his father, who became an insolvent. The first respondent executed his decree on 15th October, 1934, and on

Chettiar
v.
Vellayan
Chettiar.

5th January, 1935, the Court ordered sale of the entire properties of the father and the son. This order was modified by a later order restricting the sale only to the second defendant's half share and after this order, the Official Receiver was impleaded and when he did not appear, the order was again revised directing that the entire properties should be sold. At this stage, the Official Receiver wrote to the Court pointing out that if he were permitted to sell the entire property as the agent of the Court and deposit into Court the share of the non-insolvent son, this procedure would be for the benefit of the attaching decree-holder. The Court on 13th February, 1935, passed an order permitting the Official Receiver to sell the entire property as desired by him and directing him to hold the sale within three months. The Official Receiver did not hold the sale within the time allowed and the executing Court was approached to withdraw the sale from the Official Receiver and sell through the Court. While correspondence between the Court and the Official Receiver was proceeding with reference to this proposal, the Official Receiver actually sold the property on 28th October, 1935, the price being received by the Official Receiver in two instalments on 29th October, 1935, and 7th November, 1935. It is common ground that on the latter date the execution petitions of the petitioner and the second respondent had not yet been filed. The petitioner's execution petition was filed on 30th November, 1935, and that of the second respondent on 20th December, 1935. After the Official Receiver's sale was concluded, there was further correspondence and no sale deed was drawn up until on 30th March, 1936, the Official Receiver paid the son's share of the sale proceeds into Court and on 8th April, 1936, the sale was finally ratified by the Court.

Quite clearly, if the date of the payment of the sale proceeds to the Official Receiver is the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court, for the purpose of S. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, the petitioner and the second respondent have no right to share rateably in these assets. If, on the other hand, the date of the receipt is the date when the money was actually paid by the Official Receiver into Court, then both the petitioner and the second respondent are entitled to rateable distribution. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken the view that the date of the receipt of the assets is the date of the receipt by the Official Receiver acting as the agent of the Court. He rests his view largely on the decision in Galstaun v. Woome's Chandra Bonnerjee,¹ which can hardly be said to be a case exactly covering the facts with which we now have to deal. That was a case of the sale of movable property by the Court and with reference to movable property the rules prescribe that the price of each lot shall be paid at the time of the sale, presumably to the officer who holds the sale. The learned Judges, distinguishing a case relating to immovable property, point out that if the entire purchase money was paid by the purchasers into the hands of the auctioneers in one instalment, it was immaterial for the purpose of S. 73 whether the purchase money was actually paid into the treasury or into the hands of the person employed by the Court to hold the sale.

Annamalai
v.
Vellayan
Chettiar.

The present case, however, presents certain special features. At the time when the Official Receiver held this sale, he was not authorised to hold it. He had failed to hold it within the time allowed and when he actually held the sale, the Court had apparently decided to withdraw from him the power to hold the sale. Presumably he must be regarded as having been appointed in the first instance as the selling officer under O. 21, r. 65. But it does not appear that there was any regular proclamation by the Court, though the value for the purpose of the proclamation had been settled at an earlier stage. Assuming that the Official Receiver was the selling officer appointed by the Court under r. 65, his proceedings would necessarily be governed by the provisions of O. 21. In accordance with those provisions he would have authority to receive a deposit of 25 per cent. of the purchase price, but the balance would under r. 85 be payable into Court. Assuming that the lack of authority of the Official Receiver to sell at the time of the sale and the lack of regularity in the manner of the sale have been condoned by the subsequent ratification of the Court and by the absence of any objection to the irregularities of the procedure, it seems to me difficult to hold that the Official Receiver was the agent of the Court to receive this money when, in the case of sales of immovable property, the rules under which the Official Receiver was authorised contemplate only the power of the officer to receive 25 per cent. of the purchase price, the balance being payable into Court. When there is clearly no authority given to the agent to receive the full amount of the purchase price, I find difficulty in holding that the receipt by the agent in contravention of the rules under which he should have been operating, can, by virtue of subsequent ratification of his irregular sale, be deemed to have been a receipt by the Court; and there is the further difficulty that the adoption of such a view would deprive the other decree-holders of their accrued rights of sharing in any assets which might be received by the Court after the date on which their execution petitions were filed. It cannot, in my opinion, be said that there had been, at the time when these two execution petitions were filed, any receipt of these sale proceeds by the Court. All that had then happened was an unauthorised and irregular sale by the Official Receiver and an unauthorised receipt by the Official Receiver of the proceeds of that sale. There was nothing in the hands of the Court resulting from this sale and there was at the time when these execution petitions were filed no subsisting authority to the Official Receiver to sell. We are not now concerned with the final validity of the sale. That has been accepted by the Court and no one has objected. But it does seem to me apparent that this subsequent ratification by the Court cannot transmute the unauthorised receipt of this money by the Official Receiver into a receipt by the Court. My attention has been drawn to numerous cases relating to the receipt of assets by Collectors executing decrees under the third schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. I do not propose to discuss those cases, for it seems to me that they depend upon the special statutory provisions which give to the Collector functions to some extent analogous to those of executing Courts and have no real bearing on the facts of the present case. It is clear that the Official Receiver in this case must have been either the officer appointed by the Court to sell under R. 65, or a party selling with the permission of the Court under R. 83, if the sale is to have any validity so far as the son's share was concerned. In the Court below it was not suggested that he acted under r. 83 and it seems to me unnecessary to consider the case from this aspect.

In the result therefore I am of opinion that the date of the receipt of the assets by the Court must be the date on which the money was actually paid by the Official Receiver into the Court. The petition is therefore allowed with costs here and in the Court below. The petitioner and the second respondent will be entitled to share rateably in the proceeds of the sale of the third respondent's share in the property.

Marshalling—Right of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), S. 56—Amending Act (XX of 1929)—Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 34, rr. 4 and 5—Whether to be relied upon in the circumstances.

Venkanna
v.
Ramanna.

After the amending Act of 1929 to the Transfer of Property Act, the right of marshalling in equity and in law is co-extensive and there is no justification to extend the legal right of marshalling by relying on the provisions of O. 34, rr. 4 and 5 in a way which cannot be justified by any well established principle.

Where the appellant, the purchaser of one of several items mortgaged in favour of the plaintiff in the suit, wanted that his property should be sold after exhausting all the properties covered not only by suit mortgages but also the properties covered by another mortgage,

Held, that the appellant's claim so far as the properties covered by another mortgage should be negatived. As regards the properties covered by suit mortgages the right of marshalling obviously existed under S. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, and in ordering sale of properties, the Court was bound to give protection to the appellant in such a way so as not to prejudice the rights of the mortgagee.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Pandrang Row, J.—This appeal raises a question of marshalling. The appellant is the purchaser of one of several items mortgaged in favour of the plaintiff in the suit, namely, item 3, under the suit mortgage, Ex. A, dated 24th August, 1921. This item was purchased by the eighth defendant in 1925 for a sum of Rs. 13,000. The appellant wanted that his property, namely, item 3, should be sold last after exhausting all the properties covered not only by the suit mortgage, Ex. A, but also the suit mortgage Ex. B of April, 1926, and even the properties in another District namely, Vizag mortgaged under Ex. C in 1930. This claim was disallowed by the Court below and the eighth defendant appeals.

Pandrang

So far as the properties covered by Ex. C are concerned, the appellant's property, item 3 of A Schedule, is not included in it, and it is conceded before us that the appellant will not be entitled under S. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act to claim the right of marshalling as against Ex. C properties. This concession was obviously unavoidable because the words of the section themselves are very clear that the right of marshalling can be claimed only where "the owner of two or more properties mortgages them to one person and then sells one or more of the properties to another person". So far as the Ex. C properties are concerned, it is obvious that this condition is not satisfied. It is satisfied only so far as Ex. A properties are concerned. It follows therefore that the appellant is not entitled to ask that Ex. C properties should be sold before the item in which he has an interest, namely, item 3 of A Schedule, is sold.

Some argument was addressed to us with a view to make out a case apart from S. 56 as if there was some other rule of law or equity, which entitled the appellant to marshal as against Ex. C properties even when the section defining the right of marshalling does not recognise such a right. He relied on the words "sufficient part" found in O. 34, rr. 4 and 5, Code of Civil Procedure, which give the Court the power to order the sale of the whole of the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof, as conferring upon the Court a power, apart from rules of law relating to marshalling contained in the Transfer of Property Act, to give relief in respect of marshalling to a wider extent than is recognised by the substantive law. Even assuming that this contention is right, without deciding it, it does not follow that the Court would be justified in using that power unless some recognised principle of law or equity justified the exercise of the power in favour of the appellant. It is not shown that there is any special equity in favour of the appellant so far as the Ex. C Schedule properties are concerned. The resort made to the provisions of O. 34, rr. 4 and 5 in certain decisions that were quoted to us was necessitated by the fact that those cases had to be decided under the old Act, before it was amended in 1929, which did not in so many words declare that the right of marshalling to the same extent as the doctrine of equity did, and it was therefore open to the Court in exercising its powers under the provisions of O. 34, rr. 4 and 5 to exercise its discretionary power so as to give effect to the full right of marshalling as recognised by equity.

At present the position is different in the sense that the right of marshalling in equity and in law is co-extensive and there is no justification, in our opinion, to extend the legal rights of marshalling by relying on the provisions of O. 34, rr. 4 and 5 in a way which cannot be justified by any well established principle.

The appellant's claim, therefore, so far as Ex. C properties are concerned, must be negated. As regards the other properties covered by Ex. A the right of marshalling obviously exists under S. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act, and in ordering these properties to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree, the Court is bound to give protection to the appellant in such a way so as not to prejudice the rights of the mortgagee. It follows from this principle that the properties covered by Ex. A have to be sold in the following order, item one of course not being liable to sale as found by the Court below as it has been exonerated from the mortgage. The order in which the items are to be sold will be as follows: item 4, item 2, items 5 to 7 subject to the prior mortgage in favour of Alapati Gurayya, item 3 and item 8. To this extent the decree of the Court below will be modified. In the circumstances, the appellant will bear his own costs and pay half the costs of the plaintiff-respondent in the appeal.

Nagi Reddi
v.
Nanjundappa*Illatom son-in-law—Arrangement—Agreement to be inferred in the absence of specific evidence.*

It has never been held that a mere arrangement to take a boy as an illatom son-in-law followed by living in the prospective father-in-law's household, but not followed by marriage to the proposed bride, will complete an illatom affiliation to the family.

But where in the absence of specific evidence the existing evidence postulated the assumption that at the time when the plaintiff was a major, the deceased man authorised the completion of an arrangement for illatom affiliation by the marriage of the plaintiff to his daughter and he was thereafter treated as an illatom son-in-law, it must be inferred that there was an agreement on the basis of which the illatom affiliation was carried out.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Salem dated 1st February, 1935, and made in A. S. No. 148 of 1934 (A. S. No. 103 of 1934, District Court, Salem), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Krishnagiri dated 31st January, 1934, and made in O. S. No. 121 of 1931.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed properties on the basis of an alleged illatom affiliation.

The plaintiff married the daughter of one Konda Reddi who died about the year 1909. The facts found are that Konda Reddi at a time when he had no children took the plaintiff into his family apparently with the idea of a regular adoption. Subsequently there were born to Konda Reddi first a son, then a daughter and then another son. After the birth of the son it is found that Konda Reddi, no longer being able to adopt the plaintiff, formed the idea that, in due course, he would marry his daughter to the plaintiff and take the plaintiff as an illatom son-in-law. On this understanding the plaintiff continued to live in the family. But an epidemic of plague intervened, the eldest son being the first victim, followed by Konda Reddi himself about a week later. It is found as a fact that on his deathbed Konda Reddi instructed his wife to complete the illatom affiliation by marrying the daughter to the plaintiff. It would appear that the plaintiff was a major at the time of Konda Reddi's death. After his death the marriage of the plaintiff to Konda Reddi's daughter was duly carried out by the widow and it is found as a fact by the Courts below that thereafter the plaintiff was treated as the illatom son-in-law of the deceased Konda Reddi, that he lived in the family and managed the properties for his mother-in-law. It is not open in Second Appeal to attack the findings of fact on the essential questions of the authorisation by Konda Reddi to his wife to complete the application and of the subsequent marriage and the status recognised in favour of the plaintiff as an illatom son-in-law. It is, however, contended that there is no finding nor proof of such an agreement as is necessary to form the basis of an illatom adoption.

v.
Nanjundappa

The case has certain peculiarities. In the first place it comes from the Salem District which is not one of the Districts in which the illatom custom is widely recognised. Another peculiarity is that, according to the Subordinate Judge, the parties belong to the Kammala caste. But I am constrained to conclude that this must be a mistake due to the unfamiliarity of the learned Judge with the Telugu caste name, for the learned Judge, after stating that the parties are Kammala Reddis, states that this is one of the castes in respect of which Mayne's Hindu Law recognises that the illatom practice prevails. Actually the learned author recognises the existence of the custom in the Kamma and Reddi castes, not in the Kammala caste which is quite a different community and one in which, so far as I am aware, it has never been suggested that this practice peculiar to the various castes which call themselves Reddis can apply. The Kammala caste is essentially a Tamil caste of artisans, not to be confused with the Telugu Kamma caste, which not infrequently adopts the title of Reddi and has strong affinities with the numerous Kapu castes, the members of which are normally known as Reddis. But I am unable to find any basis in the record for the Subordinate Judge's description of this community as Kammala Reddi. The witnesses describe themselves as Reddis simply. Presumably, they must

v.
Nanjundappa.

be Kamma Reddis wrongly described by the Subordinate Judge as Kammala Reddis.

It was not disputed in the Courts below that the community to which the parties belonged was one which recognises the custom of illatom affiliation. I do not think that the Subordinate Judge is quite right in saying that the validity of the particular affiliation alleged was not denied; for it is in fact put in issue. The incidents of the very widespread practice of illatom affiliation have not been completely established by judicial decisions and it was recognised by a Bench of this Court in *Subba Rao v. Mahalakshamma*¹, that these incidents should ordinarily be settled by evidence in the particular case. There are, however, certain incidents of the custom which have been established by decisions. It is well recognised that an illatom affiliation is a creature of agreement. *Narayadu v. Venkamma*². But I do not think that this means that in every case of an illatom affiliation there must be a detailed contract embodying all the incidents of the arrangement in the particular case. Normally there would be an agreement between the father of the boy, if he was a minor and the prospective father-in-law or, if the prospective son-in-law was a major, between the son-in-law himself and the prospective father-in-law, that the proposed illatom son-in-law should be taken into the family by his prospective father-in-law with a view to his marriage with a daughter of the house and the conferment upon him of the illatom status, with its customary incidents. These customary incidents being well known would not ordinarily be the subject of specific agreement. It is settled by the Privy Council's decision reported in *Krishnamma v. Venkatasubbayya*³, that the practice of illatom affiliation is frequently followed even when the family into which the son-in-law had been taken has a natural born son living. There is also authority in *Venkayalapatti Venkatachalam v. Negaudla Butchanna*⁴, for the proposition that, when a boy has been taken into a family on the understanding that he would be married to a daughter and given the status of an illatom son-in-law, the arrangement may be completed by the solemnisation of the marriage even after the death of the prospective father-in-law. So far as I am aware, it has never been held that a mere arrangement to take a boy as an illatom son-in-law, followed by living in the prospective father-in-law's household, but not followed by marriage to the proposed bride, will complete an illatom affiliation. In the present case it has been found that the plaintiff was taken into the household of Konda Reddi originally with a view to a regular adoption but, after the birth of a son to Konda Reddi, he continued there under a proposal that he should be married to the daughter and treated as an illatom son-in-law. It has been found that on his deathbed Konda Reddi asked his wife to complete this arrangement by marrying the daughter to the plaintiff, giving him a share in the property as an illatom son-in-law. It has also been found that the arrangement was completed and the marriage performed and that the plaintiff did live in his mother-in-law's household as an illatom son-in-law. These findings of fact are in my opinion sufficient to warrant a legal inference that the plaintiff was an illatom son-in-law. It is true that there is no specific evidence of any actual agreement for an illatom affiliation but the whole of the evidence postulates the assumption that, at the time when the plaintiff was a major, Konda Reddi authorised the completion of an arrangement for illatom affiliation by the marriage of the plaintiff to his daughter. The plaintiff performed his part by marrying the daughter and was thereafter treated as an illatom son-in-law. From these facts it must, I think, be inferred that there was an agreement on the basis of which the illatom affiliation was carried out.

In this view, therefore, I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Leave refused.

Where the first petitioner was not found jointly keeping or managing or assisting the second petitioner in the management of a brothel, Held, she was not therefore to be convicted under S. 5 (1) of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act, as she could not be said to have been living on the earnings of the prostitution of another person. Her conviction under S. 8-A (1) of the Act was also unsustainable.

Petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Third Presidency Magistrate of the Court of the Presidency Magistrates, Egmore, Madras, dated 7th December, 1938 and passed in C. C. No. 1169 of 1938.

V. T. Rangaswami Aiyangar and A. B. Viswanathan for Petitioners.

K. V. Rameseshan for The Crown Prosecutor for the Crown.

The Court made the following ORDER.—There is no ground for dissent from the conclusion of the Magistrate that the house in question was a brothel and it is clear from the evidence of P.W. 2 that the second petitioner the lessee was keeping the brothel and living on the prostitution of the women found there on the night of the raid. He would therefore be guilty under Ss. 5 (1) and 8-A (1) of the Suppression of Immoral Traffic Act but the first petitioner who is his sister was being used for prostitution and there is no evidence that she was jointly keeping or managing or acting or assisting in the management of the brothel. She cannot therefore be convicted under S. 5 (1) of the Act and as rightly conceded it cannot be said that she was living on the earnings of the prostitution of another person. Her conviction under S. 8-A (1) of the Act is also unsustainable and she is entitled to an acquittal. The conviction and sentence of the first petitioner are therefore set aside and she is acquitted.

The conviction of the second petitioner is confirmed but this is his first offence, and the sentence is rather excessive. The sentence is therefore reduced to rigorous imprisonment for three months under each section to run concurrently, and otherwise his petition is dismissed.

In re.

The Police may, while endeavouring to discover the author of a crime, make enquiries of, or put questions to, any person from whom they think they can obtain useful information. But when once an accused person has been arrested, while they may and indeed should, listen to any statement which he may voluntarily make, they are strictly forbidden to interrogate him or press him to make a statement.

Held, that a statement made by the accused to the Superintendent of Police after six hours' questioning by the latter could not be taken to be a voluntary statement, and that the same should be excluded from consideration by reason of S. 24 of the Evidence Act.

Held however, that so much of the statement made to the Police Officer as related to the production of a material object by the accused could be looked into.

This is a somewhat unusual case; the appellant single-handed is supposed to have killed a Forest Guard and a Forest Watcher and another man. The prosecution case was that the appellant and a little boy examined as P. Watcher Somayya and another man Penchulagadu a relation of Kesavalu. These three are supposed to have stopped the appellant and P. W. 2 and the appellant is supposed to have killed them one after the other: Kesavalu first, Penchulagadu second and Somayya third. Kesavalu and Penchulagadu are supposed to have been unarmed but Somayya was armed with a bill-hook which by the looks of it is quite as efficient a weapon as M. O. 5 which is said to be the appellant's weapon. The appellant escaped with nothing worse than a slight cut on his left forearm.

The prosecution story was spoken to in the Court of the committing magistrate by the little boy P. W. 2 who is a child of 13 and he described how on the morning of the 16th March, the appellant took him to cut fuel and how on the way back they were intercepted and the appellant cut all the three men. His deposition before the sub-Magistrate was filed in the Sessions Court as Ex. G. The learned Sessions Judge has not expressly stated so, but it is clear that he meant to do this under the power conferred upon him by S. 288, Code of Criminal Procedure because the boy in the Sessions Court stated that he knew nothing whatever about the matter and obstinately refused to answer any questions except "I do not know". P. W. 2 is supposed to have been the only eye-witness and the only other item of evidence of any importance against the appellant is that on the morning of the 19th of March, he made a statement to the Superintendent of Police which led to the discovery of a bill-hook (M. O. 5) which the appellant said was the weapon used by him to kill all the three deceased. The appellant thereupon is said to have taken the Police and certain respectable persons to a place in the forest 25 or 30 yards from the place where the corpses were found and there to have produced from under a bush this aruval (M.O. 5). Supposing for the moment that the evidence is admissible under S. 27 of the Evidence Act, there is no corroboration of the truth of the statements made by the appellant because the aruval when sent to the Chemical Examiner was not found to be stained with blood. Mr. Jayarama Aiyar who has appeared for the appellant in this Court has contended that evidence regarding the statements made by the appellant before the production of (M. O. 5) ought not to have been admitted. We think that this contention is well-founded. The appellant is said to have made a statement to the Superintendent of Police P. W. 8 on the morning of the 19th March, but the Superintendent of Police was obliged to admit that for four hours on the night before, that is, from 7-15 to 11-15 and for two hours on the morning of the 19th he was questioning the appellant. This was a flagrant violation of R. 303 in Vol. I of the Madras Police Executive Orders. It is there laid down that:-

"The practice of resorting to persuasion, trickery or oppression to induce any accused person to confess is prohibited. It is right that the Police, when they are endeavouring to discover the author of a Crime, should make inquiries of, or put questions to, any person from whom they think they can obtain useful information. But when once an accused person has been arrested, while they may, and indeed should, listen to any statement which he may voluntarily make, they are strictly forbidden to interrogate him or press him to make a statement."

It would be absurd to suppose that the statement made by the appellant to the Superintendent of Police after six hours' questioning was a voluntary statement. The learned Public Prosecutor has raised the question whether even if the statements were not voluntary, the evidence regarding the production of the arival would nevertheless be inadmissible. We think that there is no difficulty about admitting the evidence in so far as the production of the arival alone is concerned, but we agree with Mr. Jayarama Aiyar that evidence regarding the statement made by the appellant in connection with it could not be admitted; it would be ruled out by S. 24 of the Evidence Act.

The case is wholly unsatisfactory. It is not at all clear how the Superintendent of Police came into contact with P. W. 2 and consequently the appellant. The evidence of the Police officers on this point is discrepant. There were engaged in the case the sub-Inspector of Police, the Circle Inspector P. W. 18 and the District Superintendent of Police P. W. 8, not to mention the Head Constable P. W. 16 who held an inquest for four hours on the 17th March, at which he examined only one witness P. W. 7 who could give nothing but hearsay evidence about the discovery of the corpses. Now the boy P. W. 2 is supposed to have told what he had seen to P. W. 10 on the morning of the 17th March, but P. W. 10 did not disclose anything of what he had learnt at the inquest held on that day. The sub-Inspector says that P. W. 10 was not examined by him or by the Circle Inspector before the District Superintendent of Police came, which was on the evening of the 18th March. The Circle Inspector also says that he did not examine P. W. 10 but he says that the Superintendent of Police examined him in his presence on the 18th March, before P. W. 2 was examined. P. W. 10 however says that he was examined by both the Inspector and the sub-Inspector on the morning of the day on which the District Superintendent arrived, that is, the 18th. The District Superintendent does not say anything about having examined P. W. 10 and it does not appear from his evidence how he came into contact with P. W. 2.

Papiah,

In so far as the evidence of P. W. 2 is concerned, it is clear that his deposition in the Magistrate's Court could be used as substantive evidence under S. 288, Criminal Procedure Code, if the learned Sessions Judge had recorded his opinion that the witness was speaking the truth before the Committing Magistrate and had resorted to falsehood before him. But it is clear that the evidence of such a witness as this is not to be safely relied upon in the absence of corroboration. Now, so far as the statement made by the appellant to the Superintendent of Police is concerned, it is clear that it is not consistent with the evidence given by the boy P. W. 2. According to P. W. 2 when he and the appellant were coming away from the forest, they were first stopped by Penchulagadu whom the witness calls Mokatigadu. He says that it was Penchulagadu who first caught hold of the appellant. But the appellant when he was describing the occurrence to the Superintendent of Police said that it was Kesavalu who caught hold of the bundle of fuel which he was carrying on his head. It is singular also that the appellant spoke to the Superintendent of Police about a bundle of fuel whereas P. W. 2 said that he and the appellant had cut logs of wood. The fuel which the appellant and P. W. 2 are supposed to have cut in the forest and which must have been dropped at the place where the murders took place was not apparently found by the police and has not been exhibited in the case. Nor is there any evidence regarding the trees from which the fuel was supposed to have been cut.

The evidence of the doctor who made the post mortem examination of the bodies is quite inconsistent with the story told by P. W. 2 in the lower Court. The doctor found nothing but clean cut wounds on all the bodies; P. W. 2 says that the appellant used the back of the aruval against all the three men.

The back of the aruval is nearly a quarter of an inch thick and could not produce clean cut wounds.

We find the evidence in this case wholly insufficient to sustain the conviction of the appellant. We therefore set aside the conviction and the sentence of death and direct that the appellant be set at liberty forthwith.

Criminal Procedure Code (V of 1898), S. 342—Accused directly addressed points for answers by Sessions Judge—Opportunity for explanation given—Omission in putting questions whether could cause failure of justice—Other circumstances in evidence favouring inference of murder—Conviction not to be set aside without grounds for suspecting failure of justice.

Annamalai
Mudali,
In re.

It is clear that when an accused in answer to a general question or even one or two questions gives a reply or replies which show that he is well aware of all the circumstances appearing in evidence against him and their implications and attempts to explain them, the Sessions Judge may be going beyond his province if he questions him further in detail. It is not possible to lay down a more general rule than that it is the duty of the Court to be satisfied either by his statements or his answers to questions or both that the accused explains or has an opportunity to explain circumstances from which hostile inferences may be drawn against him.

Where a person was accused of murdering his wife and the evidence of the prosecution witnesses was to the effect that the accused took his wife away from the house on the morning of the murder, that he took her by train to a place and afterwards was seen with her near the time of sunset on the same day and at the place where her dead body was found next morning and it was proved that the accused on being questioned about his dead wife's jewels produced M. Os. which she was wearing according to the evidence, and the only possible inference that could be drawn was that the accused was responsible for the murder of his wife,

Held, that in the absence of any suggestion from the accused's counsel that the omission of the Sessions Judge to put every point to the accused in the form of questions had led to a failure of justice, the conviction of the accused based on evidence before the assessors and the Sessions Judge could not be set aside. No omission to comply strictly with S. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, can render a conviction liable to be set aside, unless in fact it has occasioned failure of justice.

the said prisoner in Case No. 34 of the Calendar for 1939 on 9th October, 1939.

Nugent Grant for K. S. Jayarama Aiyar and G. Gopala-swami for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) for the Crown.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The accused, Annamalai Mudali, has been convicted of murder by the learned Sessions Judge of South Arcot, and has been sentenced to death. The case against him was that he murdered his wife Danabagiam on the 12th February, 1939.

With the exception of an extra judicial confession which the accused is said to have made to his father-in-law's brother (P. W. 20) the evidence against the accused was entirely circumstantial. The body of Dhanabagiam (wife of the accused) was found on the morning of the 13th February, in a field within the limits of the village of Eriyur in Kallakurichi Taluk. It was about one mile from the railway station of Pukkiravari on the Salem Virudhachalam line. Information was given at first to the Village Munsif of Ulagianallur who was dead before the trial took place. He apparently discovered that the corpse was not lying within the limits of the village, and therefore he sent a yadast (Ex. F) to P.W. 19, the V.M. of Eriyur. P.W. 19 received Ex. F at about 2-30 P.M. and sent reports Exs. G and G-1 to the Police at Varanjaram and the Sub-Magistrate of Kallakurichi. The Inspector of Police (P. W. 22) heard of this case when he went to the police station at Varanjaram at 8 P.M. The Inspector went to Kallakurichi the same night and next morning proceeded partly by road and partly by rail to Pukkiravari, taking with him the Assistant Surgeon from the Hospital at Kallakurichi and also a photographer. The Inspector reached Pukkiravari at 9-45 and proceeded on foot to the place where the body lay one mile south of the railway station. He held an inquest during the forenoon and it was concluded by 2 P.M. The body was photographed, and then the Assistant Surgeon made the post-mortem examination. This disclosed that the woman had been strangled to death. There is no dispute about the manner of her death, and the case is clearly one of murder.

At the inquest it was not known who the deceased was. Enquiries were set on foot and the accused was arrested at Sathanur at 2-30 A.M. on the 18th February. After he had been arrested he made a statement to the police and produced from the house of one Periasami Mudali where he was staying, three jewels (M. Os. 1, 2 and 4) which according to the prosecution belonged to the deceased Dhanabagiam, and which she was wearing when she was last seen alive.

A large number of witnesses were examined to prove that the accused was with his wife on the 12th February, from about morning meal time until shortly before sunset. P. W. 4 who was a farm servant in the house of the father of the accused at Naduvalur, said that on the morning of the 12th February, the accused took his wife away from his father's house. Naduvalur is to the south of the Salem-Vridhachalam railway line and according to the prosecution the accused took his wife to Kattukottai the nearest railway station. He was seen at the station at 1 P.M. on the 12th February, in company with a woman. The station-master (P. W. 5) said that the accused bought two tickets for himself and the woman from Kattukottai to Pukkiravari, and got into the 2-30 P.M. train with the woman. That he got into the train was spoken to by 3 other witnesses P. Ws. 6, 7 and 8, and they also said that at Pukkiravari the accused and the woman alighted. This was the evidence also of the station-master of Pukkiravari P. W. 9 and the pointsman (P. W. 10). P. W. 11 is a man who keeps a little shop for light refreshments just outside the railway station at Pukkiravari. He said that on the afternoon of the 12th February, the accused and a woman passed near his shop, and that the woman sat down under a tamarind tree quite close to his house while the accused went into the toddy shop also close by. P.W. 12 was a witness who said that he saw the accused in the toddy shop. Finally P. W. 13 a man of Ulagianallur said that at about 2 nalgais before sunset he saw the accused and a woman sitting close to each other very near to the place where the body of Dhanabagiam was found strangled next morning. The evidence of P. Ws. 9, 10, 11 and 13 is important because they were all examined at the inquest on the 14th February. They saw the body of Dhanabagiam and they say that that was the body of the woman with whom they had seen the accused on the afternoon of the 12th.

Finally there was the evidence of P. W. 20 a brother of Dhanabagiam's father. He said that on Friday the 17th

Amamalai

February when he met the accused at 11 A.M. the accused made a statement as follows:

"I got on the train with her at Kattukottai on Sunday. We got down at Pukkirivari. I took her beyond the river and told her to go to her aunt's house at Ammanathur, which is half a mile from Ulagiannallur. I went back on Wednesday. There was a crowd there and a corpse. I got afraid and ran away. On Wednesday night I came to Mangalur. On Thursday morning with a companion I went to Ariyalur and caught a bus and went to Athur. I took a bullock cart that night at Athur and have now come here to Sathanur."

P.W. 20 then says that he confronted the accused with some information which he had received from his own sister, and accused him of having murdered his wife, and he says the accused then confessed in these words:—

"It is true. I did it. If you are going to inform the police, I and my son will go now and die".

P.W. 20 says that he was moved by this appeal and this threat, and that he said that he would not give information to the authorities about the murder. Later on he alleges that he did go to the police lines at Perambalur and told a constable about it, but the constable directed him to make a complaint at the Chinnasalem police station. Curiously enough, the Inspector of Police says that he did not attempt to check this statement of P. W. 20. P.W. 20 however addressed a letter to the police at Chinnasalem which he says is Ex. K. Ex. K-1 is the envelope in which it was sent. He says he posted this letter on the morning of the 18th in the railway train at Ariyalur. His statement appears to be to some extent confirmed by the fact that the postal cover bears a stamp indicating that it was held back because late-fee had not been paid.

All this evidence has been criticised on behalf of the appellant, but after carefully examining it, we find ourselves in agreement with the Assessors and the learned Sessions Judge that it must be accepted. The story of P.W. 4 was confirmed by an item of circumstantial evidence. He said that when the accused took his wife away from his mother's house, the mother of the Accused told him (P.W. 4) to run after them with their child aged 4, and a bundle of saris which Dhanabagiam has left behind. P.W. 4 says that he did so and caught up with the accused and his wife and gave them the mother's message. Thereupon he says that Dhanabagiam told her husband to tear up and burn these old clothes, and the accused accordingly set fire to the clothes with a match and burnt them. He says that they also told him to take the little boy back and he did so. In confirmation of this story the sub-inspector of Athur (P. W. 18) says that P.W. 4 took him to the place where he said the clothes had been burnt, and the sub-inspector picked up there some ashes (M. O. 10) which are clearly the ashes of burnt clothing. The evidence of the witnesses who say that they saw the accused on the railway between Kattukottai and Pukkaravari and from the railway station at Pukkaravari to the place where the body was found, it was suggested was not evidence that the Court could rely upon. The witnesses admitted that they had never seen the accused before, and the suggestion was that it would be very unsafe in such circumstances to rely upon their identification of him. Reference was made to the case of Adolph Beck. It is however to be borne in mind that all these witnesses picked out the accused at identification parades held by the Sub-Magistrate at Kallakurichi on the 19th February, and subsequent dates. It has not been suggested that any of them has any motive to give false evidence against the accused.

Annamalai
Mudali,
In re.

Mr. Nugent Grant in criticising the evidence of P. W. 4 laid special stress upon that part of his evidence in which he describes the jewels of the deceased woman. The witness said:

"The sari in Court (M. O. 8) is the one which Dhanabagiam was wearing when she left home. She wore gold bangles on her hand (M. O. 4) silver bangles on her feet (M. O. 3), an adigai or saradu (M. O. 2). These are the jewels now in Court. I did not notice M. O. 1 the ruby ear ornaments nor the nose screw (M. O. 5)".

From the difference in tense which the learned Judge has used in referring to wearing of the saree and the wearing of the jewels, learned counsel wishes us to say that this boy was not testifying that Dhanabagiam on the morning of the 12th February, was wearing the gold bangles (M. O. 4) or the saradu (M.O. 2) which her husband produced from Periasami Mudali's cowshed on the 18th February. We do not think there is any justification for this distinction. We think the boy in his reference to the jewels was referring as far as he could remember to the jewels which she was wearing at that time. P. Ws. 9, 10, 11 and 13 were examined, as already mentioned, at the inquest; P.Ws. 6, 7 and 8 were examined by the Inspector on the 15th February, and P.Ws. 7 and 8 identified the accused on the 19th February, the day after he had been arrested. If this evidence of identification stood alone, it might be difficult to rely upon it but it does not stand alone. Taken in conjunction with the other evidence we think that it is reliable evidence.

Learned Counsel for the accused is not able to contend that if this evidence is accepted as true the conviction of the accused is wrong. There was some evidence with regard to motive but we do not think it necessary to discuss it any further than to say that Dhanabagiam was not looked upon with favour by the accused's mother, and that her presence in the family as his wife was inconvenient. That, we think, is clearly established, to say the least. But evidence regarding the motive is not important. When it is shown that the accused took his wife away from his home on the morning of the 12th February, that he took her by train from Kattukottai to Pukkiravari and afterwards was seen with her near the time of sunset on the 12th at the place where her strangled body was found next morning, when it is proved that the accused on being questioned about his dead wife's jewels produced M. Os. 1, 2 and 4 which Dhanabagiam was wearing according to the evidence of P. W. 4 when she left Naduvalur with the accused, the only possible inference that can be drawn is that the accused is responsible for the murder of his wife.

Learned Counsel has addressed to us a legal argument suggesting that the case must be sent back for re-trial. Learned Counsel points out that practically the whole of the evidence is circumstantial and that the learned Sessions Judge did not explicitly put to the accused, when questioning him under S. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, all the items of evidence leading up to the inference that he murdered his wife, and did not ask him to explain them. Learned Counsel has drawn our attention to the case of *In re Sangama Naicker*¹, and the Privy Council case of Dwarakanath Varmā v. The King-Emperor.² In the case in *In re Sangama Naicker*¹, reference was made to three other cases in which re-trial was ordered because the Sessions Judge had not put to the accused under S. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, the items of circumstantial evidence from which he had drawn the inference that the accused was guilty of murder. We think it is necessary to say that their

Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of *Dwarakanath Varma v. The King-Emperor*¹, were dealing with very exceptional facts. The passage in the judgment of Lord Atkin in which S. 342, Criminal Procedure Code, is referred to is as follows:—

Annamalai
Mudali,
In re.

"The learned Chief Justice told the jury that the absence of blood in the body cavity was a vital point. If so, it is plain that under S. 342 of the Code it was the duty of the examining judge to call the accused's attention to this point and ask for an explanation."

There was no reference in the statement of the accused to the absence of blood in the abdominal cavity and Lord Atkin was pointing out that S. 342 of the Code ought to be observed not only in the letter but also in the spirit. It is clearly very unfair to draw an inference of guilt from a fact which an accused person has not had an opportunity of explaining. There is however nothing in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council to indicate that every failure to comply strictly with the letter of S. 342 renders the conviction of an accused person illegal. S. 537, Criminal Procedure Code, has a bearing upon this point. No omission to comply strictly with S. 342 can render a conviction liable to be set aside, unless it has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In the present case learned Counsel for the appellant has not attempted to suggest that the omission of the learned Sessions Judge to put every point to the accused in the form of questions, has led in the case to the failure of justice. He has not for instance suggested that the accused, if he had been questioned specifically on every point, would have been able to offer a satisfactory explanation, and the reason why learned Counsel has not been able to make any suggestion of this kind is found in the statements made by the accused in answer to questions put to him by the learned Sessions Judge. In the Magistrate's Court he was simply asked the question "You now heard it said that you murdered your wife Dhanabagiam. What do you say?" and his reply was "I have not committed any crime". When asked by the learned Sessions Judge "Have you anything further to say?", he replied with a very long and detailed statement in which he denied the facts alleged on behalf of the prosecution that were supposed to show his motive for murdering Dhanabagiam. With regard to the jewels he said that when the police asked him for his wife's jewels, he thought that they were referring

Mudali,
In re.

to jewels belonging to a second wife from whom he had been divorced. He went on to say:

"Kolondavelu (P. W. 20) is enjoying my father-in-law's property. I asked him for a share on behalf of my wife. Hence his enmity to me. I did not meet him nor did he come to Sathanur. I did not tell him anything."

He continues:

"I did not see Doraisami Padayachi (P. W. 4). On my father's instigation he is giving evidence against me. I was in Sathanur on Sunday. I did not come here. I did not burn the saree."

The learned Sessions Judge then questioned him about Ex. J., a letter which he had written to P. W. 20 and which the learned Judge thought indicated that he was displeased with or had some grievance against his wife. He answered that by saying that he had no dissatisfaction with his wife. The learned Judge then questioned him about the jewels of his first wife (M. Os. 1, 2 and 4) and he again said:

"I thought that they were referring to my second wife's jewels, and informed them it was with Periasami Mudali. I did not produce it myself. Periasami Mudali produced it."

And finally when the learned Judge asked him "do you want to say anything more?," the accused said:

"The witnesses had opportunities of observing me at Kallakurichi jail. My younger brother resembles me much. Possibly they saw him and are mistaking me for him."

It is clear therefore that either in answer to the general question put by the learned Judge, or in answer to specific questions, the accused has dealt in his statement with all the points appearing in evidence against him and has offered such explanation as he had to offer. This case therefore has no resemblance to the case of *Dwarakanath Varma v. King-Emperor*¹ or the case reported in *In re Sangama Naicker*² (the record in which we have examined and which reveals that the accused gave no explanation of the circumstances hostile to them, nor were given an opportunity to do so), or the other cases mentioned in that judgment. In the case reported in *In re Sangama Naicker*² and in all the cases referred to in that judgment, it was particularly noticed that the facts unexplained by the accused were vital facts, that is, facts from which an inference of guilt almost necessarily followed. We think it is clear that when an accused person in answer to a general question or even one or two questions gives a reply or replies which show that he is well aware of all the circumstances appearing in evidence against him and their implications, and attempts to explain them, the Sessions Judge may be going beyond his province if he questions him further in detail. He may be open to the criticism of cross-examining the accused, and attempting to elicit contradictory answers. This is more particularly the case when the accused is represented by his own counsel, and in this case the accused was represented by two experienced advocates. It is not possible to lay down a more general rule than that it is the duty of the Court to be satisfied either by his statements or by his answers to questions or by both, that the accused explains or has an opportunity to explain circumstances from which hostile inferences may be drawn against him. We can find no ground whatever for sending back this case for a retrial. There was no defect of any kind in the proceedings before the learned Sessions Judge.

Agreeing with the assessors and the learned Judge we confirm the conviction of the accused for the murder of his wife. There is no question of the appropriateness of the sentence. We confirm the sentence of death also.

into possession under erroneous decree—Right of successful appellant to restitution—Proper procedure, whether by suit or by application under S. 144—Extent of restitution—Failure to get in trial Court decree for future mesne profits—If bar to claim for future profits of estate.

Plaintiff's suit to recover an estate as the son of the last holder was decreed by the Subordinate Judge. But plaintiff's claim for mesne profits both before and after suit till the date of delivery was disallowed. Both plaintiff and defendant appealed to the High Court. Pending disposal of the appeal a receiver was appointed and he took possession. The defendant having died, his widow carried on the appeal. (The widow is referred to as defendant.) The High Court allowed the defendant's appeal and dismissed the suit. Pending an appeal to Privy Council the defendant was handed over possession on furnishing security. Plaintiff's appeal to the Privy Council was successful and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was restored. Plaintiff executed the decree and got possession of the estate. Then the plaintiff put in a petition for restitution and impleaded the defendant's widow and legal representative and also the sureties who had executed the security bonds in the High Court and claimed (1) the restoration of the amounts drawn as allowances by the widow, (2) restoration of the amounts wrongly appropriated by the defendants while in possession, (3) return of records and accounts from the receiver to the plaintiff, and (4) that the sureties might be ordered to pay the plaintiff the sums covered by their security bonds. Prayers 1 and 3 were not pressed and it was conceded that in proceedings under S. 144 no order for restitution can be made against sureties.

As to the restoration of amounts drawn and the mesne profits.

Held, Burn, J., differing from Stodart, J., (i) that the proper remedy lay in a suit for accounts and not in an application by way of restitution on the ground that delivery of possession was only an indirect consequence of the High Court reversing the decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff; (ii) that even if S. 144 applied the most that could be claimed was restoration on the basis of the continuance of the position immediately before the passing of the wrong decree and (iii) that refusal of future mesne profits by the trial Court restored by the Privy Council barred the claim for profits of the estate.

Held Wadsworth, J., agreeing with Stodart, J., (i) that S. 144, Civil Procedure Code was in terms applicable and the case is covered by the decision in Bisheshwar Pratap Narayan Sahi v. Chandreshwar Prasad Narayan Singh, (1928) I.L.R. 7 Pat. 319, and that the plaintiff is entitled to claim restitution of any profits realised by the legal representatives which can be called properly consequential upon the wrong decree, unless the defendant's legal representative is entitled to resist the claim either by showing that she has a superior claim to those profits or by showing that the plaintiff's claim is barred by reason of the failure to establish his right to future profits in the trial Court;

(ii) that the parties are to be put in the position which they would have occupied had it not been that a wrong decree had been passed. The correct procedure is to award the successful party restitution in the shape of any profits wrongly received under the erroneous decree or as a direct consequence thereof and

(iii) that the profits accrued to the defendant's legal representative as a result of the erroneous decree are not profits which could be claimed in the original suit. So there is no bar to the plaintiff's claim by reason of his failure to get a decree for future mesne profits before the trial Court.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Berhampore dated 24th February, 1936, and made in E. A. No. 292 of 1933 in O. S. No. 10 of 1922.

This appeal coming on for hearing before Burn and Stodart, JJ., the Court (Burn and Stodart, JJ.) delivered the following judgments.

B. Jagannadha Das for Appellant.

B. V. Ramanarasu for Respondent.

Burn J.—This is an appeal from an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Berhampore in an application for restitution under S. 144, Civil Procedure Code. The applicant before the learned Subordinate Judge was the plaintiff in O. S. No. 46 of 1920 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ganjam, Berhampore. He sued to recover the estate of Chinnakimedi alleging that he was the son of the last holder of the estate, Brojo Kishoro Deo. The defendant Kunja Bihari Deo was the grandson of the plaintiff's grandfather's younger brother. The suit was subsequently transferred to the Additional Subordinate Judge of Ganjam and tried as O. S. No. 10 of 1922. On the 20th of December, 1922, the suit was decreed in favour of the plaintiff in so far as possession of the estate and certain movable properties was concerned. But the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits both before and after suit till date of delivery was disallowed, the learned Subordinate Judge stating in his judgment that "No issues were framed in the matter of past and future profits and the question relating to the profits must therefore be deemed to have been given up."

Both the plaintiff and the defendant appealed to the High Court, the defendant from the Subordinate Judge's decree awarding possession to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff from the Subordinate Judge's decree refusing him mesne profits. These appeals were numbered 25 and 261 of 1923. Pending disposal of the appeals, a receiver was appointed in 1923. He took possession on some date in 1923, (the date does not appear from the papers printed on behalf of either party in this appeal and it is not important for the purposes of this appeal). The judgment of the High Court was pronounced on the 30th of March 1928 allowing the defendant's appeal No. 25 of 1923, and dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts. Consequently, the plaintiff's Appeal No. 261 of 1923 for mesne profits was dismissed with costs. The plaintiff applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against both these decrees, and pending disposal of his appeal, he prayed that the receiver who had been appointed in 1923 might be continued until the appeal to the Privy Council should be disposed of. The main ground upon which that application was based was that the respondent was a woman incapable of managing the estate, that she was in the hands of one Raghunatha Padhi, and that if she was put in possession, she would alienate and wrongfully dispose of the income. It is to be noticed here that during the pendency of the appeals in the High Court, the defendant Kunja Bihari Deo died in December 1925, and his widow had been brought on record as his legal representative. The High Court in its order of the 17th of August 1928 held that the plaintiff would be amply protected if the respondent was prevented by an injunction from alienating any of the properties of the estate without the consent or sanction of the Subordinate Judge of Berhampore, and if she were also required to give security to the extent of Rs. 60,000/- for any loss that she might cause to the estate and might be accountable for if eventually the petitioner should succeed in his appeals to the Privy Council. This amount of security was subsequently reduced to Rs. 41,000/-. Security for that amount was furnished by April 1929, and in that month the receiver handed over possession of the estate with the small balance of cash then in his hands, and with all the records pertaining to the estate to the Respondent.

The appellant was successful in his appeal from the decree of the High Court in A. S. No. 25 of 1923. The judgment of the Privy Council was pronounced on the 1st of November, 1932, and is reported at page 1 of Volume 64, Madras Law Journal.¹ The Judgment of the Privy Council shows that the decree of the High Court dated the 30th of March 1928 was set aside, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge dated the 20th December 1922 restored. The respondent, i.e., the defendant, was ordered to pay costs of the appellant both in the High Court and before the Privy Council. The actual order in Council has not been printed in these proceedings by either party. It would appear that the plaintiff did not pursue his appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of the High Court in A. S. No. 261 of 1923 in which his claim for mesne profits was disallowed.

The plaintiff executed the decree of the Sub-Court, restored by the order in Council, and got possession of the estate in execution proceedings on the 10th of March 1933.

On the 10th of August 1933, the plaintiff put in his application for restitution quoting Ss. 144, 145 and 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He named as respondents in his application not only Kunja Bihari Deo's widow and legal representative, but also one Raghunatha Padhi Mahasayo alleged to be her agent, and 9 other persons, sureties who had executed the security bonds in pursuance of the orders of the High Court in 1929. The plaintiff claimed that the 1st counter-petitioner, (whom it will be convenient to call the defendant), should be ordered to restore one lakh of rupees or such sum as the Court might find due from her on account of the moneys drawn by her as allowances from the estate funds between 1922* and 1928. His second prayer was that both the defendant and her agent the second counter-petitioner should be ordered to restore the sum of Rs. 1,50,000 representing the amount wrongly appropriated by them during the period commencing with the 2nd of April 1929 and ending with the 13th of December 1932. A further prayer was that all the records and accounts taken from the receiver might be directed to be delivered to the plaintiff, and a fourth prayer was that the sureties, counter-petitioners 2 to 11 might be ordered to pay the plaintiff the sums covered by their security bonds. In this appeal, we are not concerned with the 1st and the 3rd prayers, since they were not pressed on behalf of the plaintiff before the learned Subordinate Judge, and learned counsel for the plaintiff has not attempted to press them before us. With regard to the 4th prayer, it is quite clear that in proceedings under S. 144, no order for restitution can be made against sureties—Vide Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh,¹ There is of course no objection to the sureties being made parties in such proceedings, as they are vitally interested in the amount that may be found due by way of restitution. In the present appeal, as my learned brother has said, we have been invited to say whether the security bonds can be enforced against the sureties in respect of mesne profits. In my opinion, this question does not arise, and although learned counsel for the sureties had addressed us on this point, I, with respect, decline to deal with it. If the defendant is found liable to pay anything to the plaintiff by way of restitution, it will be for the plaintiff to enforce that order against the sureties by proceedings under S. 145 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the liability of the sureties can only be determined in such proceedings.

In my view therefore, we are only concerned in this appeal with the second of the prayers put forward by the plaintiff. Now with regard to this, the grounds of the plaintiff's claim were somewhat obscurely stated in the affidavit sworn to by the plaintiff's agent. He alleged that during the time when the estate was in the hands of the receiver, the defendant had drawn several amounts out of the estate funds from the receiver under the orders of the High Court, as allowances for maintenance and other purposes. He said that these sums amounted to about one lakh of rupees. He also alleged that the second counter-petitioner (defendant's agent) had collected "during the period," (but what period is not indicated), not less than 5½ lakhs of rupees, and that there ought to have been a net surplus of at least 1½ lakhs of rupees, after meeting all reasonable charges such as establishment etc. The second counter-petitioner, he said, had drawn Rs. 12,000/- from the estate funds as a gratuity for managing the estate in addition to his monthly salary of Rs. 500/-. He alleged also that the sureties had drawn from the estate a substantial portion of the amounts for which they had given security. His claim therefore was that he was entitled by way of restitution to the amount of at least 2½ lakhs of rupees, out of which more than 1½ lakhs was to be made good by the second counter-petitioner jointly with the first counter-petitioner. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled the objection made on behalf of the defendant and the other respondents, that no restitution could be awarded under S. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure in this case. He held that S. 144 would authorise him to direct the defendant to restore the surplus profits of the estate for the period from the 2nd of April 1929 to the 13th of December 1932. But he considered that in so far as the defendant was concerned, she had not drawn from the funds of the estate for herself more than she was authorised to draw by orders of this High Court. But the learned Subordinate Judge held that the payment of Rs. 12,000/- made by the defendant to the second counter-petitioner, her agent, as compensation for the loss of his practice at the bar during the period of his service under her, was not justifiable. He held therefore that the defendant and the second counter-petitioner were liable to make good that amount to the plaintiff. The rest of the plaintiff's claim, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed. The plaintiff has preferred this appeal from the order dismissing his claim. The defendant and the second counter-petitioner have appealed from the order directing them to restore Rs. 12,000/-, but we are not concerned with that appeal, since it was preferred after the District of Ganjam was transferred to the Province of Orissa and it is now pending we understand, before the High Court of Patna.

Before us, learned counsel for the appellant has argued two items together amounting to about Rs. 1,30,000/-. The first item is Rs. 65,577-1-5 appropriated by the defendant out of the profits of the estate after she received possession of it from the receiver. The defendant's claim to this was based upon an order of the High Court passed by Mr. Justice Krishnan on 11th of April, 1923 by which the receiver was directed to pay Rs. 1,500 per mensem each to the plaintiff and the defendant. There were subsequent changes in the orders passed by this Court but they do not seem to be material. At the time in April, 1929 when the defendant took possession from the receiver, this allowance was in arrears to the extent of Rs. 65,577-1-5, and the defendant's claim is that she was entitled to pay herself this sum out of the profits of the estate as they accrued during the period she was in possession. The other item is Rs. 64,500/-, the amount taken by the defendant out of the profits of the estate during the period between the 1st of April, 1929 and the beginning of November, 1932, at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per mensem. The learned Subordinate

Judge has held that the defendant's action in paying herself Rs. 64,500 on account of arrears cannot be said to be wrongful, and that she was justified in paying herself at the rate of Rs. 1,500 per mensem during the period this estate was in her possession. The contention of the learned counsel for the plaintiff is that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong on both these points.

In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge was partly right and partly wrong. He was wrong, I consider, in holding that S. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure had any application to this case, but he was right, I think, in holding that even if it had, the plaintiff could not recover any portion of either of the two sums now in dispute. The plaintiff, I think, entirely misconceived his remedy. After the judgment of the Privy Council declaring him to be entitled to possession of the estate, he had, in my view, cause of action for a suit for mesne profits for any period within the bar of limitation. But he had no ground for applying for mesne profits in the guise of restitution. The doctrine of restitution under S. 144 is simple. I may quote from Sir Dinshaw Mulla's commentary on S. 144 (considering the matter from the point of view of the party to whom restitution is due):

"The word 'restitution' in this section means restoring to a party, on the variation or reversal of a decree, what has been lost to him in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree. The section does not apply unless the property was lost in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree."

and again, (looking at the matter from the point of view of the party who has to make restitution)

"The doctrine of restitution contemplates the case where property has been received by a decree-holder in execution of a decree, and the decree or part thereof is subsequently varied or reversed on appeal by the judgment-debtor."

In the present case, the decree, the reversal of which has given rise to the plaintiff's claim, is the decree passed by the High Court in A. S. No. 25 of 1923. As I have already said, neither party has filed the decree before us, but from the judgment, it would seem that it was merely a decree dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs in both the Courts. If so, there is nothing in the decree affecting the question of possession of the estate. It cannot be said that the decree of the High Court directed that possession of the estate should be taken from the plaintiff and given to the defendant. The plaintiff never had possession of the estate until he got it in execution of the Order in Council in 1933. The reversal of the High Court's decree by the judgment of the Privy Council therefore has nothing, in my opinion, to do with the question of possession of this estate and nothing to do consequently with mesne profits. The Privy Council's judgment, as I have already said, was that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored, the decree of the High Court being set aside. It seems to me that learned counsel for the defendant is on firm ground when he says that in so far as the High Court's decree is concerned all the restitution that could be made to the plaintiff upon its reversal was effected by the Order in Council. Before the High Court's decree was passed, the position was that the plaintiff had in his favour a decree of the Subordinate Judge that he should be put in possession. That decree was set aside by the High Court, and the position then was that the plaintiff had no decree in his favour. When the High Court's decree was set aside by the Privy Council and the Subordinate Judge's decree restored, the plaintiff thereby came back to the position in which he had been before the High Court's decree was passed. The contention of learned counsel for the plaintiff is that when the estate was put in possession of a receiver in 1923, the Court was taking possession of this estate for the benefit of the true owner, and that therefore the possession of the receiver must be deemed to have been the possession of the true owner. The true owner has now been declared by the Privy Council to be the plaintiff. Therefore, when the receiver was in possession, he was in possession on behalf of the plaintiff; this is equivalent to saying that plaintiff was in possession and when the defendant took possession in 1929, she was dispossessing the plaintiff. Learned Counsel for the plaintiff relies upon the case reported in *Bisheshwar Pratap Narain Sahi v. Chandreshwar Prasad Narain Singh*¹. There the learned Chief justice has said,

"Where disputes arise between claimants as to possession of immovable property and the property is placed in the hands of a receiver by the Court before the determination of the question of title, the Court takes possession through its receiver on behalf of the party who may ultimately establish his title and from the moment the title is determined the possession must be deemed to have been the possession of the lawful owner whose title has been established."

The learned Judge goes on to refer to the judgment of Mr. Justice Mukerjee in *Dwijendra v. Jogas*². In considering that case, it is, I think, necessary to bear in mind that that was a case in which a dispute under S. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure arose with regard to possession of certain properties. The Magistrate held that nobody was in actual possession and attached the properties under S. 146, Criminal Procedure Code and a receiver was then appointed by the Criminal Court pending decision of dispute between the parties. In the trial Court, the plaintiffs got a decree for possession in their favour and in execution of the decree were put in possession. When that decree, passed by a Sub-Judge, was reversed by the High Court, it was held that the defendants could apply for possession by way of restitution under S. 144. I can see no difficulty in applying the principle of restitution in that case, but I do not see that it has any bearing on the facts of this case. The important point about that case is that the plaintiffs in the suit got a decree for possession, which they executed, and which was afterwards reversed on appeal. It is therefore fully in accord with what I conceive to be the doctrine of restitution, that on the reversal of the decree in their favour, they should be compelled under S. 144 to give up what they had got in execution of that decree. Nothing of that kind is to be found in the case with which we are now dealing as I have already said. The defendant in this case did not get from the High Court a decree for possession. What she got from the High Court was a decree setting aside the Subordinate Judges' decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff. As soon as the Subordinate Judge's decree was set aside, it followed that the receiver who had been appointed during the pendency of the appeal, could no longer be left in charge of the property. The High Court had decided that the defendant was the proper owner, and consequently the receiver's appointment had to come to an end. When it came to an end, the only person to whom he could be directed to hand over possession was the person declared by the High Court to be the rightful owner, namely, the defendant. It is quite impossible, in my opinion, to say that delivery of possession was made to the defendant in pursuance of, or in execution of, or directly in consequence of the decree of the High Court. It is quite impossible, I think, to argue that the decree of the High Court was in any manner fulfilled or carried out or obeyed by the delivery of the property to the defendant. The only executable part of the High Court's decree, as I imagine, must have been a direction that the plaintiff must pay the defendant's costs. The portion of the decree which said that the Subordinate Judge's decree was set aside was not a provision which could be put in execution at all. It is therefore not, in my opinion, possible to say that the defendant got possession from the receiver in pursuance of or in execution of or directly in consequence of the High Court's decree. Delivery of possession by the Receiver to the defendant was a consequence of the High Court's decree, no doubt, but it was an indirect consequence and not a direct consequence. I have not been able to find—and learned counsel for the appellant has not cited—any case in which restitution in the shape of possession or mesne profits has been ordered where the decree reversed had not given possession.

2. (1923) 39 Cal.L.J. 40.

For these reasons, I think the plaintiff entirely misconceived his remedy, that his remedy lay in a suit for accounts and mesne profits and not in an application by way of restitution.

Further, if I am wrong with regard to this point, I nevertheless think that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the plaintiff could not recover from the defendant any portion of the

Rs. 1,30,000/- which has been the subject of argument before us. Supposing that S. 144 can be applied, then the duty of the Court as set out in S. 144 is to

"cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed."

Now, that, in my opinion, means that the plaintiff is entitled to ask the Court to put him and the defendant back into the positions which they occupied immediately before the High Court's decree was passed. That position was a position in which the receiver was in possession and under orders of the High Court was making payments of Rs. 1,500/- per mensem both to the plaintiff and to the defendant so far as the funds available allowed. What would have been the position, but for the decree of the High Court? It seems clear to me that but for the decree of the High Court, the position would have continued to be the same. The High Court's decree was passed, as I have already said, on 30th of March 1928. If the High Court's decree had not been passed on the 30th March, 1928, the appeal would still have been pending, and it would have continued to be pending until the High Court passed some decree or other. The plaintiff's claim, in my opinion, amounts to this: that he is entitled to be "restored" to the position which he would have occupied if the High Court's decree passed on the 30th March, 1928 had been in his favour. Now no doubt, if the High Court on the 30th March, 1928 had dismissed the defendant's appeal and confirmed the Subordinate Judge's decree, the receiver would then have been directed to deliver possession to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff would thereafter have enjoyed the profits of the estate. But it seems to me there is a great difference between the claim to be put in the position which the plaintiff would have occupied if the High Court's decree had been in his favour, and the claim to be put in the same position that he would have occupied if the High Court's decree had never been passed. S. 144, Civil Procedure Code authorises the latter proceeding but not the former. If the High Court's decree had not been passed and if the appeal had gone on pending, the receiver would have gone on making payments both to the plaintiff and the defendant, and it would have been quite within his authority to pay out to the defendant, when the funds of the estate allowed, the arrears due to her to the extent of Rs. 65,500/- and the periodical payments of Rs. 1,500/- per mensem during the whole period of his receivership.

I therefore consider that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the plaintiff cannot recover by way of restitution any portion of the sum of Rs. 1,30,000/-.

We heard a long argument on the question whether the defendant is entitled to maintenance out of the estate. Learned counsel for the appellant contends—and I think rightly—that this question was not properly raised in the pleadings before the learned Subordinate Judge. It is an interesting question, but it is one on which any remarks that we can make must be obiter, and I therefore respectfully excuse myself from making any pronouncement on the question whether defendant is or is not entitled to maintenance out of this estate. That question, in my view, can only be properly tried in other proceedings.

The plaintiff could have recovered from the defendant by way of restitution the amount of the costs awarded to her by the High Court's decree in A. S. No. 25 of 1923, if she had executed against him the High Court's decree for costs, but there was no allegation on this point in the affidavit of the plaintiff's agent, and as I have already noticed, the decree of the High Court has not been produced before us. No argument was addressed to us on this subject by learned Counsel for the appellant.

I agree with my learned brother that the allowances ordered to be paid to the defendant during the pendency of the appeal cannot be considered as giving the defendant an absolute right to those sums irrespective of the result of the litigation. They were explicitly orders of a temporary nature, and the sums drawn by the defendant would in my opinion be sums for which the defendant would be accountable in the event of the plaintiff's success in his appeal to the Privy Council.

In my view the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Stodart, J.—This appeal arises on an application made under S. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code to the Subordinate Judge, Ganjam by the plaintiff in O. S. No. 10 of 1922 on the file of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ganjam.

Plaintiff filed that suit in 1920 in the Subordinate Judge's Court for the possession of the Zemandari of Chinnakimmedi against the then Zemindar Kunji Bihari Deo. In December 1922 the learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in plaintiff's favour. Kunji Bihari filed an appeal in this Court and obtained stay of execution. But he was not allowed to remain in possession. A Receiver appointed by the Court was placed in the possession of the Estate by an order made by Mr. Justice Krishnan (as he then was) on the 11th April 1923.

Kunji Behari Deo died in December 1925 before his appeal came on for hearing, and his widow the present defendant was brought on the record as his representative in interest and she continued the appeal. The appeal was decided on 30th March 1928 in the defendant's favour. Plaintiff filed a further appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and applied for stay of execution in this Court. Stay was refused, but defendant was directed to furnish security for Rs. 60,000/- (afterwards reduced to Rs. 41,000/-) before taking possession of the Estate.

She was not able to find the required security till the 2nd April 1929, when the Estate was delivered to her by the Receiver.

Plaintiff's appeal in the Privy Council was decided on the 1st November 1932. The appellate decree of this Court was reversed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge was restored. Plaintiff was given possession of the Estate on 10th March 1933.

In the application now under appeal plaintiff prayed that the defendant be made to restore to him the profits of the Estate which she had received from 2nd April 1929, when the Receiver handed over possession to her up to 13th December 1932. He also prayed for the restitution of certain sums which the defendant, and before her, her husband, had been paid, during the time when the Receiver was in charge and which were made payable to the defendant by the aforesaid order of this Court. Plaintiff did not press his claim under the latter head however : so that the only amount with which we are now concerned is the amount of the profits enjoyed by the defendant during the time she was actually in possession of the Estate under the appellate decree of this Court, namely from 2nd April 1929 to 13th December 1932, on which latter date she was appointed Receiver under the Court pending delivery to the plaintiff.

The other respondents to this Appeal are the persons who in 1929 furnished security on behalf of the defendant. It is conceded now by the plaintiff that sureties cannot be made liable under S. 144. It is only when the principal is adjudged liable to pay an ascertained sum that proceedings can be taken against the sureties under S. 145.

One of the sureties, the 2nd respondent, has in the order now under appeal been declared liable on his bond for Rs. 12,000/- and directed to pay that amount to the plaintiff. But that order is not before us in this appeal since the 2nd respondent has appealed against it in the High Court of Judicature at Patna to which Court jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit was transferred on the 1st April 1936.

The sureties all of whom have been impleaded in this appeal have invited us to determine once for all whether their bonds make them liable for the profits of the estate enjoyed by the defendant while she was in possession of it. Agreeing with my learned brother I do not think that question is properly before us.

The amount of the profits is not now in dispute. The defendant has filed an abstract statement which I would like to be read as part of this judgment showing the aggregates of expenditure under different heads during her tenure of the estate. The balance is Rs. 1,30,476/-.

This includes a sum of Rs. 11,212/- shown by the defendant as expenditure which sum was not actually spent and to which I shall have occasion to refer later. It is now agreed that the sum claimed by the plaintiff is Rs. 1,30,476/- as found in this statement of account. This is the actual surplus remaining after all expenditure had been incurred.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that under S. 144 the plaintiff in the circumstances of this case could not recover these profits. Hence this appeal.

In the course of the appeal, the defendant has claimed that even if she is liable under S. 144 to restore the profits of the estate nevertheless out of those profits she is entitled to retain the major portion on two separate and distinct grounds : namely

(a) As the aggregate of sums directed to be paid to her by certain orders of this Court,

(b) As the amount which she would otherwise be entitled to receive as maintenance from the revenues of the Estate as the widow of an undivided co-parcener of the Zemindar.

The amount claimed by the defendant is very nearly Rs. 1,30,476 on either computation.

Thus there are three questions for our decision in this appeal namely

I. Is the lower Court wrong in holding that the profits enjoyed by the defendant are not in the circumstances of this case liable to be restored to the plaintiff under S. 144 ;

II. Even if they are, is the defendant entitled to retain the major portion of them under the orders passed by this Court ;

III. Or as maintenance.

In order to understand the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge it is necessary to explain what the orders of this Court were. The first is the order passed by Mr. Justice Krishnan (as he then was) on 11th April 1923 when he placed the Estate in the custody of a Receiver. That order has not been printed and we have to gather its import from references made to it in subsequent orders of this Court. The matter then before Mr. Justice Krishnan was the motion of the defendant for stay of delivery of possession to the plaintiff pending defendant's appeal in this Court. It is sufficient for the present purpose to state that Mr. Justice Krishnan directed that the Estate be put in the hands of a Receiver—which was forthwith done—and that out of the surplus revenues of the Estate the Receiver should pay to each party for their maintenance and for the expenses of the litigation a sum of Rs. 1,500/- a month. Subsequently, at some date in 1924, on the Receiver reporting that the surplus revenues of the Estate were not sufficient to enable him to pay those allowances,

Mr. Justice Krishnan directed that whatever surplus there was after meeting the necessary expenditure, should be divided equally between the parties. This second order is not now before us either.

Now in April 1929 when the Receiver handed over the estate to the defendant there were very substantial arrears of this allowance due to both parties. I shall have occasion later to refer to the arrears due to the plaintiff and how they were dealt with. The arrears due to the defendant were about Rs. 65,000/-. The Receiver had less than Rs. 11,000/- in his hands and of this he paid Rs. 10,000/- to the plaintiff a few days before handing over the estate to the defendant. Learned Counsel are agreed that that was the state of affairs in April 1929.

The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is to the following effect. In proceedings in restitution under S. 144, what the Court has to do is to put the parties in the position they occupied at the time of the decree which has been reversed, in the present case, at the time of the appellate decree of this Court. At that time a Receiver was in possession of the Estate. The position of the parties if the Receiver is regarded as being in possession, and if there had been no appellate decree of this Court, was, that he owed the defendant Rs. 65,000/- as arrears of allowance and that he had to go on paying her further allowance up to the date of the Privy Council decree. These sums, both the arrears and the current allowance would have to be paid to defendant out of the revenues of the Estate realised by the Receiver after the date of the appellate decree and up to the date of the Privy Council decree. And it so happens that the aggregate of the sums which would have been payable to the defendant on this hypothesis is very nearly equal to Rs. 1,30,476 the amount of the surplus profits which defendant actually enjoyed. To take this money away from her would be to change her position for the worse, a thing which in the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be done under S. 144.

In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge's finding cannot be supported on the grounds stated by him. His reasoning is fallacious. S. 144 is "Where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of First Instance shall on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed, and for this purpose the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of.....and moneys profits which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal..."

The position of the parties according to the learned Subordinate Judge but for the appellate decree of this Court would be that a Receiver would be in possession of the Estate and would continue in possession. But clearly if the appellate decree had not been passed on the date it was passed, the Receiver could in no imaginable circumstances have been continued in possession. If that decree had not been passed there was nothing whatever to prevent the plaintiff entering on the Estate. It would have been the plaintiff therefore who would have enjoyed the surplus profits of the estate from the date of the appellate decree and he was under no liability—so far as the subject matter of the suit was concerned—to pay defendant anything whether by way of arrears of allowances or as current allowances. The fact remains that during her tenure of the estate the defendant received and enjoyed the profits which but for the appellate decree of this Court the plaintiff would have enjoyed.

A digression must be made here to correct a mistake made by the learned Subordinate Judge which may have influenced his mind in arriving at the above conclusion. Interpreting a certain order dated 20-11-1928 made by this Court (exhibit VI) after the appellate decree was passed but before the Estate was handed over to the defendant, he construed it as containing a direction by this Court, to the Receiver to pay to the defendant the arrears of allowance due to her under Mr. Justice Krishnan's order of April 1923 and which according to the learned Subordinate Judge amounted to Rs. 65,577. But Exhibit VI has nothing to do with the arrears of allowance due to the defendant or the payment of those arrears. On the contrary, it relates to the arrears due to the plaintiff. It was passed on C. M. P. No. 4146 presented by the plaintiff and C. M. P. No. 4834 presented by the defendant. Plaintiff prayed amongst other things that the Receiver be directed to pay him the arrears of allowance computed at Rs. 1,500/- a month as ordered by Mr. Justice Krishnan in 1923 instead of at Rs. 1,000/- which was the rate adopted in a previous order of this Court dated 17th August 1928. Defendant prayed that on the contrary arrears due to the plaintiff should be computed at Rs. 500/- a month only. The order of this Court was that there were no grounds to vary the original order of 1923, awarding an allowance to the plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 1,500/- a month. No question arose then or could arise on those petitions, of the arrears payable to the defendant, who by that time had become entitled to be in possession of the estate and so entitled to the revenues out of which such arrears could be paid.

I now come to the grounds on which the learned Subordinate Judge's finding is sought to be supported by learned counsel for the defendant. His first argument is that if the plaintiff is put back in the position he would have occupied but for the decree which has been reversed, he would be merely in the position of a successful

of Sanno-khemedi
v.
Susi, Tamala
Patta
Mahadevi

plaintiff who has still to execute his decree. His second argument is that under S. 144 a party cannot be put in possession of that of which he was never dispossessed. These arguments are both based on the fact that plaintiff was not actually in possession on the date of the appellate decree but a Receiver was in possession. But in my opinion, and in this my learned brother differs from me, a complete answer to these arguments is furnished by the principle that the possession of a Receiver pendente lite must be deemed to be the possession of the party who is ultimately declared successful. Here the plaintiff had succeeded in the Court of First Instance. He was then declared to be entitled to immediate possession of the estate. He applied to the Court to be put into possession. That application was stayed. Nevertheless the defendant was not allowed to remain in possession. A Receiver was appointed and put in charge of the estate. But the estate is a profit yielding concern and the Receiver had strictly to account for the profits. On whose behalf did he hold these profits? The answer must be, in my opinion, on behalf of the party ultimately declared successful. And if he had to account for the profits to that person he should be deemed to have held the estate on behalf of that person. Virtually therefore when the defendant took over the estate from the Receiver she dispossessed the plaintiff. And if the appellate decree had not been passed then at the date of that decree the order of the Court dated 11-4-1923 staying plaintiff's application for delivery of possession would have become automatically discharged and the Receiver would forthwith have put the plaintiff into possession. In my view, the effect of the decree which has been reversed was to dispossess the plaintiff. On the reversal of that decree plaintiff is entitled under S. 144 to restitution of the estate and of the profits which accrued during the time he was out of possession.

The rule that the possession by a Receiver must be deemed to be the possession of the person who is ultimately declared entitled, is illustrated by the procedure adopted in suits for immovable property which at the time of filing the suit is in the custody of a Receiver—for example a Receiver put in possession by a Magistrate under S. 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In such a case it is sufficient for the plaintiff to sue for a declaration of his title. He need not pray for delivery of possession and what is more important he need not pay the very much greater stamp duty leviable on a suit for possession. If he succeeds the Receiver delivers the estate to him. That the same is the case when the estate is in the custody of a Receiver appointed by the Court is explained in the case of *Bishashwar Pratap Narayan Sahi v. Chandreshwar Prasad Narayan Singh*¹. That case arose on an application for restitution under S. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code and is, I think, very much in point here. The property there in question was called the Sarsund Estate. It consisted of four separate items. The last undisputed owner died in 1908 and on his death there was a scramble for possession. The Magistrate apprehending a breach of the peace over items 2 and 3 and not being able to decide who was in possession attached these two items and put a Receiver in charge of them. In 1911 one of the claimants Asharfi Singh who had possession of item 4 sued the other claimants for possession of items 1 and 2 and the Court in 1915 put item 1 also in custody of a Receiver. Asharfi's suit was dismissed in 1919. But the Receiver remained in possession until the 13th December 1920. He was discharged on that day but re-appointed on the following day in a suit which had been filed by another set of claimants numbered as 112 of 1920. Thus, up to the date of the filing of O. S. No. 112 of 1920 Asharfi Singh had not been in possession of items 1, 2 and 3 and they were in the possession of Receivers and remained in such possession till the suit was decided. The defendants in O. S. No. 112 of 1920 were Asharfi Singh and a certain rival claimant Chandreshwar who had agreed to adjust their claims inter se, one giving up his claim to items 1 and 2, the other giving up his claim to items 3 and 4. The position at the time that suit was filed was that items 1, 2 and 3 were in the possession of Receivers and item 4 was in the possession of Asharfi. The plaintiffs, being a third set of claimants, succeeded in the suit and were given a decree for possession and on the 27th February 1923 possession of items 1, 2 and 3 was taken on their behalf by the Court of Wards, to whom the Receiver handed over items 1, 2 and 3. Asharfi and Chandreshwar the unsuccessful defendants filed appeals to the High Court which reversed the decree of the Court of First Instance and declared the title of Asharfi and Chandreshwar in priority to the plaintiffs. The High Court did not however make any decree for delivery of possession to the defendants. At the time of the High Court decree the defendants were, in respect of items 1, 2 and 3 persons who had never had actual possession but who had been declared to be entitled : a position similar to that occupied by the plaintiff in this case at the time of the decree of the Privy Council.

The defendants Asharfi and Chandreshwar not having a decree for delivery of possession applied in the Court of First Instance for restitution of the property under S. 144. The Subordinate Judge held

I. That as the trial Court's decree had been set aside by the High Court the applicants were entitled to be restored to the position they would have occupied but for such decree.

II. That strictly speaking restitution in such a case would mean replacing the property in the hands of the Receivers.

III. But that as the possession of the Receivers was the possession of the Court for the benefit of the person entitled, the applicants were entitled to possession by way of restitution.

The plaintiffs then appealed to the High Court whose decision is contained in the case cited. It was urged in the High Court as it is urged here that restitution could not be made to a party who was not in possession before. The Court held (per Dawson Miller, C.J.)

"Where disputes arise between claimants as to possession of immovable property and the property is placed in the hands of a Receiver by the Court pending the determination of the question of title, the Court takes possession through its Receiver on behalf of the party who may ultimately establish his title and from the moment the title is determined the possession must be deemed to have been the possession of the lawful owner whose title has been established. Nor do I think it makes any difference whether the property is attached by the Magistrate under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, or placed in the possession of a Receiver appointed by the Civil Court."

Pausing here for a moment I observe, that the position of the plaintiff in this case at the time the Receiver was appointed was more than that of a mere claimant. He was in a better position than Asharfi and Chandreshwar were, in the Patna case. For he was a successful claimant with a decree for possession already made in his favour. Continuing, Dawson Miller C. J. said that in his opinion the law in the subject had been correctly stated by Mookerjee, J. in two cases in the Calcutta High Court in 1924 and 1919 respectively: and he quotes from those two cases certain observations of Mookerjee, J. as follows:

"When the Court has appointed a Receiver and the Receiver is in possession, his possession is the possession of the Court, and the possession of the Court by its Receiver is the possession of all parties to the action according to their titles. The property passes into legal custody as the Receiver is in the position of stakeholder and such custody is for the benefit of the true owner. *Brijendra Kishore v. Abdul Razak*¹, is an authority for the proposition that when property is attached under S. 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code it passes into legal custody and during the continuance of the attachment such custody is for the benefit of the true owner. If the true owner was in fact in possession when the attachment was effected, his possession in the eye of the law, is not interrupted. If, on the other hand, the wrong doer was in possession at the time the attachment took place, the effect of the attachment is to interrupt his possession and from the moment of attachment the possession of the rightful owner is revived in the eye of the law. . . . If during the attachment the claim or legal possession is in the true owner the attachment does not amount to either dispossession of the owner or the discontinuance of his possession."

If the facts of the present case are interpreted in the light of the rule laid down in the foregoing judgment of Mookerjee, J., namely, that the effect of the attachment interrupts the possession of the wrongdoer and in the eye of the law revives the possession of the rightful owner then the position is as follows : Brojo Kishore father of the plaintiff was the Zemindar till his death in 1906. Plaintiff should have succeeded him, but his title remained in abeyance for reasons which need not now be stated. Brojo Kishore was succeeded by Purushottama, elder son of his first cousin and senior representative of the junior line, and on Purushottama's death, in 1915 he was succeeded by Kunji Bihari Deo the original defendant in this suit. And Kunji Bihari Deo was the person in possession in April 1923 when the estate was placed in the possession of the Receiver. As has now been settled by the decision of the Judicial Committee the possession of the Estate from 1907 to 1923 first by Purushottama and afterwards by Kunji Bihari Deo, was wrongful. The effect of the appointment of the receiver therefore was to interrupt that possession; and at the same time, in the eye of the law to revive the possession of Brojo Kishore's representative in interest, namely the plaintiff.

Again in *Biseshwar Pratap Narain Sahi v. Chandreshwar Prasad Narain Singh*¹, a question of limitation was raised by the appellants. Their argument was based on the following propositions. The last male owner died in 1908. Chandreshwar had never been in possession—which was true—and had never filed a suit to substantiate his title. On the other hand Biseshwar one of the appellants claimed to have entered into possession in 1908: and adding on to the period of his possession the possession of the Receivers appointed in 1908 and 1915 he had prescribed for title. Dawson Miller, C.J. on this part of the case said

"It is clear that they (the appellants) cannot set up a title by adverse possession over 12 years, for whatever possession they may have had in the beginning, assuming it can be proved, came to an end when the Receiver was appointed of the properties in Schedules 2 and 3 in 1908 and of those in Schedule 1 in 1915. . . . And if I am right in holding that the possession of the Receiver in a case like the present is to be deemed the possession of the rightful owner then Chandreshwar has not lost his title by omitting to bring a suit within 12 years of the death of Mulukram Kuer" and in the same case on this point Mullick J. said

"Even if Biseshwar can prove that he got possession in 1908, the subsequent entry of Mr. Stevens the Receiver appointed in 1908 by the Magistrate and of Mr. Moore the Receiver appointed by the Civil Court in 1911 put an end to the illegal possession of Biseshwar and restored the possession of the true owner Chandreshwar."

Following the authority of this case and, with respect, adopting the reasoning of the learned Judges who decided it I hold that the effect of the appellate decree of this Court, by which the Receiver's possession of the estate was determined, was to dispossess the plaintiff; since in the eye of the law the possession of the Receiver was the possession of the plaintiff. The contention of learned Counsel for the defendant that under S. 144 the plaintiff can only be put back to the position of a successful plaintiff who has obtained a decree but has not executed it is not in my opinion sound. Nor is there substance in his contention that the plaintiff cannot be put in possession of that of which he has never been dispossessed. For plaintiff was in the eye of the law dispossessed when the Receiver handed over the estate to the defendant. Asharfi and Chandreshwar in the Patna case had never actually been in possession.

That case it will be observed was a stronger case than the present case: for, the subject-matter of the application there was the corpus of the estate actual possession of which had not been decreed to the applicants. Here the subject-matter of the application is the surplus profits of the estate which accrued during the time when the plaintiff was out of possession. If it had been necessary, the plaintiff could have recovered the corpus of the estate under S. 144. And the Court while making an order for its restoration could have made an order for the payment to him of the profits appropriated by the wrongful owner during the latter's possession of the estate under the decree which has been reversed. An order for the payment of meane profits to the person who would have been in possession but for the decree which has been reversed is in my opinion in the words of S. 144

"an order which is properly consequential on such reversal."

I do not think that the cases are in point, which have been cited by learned Counsel for the respondent in support of his position that under S. 144 a person cannot be restored to possession of that of which he was never dispossessed. The property now in question, consists of meane profits which prima facie could never have been in plaintiff's possession. The cases cited refer to specific items of property. In *Baikuntha Nath Chatteraj v. Prosannamoyi Debi*¹, the property claimed consisted of cash and ornaments contained in an iron safe and in the possession of Prosannamoyi Debi sister of one Mondakini deceased. Baikuntha applied for letters of administration to the estate of the deceased and was opposed in the Court of the District Judge by Prosannamoyi who set up a will in her favour. The District Judge granted the letters, but on appeal to the High Court they were revoked and probate of the will was granted to Prosannamoyi. Baikuntha preferred an appeal to the Judicial Committee which succeeded. When the matter was pending in the District Court a Commissioner had been appointed to take an inventory of the property and Prosannamoyi prevented him from opening the safe, contending that some of its contents were her own, apart from the effect of the will. The District Judge ordered the safe to be kept under seal in a separate room and the key retained by the Commissioner. When the appeal of Prosannamoyi succeeded in the High Court, the Commissioner removed the seals. After the Privy Council decree Baikuntha applied to the District Judge under S. 144 for an order against Prosannamoyi to restore to him the contents of the iron safe. The District Judge held that by his order that the safe be sealed and kept in a separate room he did not intend that it should be taken out of Prosannamoyi's possession and that as a Probate Court he had no power to take property out of a person's possession. Further he held that his order, passed after the appellate decree, directing that the seals be removed did not amount to an order restoring possession of the safe and its contents to Prosannamoyi. In other words he held that Prosannamoyi's possession of the safe and its contents had not been interrupted and he rejected the claim of the administrator that she had got possession of the safe from the Court in consequence of the High Court's decree and so must be made to return it when that decree was reversed. It is clear that in that case the proper remedy of the Administrator was to sue for possession of the property in question if he thought he could prove that it was part of the estate of the deceased. In confirming the District Judge's order the Court (Chatterjea and Panton, JJ.) observed

"The Probate Court could not direct the properties to be made over to the appellant by way of restitution, because they had never been in his possession nor taken out of his possession."

That observation clearly relates to the facts of that particular case. The Administrator under his letters of administration did not become entitled to possession of any property but only to bring in such property as he could prove to have been the property of the deceased. He had never got possession of the iron safe and its contents. The Commissioner had never got possession of it as the property of the deceased. Restitution could only be made in such a case of property which the Administrator had reduced to possession under his letters as belonging to the estate of the deceased and which had been taken from him as a result of the decree which had been reversed.

In Niddar Mal v. Rattan Lal,¹ the property was a debt due by two partners to the custodian of enemy property who was no party to the suit. The suit was for dissolution of partnership. In the Court of First Instance it was decreed that the debt aforesaid was payable by one partner only. He paid the whole debt to the custodian. On an appeal filed by him it was declared that the debt was payable by both partners in equal shares. The appellant then claimed under S. 144 from his ex-partner half of the amount of the debt. It was held that S. 144 did not apply to the facts of the case. Appellant had not paid his partner's share of the debt to the custodian in execution of the decree which had been reversed nor in consequence of that decree. Nor was his partner in possession of any property which had been taken out of appellant's possession by any decree or order of a Court. That was a clear case where the appellant's proper remedy was by a suit for contribution.

In Banarsiprasad v. Firm Hare Kishun Radhey Kishun,¹ the property was five bales of cotton. These were part of a larger quantity namely 18 Bales which plaintiff sued to recover from the defendant on the ground that they belonged to himself. Plaintiff's suit was dismissed and he appealed. Pending his appeal eight bales were attached by one of defendant's creditors who by way of compromise accepted and took away five bales. Plaintiff's appeal succeeded. He then applied for restitution of the five bales aforesaid which had legally passed into the hands of a third party. The Court (per Fazl Ali J.) held that S. 144 did not apply to the facts of the case. It was observed that

"S. 144 is meant to apply ordinarily to the class of cases where a person having obtained a decree executes it and recovers some money or property from the judgment-debtor and then the decree is reversed which necessitates the restitution of the property or money which the judgment-debtor had to part with at the instance of the Court."

The last argument of learned Counsel for the respondent on this part of the case is that the plaintiff having in this suit asked for and failed to obtain a decree for future mesne profits cannot now claim them by way of restitution under S. 144. It is true that the plaintiff in his suit prayed for future mesne profits. In the court of First Instance this prayer was refused. And when defendants appealed against the substantive part of the decree plaintiff filed a cross appeal A. S. No. 261 against the trial Court's order denying his future mesne profits. This cross appeal naturally failed. And it does not appear that in his appeal to the Judicial Committee the plaintiff renewed his prayer for future mesne profits. But the answer to this contention of the learned Counsel for the defendant is in my opinion that the profits which the plaintiff claims now in this application under S. 144 are not the same as the profits which he would have got if he had been given a decree for future mesne profits. Future mesne profits could have been awarded for the period extending from the date of the plaint to the date when the plaintiff recovered possession of the estate. But as a result of my finding on the first part of learned Counsel's argument, plaintiff's possession in the eye of the law began when the Receiver was put in possession which was on or about 11th April 1923. The profits accruing during the Receiver's tenure of the estate would be the plaintiff's apart from any decree that he might have obtained for future mesne profits. The profits now claimed are for a period long after the plaintiff in this sense obtained possession. They are for the period subsequent to the appellate decree of this Court which caused the plaintiff to be dispossessed. In my opinion a plaintiff who has been refused a decree for mesne profits but who subsequently gets into possession is not debarred from claiming under S. 144 profits which accrued to his opponent after the latter had as the result of a successful appeal dispossessed the plaintiff. That in my view is the position of the plaintiff in this case. It will not be right to say that he is merely in the position of one who has got a decree for possession without future mesne profits. His position is better than that. He has got a decree for possession and has reduced the estate to possession. His present claim for profits is based on his deprivation of the estate by the force of the appellate decree. The decree of the Court of First Instance worked itself out when the Receiver was placed in possession of the estate. The plaintiff acquired new rights when under the appellate decree the Receiver's possession which was plaintiff's possession was determined and the defendant was placed in possession of the estate.

Lastly on the question of restitution generally and the meaning of S. 144 there is a passage in a recent case decided by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court (Harries and Misra, JJ.) in which with respect I concur and which I think may with advantage be quoted, see Badraddin Khan v. Mahyar Khan,¹

"The doctrine of restitution contemplates a case where property has been recovered by the decree-holder under his decree and the decree is subsequently reversed wholly or partly in other proceedings. In such cases the law raises an obligation on the party who has received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost. The use of the words "damages, compensation and mesne profits" in the section indicates that the possession obtained under an erroneous decree, subsequently reversed, is wrongful possession and on the reversal of the decree the judgment-debtor would be entitled not only to the possession of the property taken from him but also to mesne profits during the period he was kept out of possession."

Two more points only remain for our decision. It is contended now on behalf of the defendant that even if the plaintiff is entitled to recover this Rs. 1,30,476/- from her as the surplus profits of the Estate, nevertheless she is entitled to retain for herself a sum which is very nearly equal to Rs. 1,30,476/- either

I. As allowance payable to her under Orders of this Court, or

II. As maintenance at the rate of Rs. 1,500 a month which, she claims, would be payable to her as the widow of an undivided co-parcener of the Zamindar.

First as to the allowances. The orders of this Court on which the defendant relies are first the orders made by Mr. Justice Krishnan in 1923 and 1924; and secondly the orders made in 1928 and 1929 after the defendant had succeeded on appeal and before the Estate was handed over to her. It will be remembered that when Mr. Justice Krishnan placed the Estate in the custody of the Receiver he directed that each of the parties should be paid for maintenance and for the expenses of the litigation, a sum of Rs. *1,500/- a month ; and that Rs. 65,577 (as found by the lower Court) out of the allowances due to the defendant remained unpaid at the time (2nd April, 1929) the Receiver handed over the estate to her. Defendant's case is that out of the revenues of the Estate accruing to her after she came into possession of it, she paid herself this sum, and is now entitled to retain it. Further she claims that for the 43 months during which she was in possession under the appellate decree she was entitled to appropriate to herself a monthly allowance at the same rate and this amounts to Rs. 64,500 : these two amounts being added together come to Rs. 1,30,077/- which is very nearly equal to the amount of Rs. 1,30,476/- of the surplus profits of the estate.

In considering this part of the defendant's case we have to ascertain what the orders of this Court are relating to these allowances. And we have to decide what the effect of those orders is. Do they mean that the parties were to keep whatever was paid to them as allowances irrespective of the ultimate result of the litigation? Or do they mean that the allowances were only provisional payments and were bound to be refunded by that one of the parties who was finally unsuccessful?

As regards the Rs. 64,500 which the defendant claims to be entitled to appropriate as allowances accruing due, during the period she was in possession of the estate, there are of course no orders of this Court sanctioning any such appropriation. The allowance was payable under Mr. Justice Krishnan's order during the pendency of the defendant's appeal to this Court and the effect of that order was spent when the appeal was decided. Then when this Court directed the defendant to be put in possession in 1929 she was put in possession as rightful owner entitled to all the revenue of the estate and there would have been no point in making an order that she was entitled to take so much a month out of those revenues as an allowance for herself. We are left therefore with the Rs. 65,577 (accepting the lower Court's figure) which represented arrears of the allowance accruing due to the defendant during the pendency of her appeal and remaining unpaid when she entered on the estate. Was the defendant entitled to appropriate this sum out of the revenues of the estate which accrued to her after she entered into possession and even if she was, is she not now bound to refund it to the plaintiff? Learned Counsel for the plaintiff contends that no interim order of the Court could operate to give away the revenues of the estate absolutely to one of the contesting parties but that allowances paid pendente lite must be deemed to have been paid on condition that they should be refunded by the party who ultimately proves unsuccessful. He contends that even if this sum of Rs. 65,577 had been paid to defendant by the Receiver before he handed over charge to the defendant, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover it. I think that he is right.

In the *Challapalle Zemindari Case*¹, there is an observation of the Judicial Committee referring to allowances paid to a claimant pendente lite. That was a suit for maintenance by a younger brother against the Zamindar in possession. It was urged on behalf of the defendant before the Judicial Committee that the plaintiff could not recover arrears of maintenance accruing prior to suit because he had never demanded maintenance. As against this it was pointed out that he was, prior to the maintenance suit, prosecuting another suit against the Zamindar for partition of the Estate. The Privy Council observed by way of explaining the absence of a demand for maintenance, that "so long as that action, i.e., the partition suit, was pending the plaintiff could not well claim maintenance except as a provisional means of support pending the appeal to Her Majesty in Council." This observation appears to support the contention put forward by plaintiff's counsel that sums awarded to a litigant as maintenance pendente lite are awarded on the implied understanding that they are to be refunded if the party is ultimately unsuccessful. It would be anomalous in my opinion if a Court could award to a suitor money to be paid out of the revenues of the very property which he is suing to recover, otherwise than on condition that the money would have to be refunded if he fails in his suit. That would be to give him part of the very relief which he claims before there is any judicial decision that he is entitled to that relief. I think therefore that Mr. Justice Krishnan's order of 1923 did not operate to give defendant an absolute title to the sums directed to be paid to her for maintenance and for the expenses of the litigation.

We have next to see whether in any of the orders of this Court authority was in fact given to the defendant to appropriate Rs. 65,577 out of the revenues of the Estate which accrued to her after she entered into possession, and to retain it as her own property on account of arrears of allowance due to her for the period when, pending her Appeal to this Court, she was out of possession.

Mr. Justice Krishnan's orders of 1923 and 1924 are as I have said not before us. Learned Counsel on both sides have been content to rely, for the import of those orders, on references made to them in the orders passed by this Court after defendant's appeal was decided on 30th March, 1928 and before defendant entered into possession of the estate on 2nd April, 1929. It is necessary therefore to explain what these latter orders were. After the appellate decree was made, the plaintiff applied for stay of execution pending his appeal to the Judicial Committee and for a continuance of the Receiver appointed by Mr. Justice Krishnan in 1923. That application was dismissed in the Order Ex. A dated 17th August, 1928. In Ex. A no reference is made to the arrears of allowances due to the defendant. The plaintiff's arrears of allowance amounting to Rs. 45,000/- were dealt with, however. The receiver was directed to pay them up to the date of his handing over possession. The Receiver was still in possession pending defendant's taking delivery and pending disposal of plaintiff's petition that defendant be not given delivery but that the Receiver should be continued. The next order is Ex. VI, dated 20th November 1928 to which we have already referred, in which the rate at which the arrears payable to plaintiff were to be computed was directed to be Rs. 1,500 a month not Rs. 1,000 a month as had been inadvertently stated in the previous order Ex. A. On that occasion no motion was made by the defendant regarding her own arrears. The last order is Ex. B dated 20-3-1929. In this order the question of allowances and arrear allowances is discussed in full. There were three petitions before the Court. One was by the plaintiff praying for a direction to the Receiver to pay him the arrears of allowance, as already ordered, and that the Receiver be not discharged until he did so—which was obviously only a device to prevent the defendant from getting into possession, since the Receiver had not nearly enough funds in hand to pay plaintiff's arrears—they amounted to Rs. 45,000/- and would have had to continue in possession in order to realise the necessary sum from the rents of the estate. The second motion was by the defendant praying that the Receiver be directed to disburse to her the arrears of allowance due to her as he had already been directed to do in the case of the plaintiff: and in the alternative if he had not enough funds—which everybody knew to be the case, for he had less than Rs. 11,000/- in his hands—then to direct him to divide whatever he had, equally between the parties. The third petition was by the defendant praying that the order of the Court passed on 20th November, 1928 (Ex. VI) should be reviewed and amended by reducing the rate at which the arrears due to plaintiff were directed by that order to be calculated. The order of the Court Ex. B was, that the arrears due to the plaintiff under Mr. Krishnan's order were Rs. 45,000/- as on the 1st September, 1928: that he was to be paid Rs. 500/- per month as from that date; that the arrears of Rs. 45,000/- were to be paid to him in annual instalments on the 1st July of every year: that the Receiver however might pay him the instalment for 1929 namely Rs. 10,000/- out of the money in his hands, and if he did not, then the respondent (who was about to take possession of the estate and did take possession a fortnight later) must pay it, and if the money was not paid as directed that this order could be executed and also the parties would be at liberty to apply for directions. No definite direction was made on the petition of this respondent praying that the arrears of allowance due to her should be paid by the Receiver or that he should divide the funds in his hands between herself and the plaintiff. The relevant portions of Ex. B in which these directions were made are as follows : "These applications relate to the arrears of maintenance at Rs. 1,500 a month ordered to be paid both to the plaintiff and defendant by Krishnan, J. on the 11th April, 1923. An appeal by the defendant was then pending in the High Court and a Receiver was in possession of the estate. On the 11th February, 1924 the Subordinate Judge reported that the allowances could not be paid having regard to the collections of the estate, the payment of peishcush and other necessary charges. On the 22nd February, 1924, Krishnan, J. varied his order by saying that whatever net amount remained available after paying peishcush, the establishment charges and the Receiver's remuneration should be divided equally between the plaintiff and the defendant, subject I take it, to the maximum of Rs. 1,500/- allowed to each. On 17th August, 1928 we directed that the defendant do take possession of the estate on giving security for Rs. 60,000/- and we also directed Rs. 500/- a month to be given to the plaintiff for maintenance, Rs. 250/- without security and the remaining Rs. 250/- on his giving security, to return the amount if called upon after the disposal of the Privy Council appeal. As we were under the impression that security would be given by the defendant within a short period, we said that till the security was given and the Receiver discharged, the position was to be treated as if the old order of things continued, and Rs. 1,500/- a month should be given to the plaintiff for maintenance. (Then after dealing with the question of the arrears of allowance): The plaintiff wants to treat the income for this year and the money in the Imperial Bank as the assets out of which his arrears should be paid : and he wants payment. For the defendant it is contended by the learned Advocate-General that, so far as the arrears of maintenance are concerned both his client and the plaintiff are entitled equally to Rs. 1,500/- a month, and that any sum in Court would not be available entirely to the plaintiff to discharge his arrears. Another contention is put forward, that there can be no question of arrears in this case, for all that the plaintiff is entitled to is a half of the available net income till the Receiver is discharged, and if on any account there is no possibility of being paid. he must suffer the consequences, and cannot claim any payment. we are unable to accede to the argument of the learned Advocate-General that no arrears of maintenance are really payable at all and that the plaintiff must take the consequences if the Receiver is discharged. If that view had been pressed we would not have discharged the Receiver. We think Krishnan, J.'s order is clear that each party was to get Rs. 1,500/- a month but as it was reported that the Receiver had not sufficient funds to pay this amount, the net income after meeting the necessary expenses was directed to be divided between the parties. We think that, if in any year assets had been available to pay the maintenance due and a balance remained, such balance should have been claimed by the parties to pay the arrears. Mr. T. Rangachariar says that while Krishnan, J.'s order limited the necessary expenses to the payment of peishcush, Receiver's remuneration and the establishment charges, the Receiver paid off debts due by the estate to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000/- the benefit of which amount the plaintiff would have got if it had not been paid and that now the defendant gets it. We have no doubt that the order of Krishnan, J. must be so construed that Rs. 1,500 is payable to each party and that as there were not sufficient funds they should share the balance after payment of kist etc., and that when funds were available they could enforce the claim for Rs. 1,500/- and get paid. We think that so far as the defendant is concerned she is also entitled to payment of these sums and we cannot treat the amount in Court or the assets as entirely attributable to the plaintiff.....

"We expected that security would be furnished within about two months from the date of our order (the 17th August, 1928). We now find that matters are still pending. If matters are thus pending it is difficult to make any order as regards the arrears. We think in view of the circumstances that the best solution will be to direct that the security now tendered, Rs. 41,000/-, to be accepted as sufficient and to reduce the security already ordered to this amount so that there shall be no difficulty in the defendant taking possession of the estate. (I note that defendant actually took possession a fortnight after this order).

"As regards the payment of arrears due to the plaintiff the sum due to him is Rs. 45,000/-. The same consideration which guided Krishnan, J., in directing the available assets to be divided between the parties will govern us also in making any provision for the payment of arrears; and we think that, if Rs. 10,000/- is paid every year to the plaintiff out of the income, it would be sufficient protection. It will on the one hand give the plaintiff funds to carry on the litigation and maintain himself.....and on the other it will not unduly cripple the estate which the defendant will have to manage. Our order therefore is etc. The Receiver is at liberty to pay the Rs. 10,000/- to be paid this year. If he does not pay, the defendant will have to pay."

Now in this order there is no direction as I have said that defendant should irrespective of the result of the plaintiff's appeal take absolutely out of the future profits of the estate a sum equal to the arrears due to her as allowance for the period prior to her entry on the Estate. And there is no direction that during her occupation of the estate and pending plaintiff's appeal any part of the profits should be earmarked as a personal allowance of the defendant. The learned Judges knew that if plaintiff succeeded the defendant would have to account for the profits. In fact they directed that defendant should file accounts annually of income and expenditure. If they had thought that defendant was entitled to any part of the profits, other than in her character of rightful owner, they would have said so.

Learned Counsel relies on one sentence in this order

"We think that so far as the defendant is concerned she is also entitled to payment of these sums and we cannot treat the amount in Court, or the assets, as entirely attributable to the plaintiff."

But this sentence must I think be construed with reference to the facts. There was between Rs. 10,000/- and Rs. 11,000/- in Court. Plaintiff to whom Rs. 45,000/- was due on account of arrears of allowance had prayed that the whole of this sum and the income for the current year should be treated as the assets out of which his arrears should be paid. This was another way of praying that the Receiver should be continued, a prayer which the Judges had already refused in their order Ex. A. The Advocate-General appearing for the defendant had pointed out that under Mr. Justice Krishnan's order the money in Court though it fell far short of the arrears of allowance due to the parties should be divided between the parties. The sentence just quoted appears to relate to this argument.

"We cannot treat the amount in Court or the assets as entirely attributable to the plaintiff."

And the order of the Judges about this amount was that out of it Rs. 10,000/- might be paid to plaintiff by the Receiver before he handed over the estate to the defendant. If not it would have been handed over to the defendant who would then have had to pay the plaintiff Rs. 10,000/- on or before the 1st July 1929.

Learned Counsel also wishes us to construe this order as meaning that since out of the future profits of the estate plaintiff was to be paid the arrears due to him, therefore the defendant was similarly to pay herself the arrears of allowance due to her. This I think is far-fetched. Defendant took the estate absolutely. The whole of the profits belonged to her. If it had been intended that she was not to be accountable for the whole of those profits but could in any case appropriate Rs. 65,577/- we think there would have been a definite direction to that effect.

We observe also that defendant is in effect claiming this sum of Rs. 65,577/- as a first charge on the revenues of the estate. She is putting it before the payments she was directed to make to the plaintiff. Those payments consisted of Rs. 30,000/- arrears of allowance and Rs. 500/- per month for 50 months or Rs. 55,000/- in all. Defendant paid the plaintiff in fact only Rs. 29,000/-. See item 21 in the Abstract Statement. She owes him under this head Rs. 26,000/-.

My conclusion therefore is that as regards the Rs. 65,577/- arrears of allowance there is no warrant in the orders of this Court to justify the defendant in appropriating it; and that even if there was, such an appropriation would be provisional, and in the event that has happened, the money would have to be refunded to the plaintiff. And secondly that as regards the Rs. 64,500/- claimed as allowance for the period during which defendant was in possession of the estate there is no shadow of a justification for that claim in any of the orders of this Court.

The second of the grounds on which the defendant claims to be entitled to retain almost the whole of the amount now claimed by the plaintiff as meane profits is that as the widow of an undivided co-parcener of the Zemindar she has the right to be maintained out of the revenues of the estate: that Rs. 1,500/- a month is a reasonable rate of maintenance and that therefore she is entitled to retain Rs. 1,30,077/- which amount is calculated in the manner we have already explained namely Rs. 65,577/- due up to her taking possession of the estate and Rs. 64,500/- due for the subsequent period up to the date of the Privy Council decree. To this claim learned counsel for the plaintiff answers

I. That the defendant is not a person who is entitled to maintenance;

II. That in these proceedings a counter-claim like the present cannot be adjudicated on as it raises complicated questions of law and fact;

III. That this counter-claim was not pleaded in the lower Court.

On the point of law whether defendant is entitled to maintenance as of right, learned counsel for the plaintiff relies on what is known as the *Second Pittapur Case*¹, in which the Privy Council ruled that in an impartible Zamindari belonging to a person governed by the Mitakshara Law there is no co-parcenary between the Zamindar and his agnates; and therefore the grandson of a deceased Zamindar was held to be not entitled to maintenance out of the impartible estate in the hands of his successor. In this decision the view taken by this Court in certain cases decided prior to 1899 that there was joint property in an impartible estate which only fell short of co-parcenary because by custom there was no right to partition was held to be no longer tenable. On the other side learned Counsel for defendant contends that the decision in the *Second Pittapur Case*¹, has been overruled in subsequent decisions of the Judicial Committee notably in *Bajinath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh*², and in *Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Mal*³. It is unnecessary for me to refer in detail to the decisions which have been cited to us now in support of the rival theories, since very recently a Bench of this Court has decided, following the *Collector of Gorakhpur v. Ram Sundar Mal*¹, that the undivided members of the family of a Zamindar have a right to maintenance out of the estate as if it were joint family property and that the decisions of this Court to that effect made prior to the *Second Pittapur Case*², and overruled by it may now be followed. See *Maharajah of Venkatagiri v. Raja Rajeswara Rao*³. We quote from that decision with respect to a passage in the judgment of my Lord, the Chief Justice.

Zamindar

Stodart, J.

"Impartibility arises out of custom, but with the greatest respect to what has been said to the contrary I do not regard a custom of impartibility as in itself destroying the right of the junior members of the family to maintenance out of the family estate while it remains in the family. The fact that a family has allowed a custom of impartibility to arise does not in itself imply the abandonment by the junior members of their right to maintenance out of the estate.....To deprive junior members of a joint Hindu family whether partible or impartible of the right to maintenance there must, it seems to me, be a custom to that effect."

On this part of the defendant's case if the point directly arose for decision I would on the materials furnished in this case hold that as widow of an undivided co-parcener defendant is prima facie entitled to maintenance out of the estate. There is I think very little reason to doubt that Kunji Behari Deo, her late husband, was an undivided member of the family to which the Zamindar belongs. Both were descended from a common great grandfather who was the holder of the estate.

Audiconda, grandfather of the plaintiff and Raghunath, grandfather of Kunji Behari, husband of this defendant, were brothers. There was a younger brother but he died without leaving male issue and the family thereafter has been represented solely by Audiconda and Raghunath and their descendants. Audiconda, the elder brother, was Zamindar from 1840 till 1868. Dying without male issue, he was succeeded by Raghunath who was ousted in 1876 by plaintiff's father Brojo Kishore who had in 1870 been adopted by Audiconda's widow. Brojo Kishore was Zamindar till his death in 1906. Raghunath's son—Raghunath had died in 1883—Vaishna Deo, claimed the estate but died before his claim could be recognised. In 1907 Vaishna Deo's elder son Purushottama Deo was registered in the Collector's books as proprietor of the Estate and entered on possession and remained in possession till his death in 1915 when he was succeeded by his younger brother, defendant's husband Kunji Behari Deo. Kunji Behari Deo was Zamindar till the 20th December 1922 when the title of the plaintiff was declared by the decree of the Court of First Instance in the present suit, in which the plaintiff's claim as the legitimate son of Brojo Kishore was confirmed. It will be seen therefore that the estate has been in the possession of the junior line for twenty-three years during the period from 1868 to this suit, while the senior line has held it for 27 years. In the judgments of this Court and of the Privy Council in which the title to this estate has been in question namely *Sri Varada Pratapa Raghunatha Deo v. Sri Brojo Kishore Patta Deo*¹, and *Madana Mohan Deo v. Purushothama Deo*², and the present suit *Nandamani Ananga Bhima Deo v. Susela Bala Patta Mahadevi*³, there is no indication that the two branches of the family had ever become divided. Besides these cases there is an unreported case dated 1896 of this Court, not referred to in the arguments before us in which Brojo Kishore, Zamindar from 1876 to 1908 and father of this plaintiff, appealed to this Court against a decree of the District Judge, Ganjam, awarding maintenance to Brojo Kishore's cousin Vaishna Deo, father of defendant's husband, Kunji Behari Deo. See A. S. No. 111 of 1895, decided on appeal against O. S. 14 of 1893 of the District Court, Ganjam. The decision of this Court was that Vaishna Deo was clearly entitled to maintenance as a matter of right. The amount awarded was Rs. 500/- a month, stated to be about one-ninth of the admitted income.

Learned Counsel for the plaintiff contends however that the defendant in her answer to the plaintiff's claim did not explicitly put forward her own claim to maintenance as a set-off against the amount which plaintiff sought to recover from her as profits of the estate enjoyed by her while she was in possession. This I think is true. In defendant's pleading there is no positive assertion of a claim against the plaintiff for money due to the defendant by way of maintenance. The relevant portions of that pleading are as follows :

"The abstract herewith filed shows an expenditure of Rs. 1,19,264 towards arrears of allowances and the current allowance of this respondent. This expenditure is also binding on the Estate. The order of Mr. Justice Krishnan fixing an allowance of Rs. 1,500/- a month to each party..... is not modified or set aside so far as this respondent is concerned and hence the expenditure of Rs. 1,500/- a month as allowance of this respondent is binding on the Estate and on the petitioner. Moreover, this respondent was representing and managing the estate during the period in question and had to maintain the status and expenditure incidental to the said position and hence the expenditure of Rs. 1,500/- a month as the allowance of the respondent is reasonable and binding on the Estate."

It is clear I think that respondent's counter-claim was put forward entirely on the strength of Mr. Justice Krishnan's order and not on the ground that it represented the amount of maintenance due to her as of right. At the stage of argument in the lower Court apparently defendant's counsel raised for the first time this alternative basis for the counter-claim. For the learned Subordinate Judge observes in paragraph 4 of his judgment

"It is contended that the first counter-petitioner (that is, this defendant) is entitled to maintenance out of the estate as the widow of a member of the plaintiff's family."

And the learned Subordinate Judge disposing of this contention held that in accordance with the ruling in the *Second Pittapur Case*¹, that the defendant was not entitled to maintenance out of the estate as of right or by custom. The question therefore arises whether this counter-claim by way of maintenance can be canvassed on appeal.

The first point that would have to be decided, if the question was directly in issue before us is whether such a claim can be advanced in answer to an application for mesne profits under S. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. That I think is an arguable point. The decision of it would depend on whether the defendant's claim arises from the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim. And the crucial point would be, what is the transaction in the circumstances of the present case? Plaintiff claims the profits which accrued to the defendant while she was in possession of the estate. Defendant's counter-claim would presumably be that some of those profits would be payable to her even if she had not been in possession. We think there would be a reasonable ground for argument, in defendant's behalf, that her counter-claim arises in the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim. It might possibly be held that the transaction consisted in the enjoyment by the defendant of the whole profits of the estate during a period when she was, independent of her position as owner in possession, entitled to part of those profits.

I do not think it necessary however to record a finding on this question as the set-off by way of maintenance was not properly raised and adjudicated upon in the lower Court and is not properly before us in appeal. Assuming that the defendant is entitled to maintenance, the question, how much she is entitled to under that head remains to be tried and decided.

In the result therefore I find that none of the objections raised on behalf of the defendant either in the lower Court, or newly in this appeal can validly affect the plaintiff's right to recover from the defendant by way of restitution, under S. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, the sum of Rs. 1,30,476/- which the defendant received as profits of the estate during the time she was in possession under the decree which has been reversed.

In this judgment throughout I have referred to the amount of profits as Rs. 1,30,476/-. That is the actual amount. I should explain that in her abstract of accounts the defendant put it at Rs. 1,19,264. See item 23 of that statement, in which she calls it her "allowance." That is a fallacious figure. Defendant arrives at it by debiting herself with Rs. 11,212/- (see item 22) which she sets down as having been paid by her to the plaintiff. But she never paid this sum to the plaintiff. The debit entry is sought to be explained in the following manner: At the date of the appellate decree plaintiff owed to defendant a certain sum for money which he had recovered from her as costs awarded to him by the Court of First Instance. And he also became liable by the appellate decree to pay to the defendant a certain sum as costs. These two sums added together come to Rs. 11,212/-. Defendant on the other hand had as already explained to pay to the plaintiff large sums under the order of this Court Ex. B as well as an allowance of Rs. 500/- a month. By entering on the debit side Rs. 11,212/- defendant professes to have adjusted the money due to her by the plaintiff pro tanto against the money she had to pay the plaintiff. But she has done nothing of the sort. In order to effect that adjustment she would have to enter Rs. 11,212/- also on the credit side of the account as having been received from the plaintiff. This she has not done. In fact therefore she did not pay the plaintiff this sum of Rs. 11,212/-. She put it in her pocket. The true figure of profits received by her is therefore Rs. 1,30,476/-.

I would also observe before leaving this part of the case that if defendant's counter-claim for the profits of the estate or part of them whether on the ground that she is entitled to them as allowances under the orders of this Court or as maintenance due to her as a co-parcener's widow is to be entertained, the money which the defendant owes the plaintiff as arrears of allowances and as allowances directed to be paid by her to the plaintiff—which is Rs. 26,000/- should be taken into account. He who seeks equity should do equity.

In accordance with the opinions expressed above I think this appeal should succeed and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover Rs. 1,30,476/- from the defendant.

ORDER.—Since we are at variance on the questions of the applicability of S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, and of the liability of the defendant to make restitution, the case must be laid before another Judge.

This case came on for hearing on the 4th and 5th days of September, 1939, in pursuance of the above order before Mr. Justice Wadsworth and the case having stood over for consideration till Monday, the 11th day of September, 1939, and the case having been set down to be spoken to

The Court delivered the following Judgment

WADSWORTH, J.—This appeal raises a question of restitution and has been referred to me on a difference of opinion between Burn and Stodart, JJ., on two points.

(1) The question of the applicability of S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, and (2) the question of the liability of the defendant's legal representative (first respondent herein) to make a restitution, if S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, applies.

The facts of the case have been fully set forth in the judgments of my learned brothers and it is unnecessary to repeat them at length. The essential points are that the plaintiff sued for possession of his estate from the husband of the present first respondent and in the Subordinate Judge's Court, he succeeded, the decree being dated 20th December, 1922. The defendant appealed to the High Court and in that appeal, a Receiver was appointed who took charge of the estate in April, 1923, the plaintiff not having got possession meanwhile. The defendant died in 1925 and his widow (the present first respondent) carried on the appeal. On 30th March, 1928, the High Court reversed the trial Court's decree. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the Privy Council and asked that the receiver should continue in possession of the estate. But this prayer was refused and the widow obtained possession from the receiver. On 1st November, 1932, the Privy Council set aside the decree of the High Court and restored the decree of the Subordinate Judge. Immediately after this decree was passed, the first respondent was herself appointed receiver pending receipt of the formal order in Council and the appellant got possession in March, 1933. The appellant claims restitution in the shape of profits of the estate for the period from April, 1929, when the first respondent took possession from the receiver, to December, 1932, when she was herself appointed receiver. The profits of the estate, after allowing ordinary charges, amount to approximately Rs. 1,30,000 for this period.

The first respondent contended, firstly, that there could be no order for restitution in the circumstances of the case, and, secondly that she was entitled to appropriate the profits to the amount due to her under the High Court's orders whereby the receiver was directed to pay to each party a monthly maintenance of Rs. 1,500 and she claims that she is entitled to set-off, against the surplus, the arrears of this maintenance for the period during which the receiver was in charge and a monthly allowance of Rs. 1,500 for the period during which she herself had possession of the estate. It has to be observed that pending the appeal to the Privy Council, the first respondent was required to pay a reduced maintenance of Rs. 500 per mensem to the plaintiff and she was directed to pay the arrears due to him under the previous order as the balances in her hands permitted and she did in fact pay certain sums towards the arrears.

The learned Judges who referred this appeal, are agreed on certain points. They agree that the order of Krishnan, J., fixing for each party a monthly maintenance allowance of Rs. 1,500 cannot be regarded as anything more than a provisional arrangement to be in force during the pendency of the appeal. They are also agreed that the respondent cannot claim in these proceedings a right to appropriate maintenance under any common law right which she may have, so that she must stand or fall by the order of the High Court fixing her maintenance. There is a further fact which has to be stated. The suit originally included a claim for past and future mesne profits, but no issue was framed in this respect and the trial Judge held that the claim for mesne profits had been given up. Before the High Court there was cross-appeal by the plaintiff on the subject of mesne profits which was dismissed. The judgment of the Privy Council does not deal expressly with the claim for mesne profits, but since the decree of the trial Court is restored, it must be taken that no mesne profits were awarded in the suit.

The view taken by Burn, J., is, firstly, that S. 144, Civil Procedure Code, does not apply because the possession which the first respondent got after the High Court's decree was neither under that decree nor properly consequential upon that decree; secondly, that even if S. 144 does apply, the most that could be claimed would be the restoration of any benefit accruing to the first respondent on the basis of the continuance of the position which obtained immediately before the wrong decree was passed; therefore one must postulate the continuance of the provisional orders which would justify the appropriation by the first respondent of the amounts to which she was entitled under the orders, so that nothing would be left which could be called a benefit returnable; and thirdly that the refusal of future mesne profits in the decree of the trial Court which the Privy Council has restored, bars the claim by way of restitution for any sum out of the profits of the estate during the first respondent's possession. Stodart, J., has taken a contrary view on all these points.

Wads-

I will deal firstly with the question of the applicability of S. 144, a matter which seems to be covered by the decision in *Bishweshwar Pratap Narayan Sahi v. Chandreshwar Prasad Narayan Singhi*¹, discussed by both the learned referring Judges. In that case, a receiver was appointed pending a suit for possession of land. After the decree, the successful party obtained possession from the receiver. The decree was reversed in appeal. The appellant applied for restitution. Objection was taken that the appellant was not entitled to get the property back by way of restitution because it was the receiver who had been dispossessed and not the appellant. It was held that the appellant could get the property back, since the possession of the receiver was for the benefit of the person entitled to the property. Burn, J., distinguishes this case on the ground that the wrong decree was actually executed and the receiver was therefore dispossessed under that decree and he points out that there can be no doubt that the order for restoration of possession was one properly consequential on the variation of the erroneous decree. He points out that in order to justify restitution, it must be shown that property has been received by the decree-holder in execution of a wrongful decree or directly in consequence of that decree. My learned brother holds the view that the possession obtained by the first respondent in the present case was not possession in execution of the decree, nor under any explicit direction contained in the wrong decree and that it must therefore be held to be only indirectly consequential on wrong decree, so that it cannot form the basis for an order for restitution. With the greatest respect, I find myself unable to agree with this conclusion and I am of opinion that Stodart, J., is right in holding that not only was the possession of the Receiver the possession of the plaintiff who is ultimately found entitled to the property, but also that the dispossession of the receiver was directly consequential on the wrong decree. It is true that the High Court's decree merely reverses the decree for possession given by the Subordinate Judge and it is true that the 1st respondent got possession after some little delay as a result of the refusal of the appellant's application to continue the receiver pending the appeal to the Privy Council. But I am unable to subscribe to the view that restitution should not be ordered unless the possession is got as a result of either the execution of the decree or an explicit order contained in the wrong decree. When, as in this case, the property in dispute is held by the Court's receiver, it is unnecessary for the decree to contain a direction to the receiver to hand over the property to the successful party. The receiver will automatically transfer possession to the party who succeeds in the suit and the fact that the transfer is made without the execution of the decree and without any explicit order in the decree, will not, to my mind, alter the fact that possession is, in fact, given under the decree. The surrender of possession by the receiver on the termination of the appeal is the inevitable consequence of the decree passed in the appeal. It seems to me therefore, with great respect, that the distinction which my learned brother Burn, J. seeks to apply in dealing with the case in Bishweshwar Pratap Narayan Sahi v. Chandreshwar Prasad Narayan Singh,¹ is fallacious.

An attempt has been made before me to make a further distinction based on the ground that in the Patna case, the party who got possession under the wrongful decree could trace that possession to no other source than the decree which was set aside, whereas in the present case the 1st respondent who succeeded in the High Court was the widow of the party originally in possession before the litigation started who had continued in possession right up to the time when the receiver was appointed. It is argued, therefore, that the 1st respondent's possession, obtained from the receiver, was nothing more than the restoration of the possession which her husband had before the appointment of a receiver. It seems to me that this argument is specious. The point of time for determining a right to restitution is not the inception of the proceedings resulting in the wrong decree, but the point of time immediately before the wrong decree. This is clear from the words "place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree". They are not to be placed in the position which they occupied at the beginning of the litigation, but in the position which they occupied just before the wrong decree was passed. When once it is conceded, as I think it must be, that the possession of the receiver at the time when the High Court's decree was passed, was the possession of the plaintiff who ultimately succeeded before the Privy Council, it does not seem to me to matter that the plaintiff did not get possession after the trial Court's decree or that the defendant continued in possession up to the time of the appointment of the receiver. The important question is, who was in possession before the wrong decree was passed. The answer to that question is that the receiver was in possession on behalf of the person who would ultimately be found entitled, that is to say, on behalf of the plaintiff. The receiver surrendered possession to the 1st respondent, not because he had taken possession from the original defendant but because the 1st respondent had been declared entitled by the erroneous decree. It follows therefore, that his possession, which was constructively the possession of the plaintiff, terminated and the defendant got possession directly in consequence of the erroneous decree of the High Court, reversing the trial Court's decree. It seems to me, therefore, that S. 144 applies in terms and that the plaintiff is entitled to claim restitution of any profits realised by the defendant's legal representative which can be called properly consequential upon the wrong decree, unless the defendant's legal representative is entitled to resist the claim either by showing that she has a superior claim to those profits or by showing that the plaintiff's claim is barred by reason of the failure to establish his right to future profits in the trial Court.

This leads to the next question as to the extent of the defendant's legal representative's liability by way of restitution and involves a consideration of the precise meaning of the words "place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such a decree", occurring in S. 144, Civil Procedure Code. It seems to me that there are three possible ways of interpreting these words. The words might mean that the parties are to be put in the position they would have occupied had the right decree been passed instead of the wrong decree; or, secondly, they may mean that the parties are to be put in the position that they would have occupied had no decree at all been passed; or the words may mean simply that the parties are to be put in the position which they would have occupied had it not been that a wrong decree had been passed. It seems to me that the last interpretation is the correct one. There is nothing in the words of S. 144 to justify the conclusion that it was the intention of the Code to give to the person claiming restitution any better position than that which he occupied at the time when the wrong decree was passed and this is what has to be inferred if we are to take it that he has to be put in the position which he would have occupied had the right decree been passed. Similarly I do not think that it can be said that the person claiming restitution must base his claim on the theory that he is entitled only to what he would have got had there been no decree at all and had the proceedings been pending right up to the time when the final decision set the matter at rest. It seems to me to be going too far to postulate, for purposes of restitution, the continuation of the proceedings until terminated by the right decree, more especially if we are to postulate also the continuation of all incidental orders passed during the pendency of those proceedings. The correct procedure seems to me to be to take the position as it stood immediately before the wrong decree, to find out what would be the position of the ultimately successful party as on that date, having regard to the fact that the proceedings terminated and to award to the successful party restitution in the shape of any profits wrongfully received under the erroneous decree or as a direct consequence thereof.

In any view it seems to me that it is impossible to hold on the facts of the present case that the defendant's legal representative would be entitled to appropriate the whole of the amounts due to her both for arrears and for future maintenance on the basis of the continuation of the provisional orders passed pending the High Court appeal, without regard to the fact that those orders recognised similar rights in the plaintiff. But I am of opinion that the correct view is that which has been taken by my learned brother Stodart, J. namely that one must regard the possession of the receiver immediately before the erroneous decree as the possession of the plaintiff who is found ultimately to be entitled. One must treat these provisional orders passed purely for the purpose of appeal before the High Court as having terminated on the termination of that appeal and one must award to the plaintiff the profits wrongfully received by the defendant's legal representative as a result of dispossession of the receiver, as representing the plaintiff, without any adjustment in respect of payments which could only be made on the assumption of the continuance of the provisional orders, which automatically came to an end on the termination of the appeal before the High Court. That is to say, the plaintiff is entitled to restitution on the basis of the position immediately before the wrong decree and on the assumption that orders made with reference to the pending appeal came to an end on the termination of that appeal.

There remains the question whether the plaintiff's claim to restitution is barred by reason of his failure to get a decree for future mesne profits in the original Court. On this part of the case, the respondent relies on the decision in *Bhimana Gowd v. Siddalinga Gowd*¹, which was to the effect that when in a suit for partition and possession, there was no prayer for mesne profits, mesne profits could not be claimed by way of restitution when the original order, dispossessing the claimants, was set aside. This decision would be authority for the view that the plaintiff would not claim by way of restitution mesne profits for the period anterior to the date on which the receiver got possession constructively for the plaintiff. But when the receiver got possession, there was really no scope for any execution by the plaintiff either in respect of possession or in respect of profits. Thereafter the possession of the receiver was the possession of the plaintiff and no question of future mesne profits could arise. The High Court having passed an erroneous decree as a result of which the receiver was dispossessed and the first respondent was put into possession, the profits which accrued to the defendant's legal representative as a result of this erroneous decree are not, in my opinion, profits which could have been claimed in the original suit. They were profits flowing directly from the erroneous appellate decree, recoverable only by restitution and not such as could have been foreseen in drafting the original plaint. The position is just the same as it would have been had the plaintiff executed his decree and got possession during the pendency of the High Court appeal and being dispossessed as a consequence of his failure in that appeal. After such dispossession, profits accruing to defendant's legal repre-

It seems to me, therefore, that there is no bar to the plaintiff's claim by reason of his failure to get a decree for future mesne profits before the trial Court.

In the result therefore, I find, agreeing with my learned brother Stodart, J., that the appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff be given a decree for restitution of a sum of Rs. 1,30,476 from the defendant's legal representative with costs throughout. No relief is granted against the sureties in this application. Advocate's fee Rs. 500.

The accused who was charged with the murder of his concubine appeared before a Joint Magistrate and made a statement to him that he had killed the deceased and describing the circumstances of the crime. On appeal against conviction it was contended that the statement by the accused recorded by the Magistrate was one under S. 164, Criminal Procedure Code and since it was not recorded after observing the formalities prescribed by that section it should not have been put in evidence.

M. C. Sridharan for Accused.

The Public Prosecutor (V. L. Ethiraj) on behalf of the Crown.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

Stodart, J.

Stodart, J.—The appellant has been convicted of murdering Palaniammal, his concubine, a woman of thirty years and sentenced to death subject to the confirmation of this Court. There can be no doubt about the facts of this case. The parties are Adi-Dravidas. The accused was a married man and he had been keeping the deceased as his concubine for a considerable time. P.W. 2 his wife, lived with her parents in a house adjoining that in which the accused and the deceased lived. Some four or five months before the crime, the accused and his wife removed to another residence, namely, a shed in a garden belonging to P.W. 3. This removal was in order to put a stop to the scandal of the accused living with his concubine while the accused's wife lived in a separate house. But even after this change of residence, the deceased used to visit the accused and even to spend the night with him in the new house. The accused's parents tried to put a stop to this conduct and complained to the owner of the garden with a view to pressure being brought to bear upon the accused, and that was the state of affairs at the time the deceased was killed.

On the night of 13th February this year, the deceased was in the accused's house and had her food there. Appellant and deceased then went to a tope which is close by and lay down to sleep in front of the shed occupied by P.W. 4 and her son P.W. 5. P.W. 5 waking in the morning and going out to work saw the accused and the deceased lying asleep. That was in the early morning. A little later, according to P.W. 2, the wife of the accused, the accused returned to his own hut and asked for a drink of water which P.W. 2 gave to him. He then left after telling P.W. 2 that he was going to the Pollachi Court "to tell everything there in person." P.W. 9, the Joint Magistrate of Pollachi, proves that the accused appeared before him at 11-30 in the morning of 14th February and made a statement to him that he had killed the deceased and describing the circumstances of the crime. P.W. 9 took down the statement in writing and that is Ex. C. The accused then went back to the village accompanied by the Circle Inspector of Police and took him to a place in the tope fifty yards from the hut of P.Ws. 4 and 5. The body was there in a hollow of the ground covered over with coconut leaves. The accused had already told the joint Magistrate that he had covered the body with a thatti. The cause of death was a cut on the neck which cut through the spinal cord and also involved the trachea and the large blood vessels on either side of the neck. There is also evidence about the weapon with which the throat of the deceased woman was cut. P.W. 5 had purchased an aruval from the accused five or six months before this crime and he kept this aruval in his hut in the coconut tope. On the morning of the crime it was missing from the hut and the accused produced it from his own hut.

Naina-

Stodart, J.

It is urged upon us by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the statement made by the appellant to the Joint Magistrate, P.W. 9, was improperly admitted in evidence. Learned Counsel argues that this was a statement made under S. 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code and since it was not recorded after observing the formalities prescribed by that section, it should not have been put in evidence. We think that that objection would be very just if the Magistrate had been investigating the case but he was not investigating the case or any of the facts connected with the case. On the contrary this information given by the accused was itself the first information of the crime. The ruling cited to us in *Nasir Ahmad v. The King-Emperor*¹, does not apply to the facts here. When he was examined in the committing Magistrate's Court, the statement he had made, Ex. C, to the joint Magistrate was brought to the notice of the accused and he admitted that he had made it. At the Sessions, however, he denied that he had made it, and said that when he came into the Joint Magistrate's Court his intention was merely to tell the Magistrate that his concubine had been killed, that thereupon a Head Constable and the Inspector of Police pushed him into the dock and after that he did not remember what he had said to the Joint Magistrate. There is no doubt in our minds that the appellant did make this confessional statement, Ex. C, and the facts of the crime correspond in all material details with that statement. The facts proved against the appellant, therefore, establish that he killed Palaniammal.

The question however remains whether in the circumstances of the case, the offence was one of murder or whether it comes within the fifth exception to S. 300. The learned Public Prosecutor does not support the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the offence proved against the appellant was murder. The evidence in the case is that the accused and the deceased were on affectionate terms and there was no motive whatever for the accused to encompass the death of the deceased. In his confession to the Joint Magistrate, the appellant stated that he killed the deceased at her own request and with her glad consent. He stated that on the night in question, after some talk, she declared that she would sever her connexion with him and go away and then, in the alternative, she suggested that both of them might commit suicide, and that in the morning he killed her at the place where her body was found. This version of the crime apparently has been accepted from the beginning by the prosecution and it clearly amounts to this, that Palani-ammal suffered death at the hands of the appellant with her own consent. There were two contusions on the body besides the fatal wound on the neck which look as if they were caused by blows with a stick. But the accused was not asked about these marks. It was not suggested to him that the said marks were inconsistent with the statement which he had made to the Magistrate that the deceased had consented to be killed. There may be an explanation of these marks consistent with the story given by the appellant. In these circumstances, we set aside the conviction for murder and convict the appellant of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. We sentence him to transportation for life.

culpable homicide and that the assailant can only be presumed to have intended to cause hurt or grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon. The case is quite different when a weapon like a sword is used in order to chop off or hack at a limb. The person who uses a sword or aruval chopping at an arm or a leg and by so doing severs the arteries of the arm or the leg, must know that he is inflicting an injury which in the ordinary course of nature is sufficient to cause death. R. Sadasivam Pillai for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Burn, J.—This is an appeal by the Provincial Government from the decision of the learned Sessions Judge of Ramnad in S. C. No. 83 of 1939. The respondent Ramaswami Nadar was tried on a charge of murder. The learned Sessions Judge convicted him under S. 326, Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for five years. The learned Public Prosecutor contends that the facts established constitute the offence of murder.

Burn, J.

The respondent did not appeal from his conviction under S. 326, Indian Penal Code and the learned counsel who has appeared for him in this Court has not attempted to show that the learned Sessions Judge's findings of fact are wrong. The evidence recorded by the learned Sessions Judge showed that there was some enmity between the respondent and one Periana Nadar, arising partly out of gambling with cards and partly out of the association of Periana Nadar with the respondent's wife. On the 5th August, 1939, about 11-30 A.M. the respondent attacked Periana Nadar with a weapon which is described as "Patta knife" or "gin knife". One witness, P.W. 8, says that it was "something like a sword". P.W. 7 says that the blade was about two cubits long. The respondent himself in a confession which he made to the taluk Magistrate on the 10th August described it as a piece of iron-bar. He also used the description 'patta'. With this weapon the respondent inflicted nine wounds on Periana Nadar: (1) an incised wound across the back of the right elbow exposing the bones of the joint; (2) an incised wound on the palm of the right hand;

Public Prosecutor
v.
Ramaswami

Burn, J.

(3) an incised wound on the middle of the right forearm; (4) an incised wound on the back of the left foot (the lower portion, the doctor says, was hanging down); (5) an incised wound over the left heel; (6) an incised wound four inches long, two inches wide and 2 inches deep across the back of the left knee, cutting all the blood vessels, arteries, veins as well as nerves; (7) the left thumb was cut and was hanging down; (8) the left index finger was split into two, and (9) a contusion on the tip of the left middle finger. The doctor, P. W. 1, who made the post-mortem examination, says that the cut across the back of the knee severed the popliteal arteries and the veins, and he says, "the injuries to such arteries are necessarily fatal." He goes on to say "It is not a fatal or vital part." The learned Sessions Judge appears to have been very gravely misled by this remark. The doctor was simply contradicting himself when he said in one breath that the injury was fatal and in the next that it was not an injury in a fatal or vital part. If the injury is necessarily fatal, it is obvious that the part of the body upon which it has been inflicted is a vital part.

The real question for decision is, what was the respondent trying to do when he inflicted all these injuries upon Periana Nadar, or in other words, what was his intention? The learned Sessions Judge appears to think that his intention was only to maim the man. If by that the learned Sessions Judge means that the respondent was trying to chop off the man's leg, that is, possibly correct. But if that be so, the respondent must be held to have intended to cause bodily injury which is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Every body knows that if a man's leg is severed close below the knee, the man must die from loss of blood in a very short time, unless some skilful person appears, who can stop the arterial bleeding. The cut described by the doctor as the sixth injury was 4 inches long, 2 inches deep, and gaping 2 inches wide. It is clear that it had cut across practically the whole of the muscular structures of the leg. It is not possible for a person who inflicts an injury like this to say that he did not intend to cut the arteries, or to cause the man to bleed to death. The case is very different from the frequent cases of stabbing with a knife or dagger. If a man armed with a knife or dagger stabs another in the arm or in the leg, it can generally be urged on his behalf that he was not trying to kill, and that he was not trying to inflict such bodily injury as sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. An ordinary person is not presumed to know the precise location of the arteries in the human limbs. If, therefore, a stab with a knife or a dagger, aimed at an arm or a leg, severs an artery and the injured man dies as a result, it may be quite reasonable to argue that the offence is not one of culpable homicide and that the assailant can only be presumed to have intended to cause hurt, or grievous hurt, with a dangerous weapon. The case is quite different when a weapon like a sword is used in order to chop off or to hack at a limb. The person who uses a sword or aruval, chopping at an arm or a leg and by so doing severs the arteries of the arm or the leg, must know that he is inflicting an injury which in the ordinary course of nature is sufficient to cause death. The offence is clearly one of murder. See illustration (c) to S. 300, Indian Penal Code.

Accordingly we set aside the conviction for an offence under S. 326, Indian Penal Code and the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment. We convict the respondent for the offence of murder with which he was charged and we sentence him to transportation for life.

Trading Co., Ltd., 2 shares. Partners of A. and F. firm were two brothers (A. Harvey and J. C. Harvey) and Tuticorin Co., Ltd.

In April 1933 it was arranged that on incorporation the assessee Company should purchase for Rs. 15,00,000 the assets of a cotton ginning business owned by A and J. C. Harvey as individuals and not as partners of A. and F. firm. For several years Messrs. A and J. C. Harvey had ginned cotton for Madura Mills at Rs. 12-8-0 per candy on an average. It was arranged that on incorporation the Madura Mills should allot 20,000 shares to the assessee Company and as consideration the assessee Company should allot to the Madura Mills 1,000 shares and gin cotton at Rs. 8 per candy for ten years and as per that the respective shares were also allotted. The assessee Company paid no cash for the assets which it acquired from A. and J. C. Harvey. Five lakhs of rupees was satisfied by the issue of shares and the balance of ten lakhs of rupees by the issue of two debentures for Rs. 5,00,000 each to F. Co. and K. Co., two companies registered in Canada and controlled by Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey through their wives. The position was found to be that instead of the vendors receiving Rs. 10,00,000 in cash the Canadian companies which they controlled received debentures for this amount and the Canadian companies in turn issued their own debentures to the wives of the vendors. The income-tax authorities found that the issue of debentures represented an artificial transaction undertaken to give an air of reality to the inflation in the value of the assets acquired by the company and a scheme to defeat the payment of income-tax. The books showed that the assets acquired from A and J. C. Harvey were originally acquired for Rs. 10½ lakhs and allowing for depreciation, the assets in the books stood at Rs. 5 lakhs but the contract valued it at Rs. 15 lakhs and the assessee H. Co. claimed that depreciation allowance under S. 10 (2) should be as on an asset of 15 lakhs. But the income-tax authorities allowed only as on 5 lakhs. The income-tax authorities regarded the transaction between the company and the Madura Mills as involving a payment on account of ginning charges of Rs. 6,00,000 and treated it as a payment by the Madura Mills to the assessee company on account of ginning charges for ten years.

Held, (i) that, where the circumstances show that the assessee has arranged to put an entirely fictitious price on his assets, it is open to the income-tax authorities to refuse to accept that price and to ascertain what the true value is. The original cost of any particular asset is entirely a question of fact and the mere existence of a document showing that a contract has been made for purchase at a certain price does not preclude the Commissioner from determining its real value. The Commissioner was therefore entitled to look behind the contract figure of 15,00,000 and fix its true value as a fact.

(ii) that where the issue of debenture loan is found to be illusory the interest paid on the debentures is not allowable as a deduction.

(iii) that the arrangement by which a proportion of the shares of the Madura Mills was issued to the assessee company in respect of the ginning contract is not a transaction of a capital nature and the benefit received by the company represents profits received in the year of payment.

Reference to this Court by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, under S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, XI of 1922, for decision on the following question:—.

"1. Whether the Income-tax authorities were justified in law in going behind the contract for the sale of the assets of the Harvey Brothers, to the petitioner company for Rs. 15 lakhs?

2. If the answer to the above is in the affirmative (a) whether there was any material before the Income-tax authorities to justify their finding that the original cost of those assets to the petitioner company was not Rs. 15 lakhs and (b) if there was such material was there any material for their finding that the cost of the assets was Rs. 5 lakhs?

3. Whether there was any material before the Income-tax authorities to justify their conclusion that the debenture loan of Rs. 10 lakhs was illusory and colourable and that the interest paid thereon is not therefore allowable as a deduction?

4. Whether the transaction of exchange of the Madura Mills shares with the shares of the Petitioner company is an isolated transaction and of a capital nature?

5. Whether on the facts of the case the difference if any between the values of the exchanged shares could be said to be profit in the hands of the petitioners assessable to tax;

6. Whether the Income-tax authorities were correct in adopting the market value in respect of the 20,000 Madura Mill shares allotted to the petitioners?

7. Whether there was any material before the Income-tax authorities to justify their finding that the difference in value between the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills, Limited, received by the petitioners and the 1,000 shares of their own company allotted by the petitioners to the Madura Mills amounted to six lakhs?"

Mills Company, Limited, as the "Madura Mills". The firm consists of three partners, namely, Mr. A. Harvey, Mr. J. C. The profits of the firm are divisible between the partners in the following proportions: Mr. A. Harvey 63/128; Mr. J. C. Harvey 63/128; and the Tuticorin Company, Limited, 2/128. The capital of the Comorin Investment and Trading Company, Limited, is divided into 10,000 shares of which Mr. A. Harvey and Mr. J. C. Harvey hold between them 9,999 shares.

Harvey as individuals and not as members of the firm. The assets consisted of lands, buildings, plant and machinery. Of the purchase consideration Rs. 4,71,383 was allocated to the lands and buildings, and Rs. 10,28,617 to the plant and machinery. For several years Messrs. A and J. C. Harvey had ginned cotton for the Madura Mills. The rates charged for the years 1930, 1931 and 1932 averaged Rs. 12-8-0 per candy. Before the incorporation of the Company negotiations took place between Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey and the Madura Mills for the conclusion of an arrangement under which the Madura Mills should allot 20,000 shares to the company and as consideration the company should allot to the Madura Mills 1,000 shares and enter into a contract under which the company should agree to gin cotton for the Madura Mills at a flat rate of Rs. 8 per candy for a period of ten years from 1st April, 1933. An agreement was arrived at on this basis after the incorporation of the company and 1,000 of its shares were allotted to the Madura Mills on the 24th July, 1933. The formal contract with the Madura Mills was executed on the 26th August, 1933, and the allotment to the company of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills duly followed.

The company paid no cash for the assets which it had acquired from Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey. Of the Rs. 15,00,000 stated to be the consideration, Rs. 5,00,000 was satisfied by the issue of shares and the balance of Rs. 10,00,000 by the issue of debentures. On the 2nd June, 1933, the company passed the following resolution:

"Resolved unanimously that the sum of Rs. 10,00,000 be raised by the issue of two debentures for Rs. 5,00,000 each bearing interest at 7 per cent. per annum charged upon its undertaking and all its property whatsoever and wheresoever both present and future including its uncalled capital if any and goodwill in the form now submitted to the meeting and that in consideration of the Finchley Investments, Limited, and the Kochadai Investments, Limited, having each paid to the company the sum of Rs. 5,00,000 that the above-mentioned two debentures be sealed and issued to the above companies."

The Finchley Investments, Limited, and the Kochadai Investments, Limited, are two private companies registered in Canada and controlled by Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey through their wives. The Finchley Investments, Limited has an authorized capital of $50,250, divided into 50 class A Cumulative preferred shares of $5 each, and 10,000 class B shares of $5 each, of which all the class A shares and 5,990 of the class B shares have been issued. All the class B shares are held by Mrs. A. Harvey. This company has taken authority to issue debentures to the value of $10,00,000 and has in fact issued $5,99,000, all of which are also held by Mrs. A. Harvey. The Kochadai Investments, Limited, has an authorized capital of $25,250 made up of 50 class A Cumulative preferred shares of $5 each and 5,000 class B shares of $5 each, of which all the class A shares and 1,990 of class B shares have been issued. Mrs. J. C. Harvey is the holder of the 1,990 class B shares. This company has authority to issue debentures to the amount of $500,000. Of these debentures $1,99,000 have been issued and $6,000 of them have been redeemed. The outstanding debentures are all held by Mrs. J. C. Harvey. Of the debentures issued by the Finchley Investments Limited the amount of $1,69,000 was issued on the 17th October, 1933, and of those issued by the Kochadai Investments, Limited, a similar amount was issued on the 12th October, 1933.

On the passing of the resolution which I have just quoted, two cheques for Rs. 5,00,000 each were drawn by the firm in favour of the company, but it was not intended that they should be presented for payment. In the course of explanations given on behalf of the company in answer to questions put by the income-tax authorities it was stated that the two cheques were issued by the firm on behalf of the Canadian Companies in pursuance of an oral arrangement between Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey on the one side and the agents of the Canadian Companies on the other with a view to avoiding costly cross remittances. It was also stated that Mrs. J. C. Harveys had received Rs. 5,00,000 from the Kochadai Investments, Limited and that Mrs. A. Harvey had received an equal sum from the Finchley Investments, Limited. It turned out that the payments to these ladies did not represent cash but merely the issue to them of debentures by the Canadian Companies. Therefore the position was that instead of the vendors receiving Rs. 10,00,000 in cash the Canadian Companies which they controlled received debentures for this amount and the Canadian Companies in turn issued their own debentures to the wives of the vendors. The fact that the vendors received by this roundabout way debentures in lieu of cash will not affect the legal position if the transaction is a genuine one, but the Income-tax authorities say that it is not. They contend that the issue of debentures represents an artificial transaction undertaken to give an appearance of reality to the inflation in the value of the assets acquired by the company and a scheme to defeat the payment of Income-tax.

It is made abundantly clear by the Commissioner of Income-tax in the statement of the case that the Rs. 15,00,000 representing the purchase consideration is in fact a highly inflated figure. All the assets of the business had been purchased by Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey between the years 1897 and 1931 for about Rs. 10,50,000.

[Their Lordships here extract a statement showing the dates of construction or purchase of the various assets, their original cost, their written down value according to the accounts of the firm, and the values placed upon them at the time of the sale to the assessee. The table shows that the total original cost is, Rs. 10,51,323-10-6, the written down cost in the books of A. and F. Harvey is Rs. 5,00,000 and that the value as adopted by the assessee at the time of sale is Rs. 15,00,000.]

It is not necessary to examine these figures in detail to show that Rs. 15,00,000 was out of all proportion to the real value of the assets. It will be sufficient if attention is drawn to the machinery statement. The press at Sattur was purchased in 1914 for Rs. 1,01,411-13-2 and 19 years later was sold for Rs. 2,06,250. The gins at Sattur were purchased between 1905 and 1915 for Rs. 1,05,683-14-2 and were sold for Rs. 2,06,250. The press at Dindigul was acquired during the years 1928 and 1929 for Rs. 84,944-13-10, and was also sold for Rs. 2,06,250.

The gins at the same place were purchased during these years for Rs. 60,892-10-11 and they were sold for Rs. 2,06,250. The total assets stood in the books of firm at Rs. 5,00,000 and notwithstanding that there must have been considerable depreciation they were passed on to the company at the figure of Rs. 15,00,000. It has not been suggested by the company that the value of the assets had increased owing to special circumstances. On the contrary it had to be admitted to the income-tax authorities that the value of ginning factories had been seriously affected by the depression prevailing in the textile trade. Indication of the extent of depression may be gathered from the fact that a factory built by another company at Sattur at a cost of over Rs. 2,00,000 was acquired by the company in 1934 for Rs. 40,000.

The company was assessed by the Income-tax Officer, Tuticorin, for the year 1934-35 on a total income of Rs. 82,643. The previous year was the year ended 31st March, 1934, and the assessment was completed on the 31st August of that year. In arriving at the figure of Rs. 82,643 the Income-tax Officer allowed a deduction of Rs. 61,130 as interest on the debentures which were issued to the Canadian companies. The true nature of the transaction with those companies had not then been realized, but further investigations carried out by the Income-tax Officer led to the disclosure of the position which I have stated. It was also discovered that the company had not declared any dividend out of the profits of the year ended 31st March, 1934, and that out of the total book profits amounting to Rs. 85,225 during the two years ended 31st March, 1935 only Rs. 25,000 had been distributed by July, 1935. The explanation given on behalf of the company was that the year 1933-34 was the first year of its working and that having regard to the world depression the directors had decided on the ground of prudence not to pay a dividend in respect of that year. Not being satisfied with this explanation and being of the opinion that the real object of not distributing profits was to enable Messrs. A. and J. C. Harvey to avoid a large amount of super-tax, the Income-tax Officer asked the Assistant Commissioner to give his approval under S. 23-A (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, to an order being passed that the sum payable as income-tax by the company should not be determined and that the proportionate share of each member in the profits and gains should be included in the total income of the member for the purpose of assessment to tax. After giving the company an opportunity of being heard the Assistant Commissioner passed the order asked for by the Income-tax Officer. The Income-tax Officer then computed the income of the company for the year 1933-34 which had escaped assessment in 1934-35 at Rs. 7,11,316. This figure included the following major items:

- (a) Rs. 48,149 depreciation allowed in excess of the original assessment.
- (b) Rs. 61,130 interest on debentures allowed in the original assessment.
- (c) Rs. 6,00,000 advance received on account of ginning charges.

The Income-tax Officer regarded the transaction between the company and the Madura Mills as involving a payment on account of ginning charges of Rs. 6,00,000. This figure was arrived at after allowing the company to treat the allotment of 1,000 of its shares to the Madura Mills as a capital transaction. The market value of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills which the company acquired was Rs. 7,00,000. The 1,000 shares of the assessee which the Madura Mills received in exchange in consequence of the arrangement had no market value, but the Income-tax Officer took the nominal value of Rs. 1,00,000 to be their true value. The difference between Rs. 7,00,000 and the Rs. 1,00,000 represented the payment by the Madura Mills to the company on account of ginning charges for the period of ten years.

The company appealed to the Assistant Commissioner against this new computation of income and objected to the inclusion of the three items (a), (b) and (c) in the total income. The Assistant Commissioner accepted the Income-tax Officer's computation and dismissed the appeal. The company then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax for revision of the Assistant Commissioner's order under S. 33 and asked in the alternative that certain questions of law be referred to this Court under S. 66 (2). Messrs. A. and F. Harvey also appealed against the order passed under S. 23-A. That appeal is pending but the question of the validity of the order does not arise in the present proceedings. The Commissioner acceded to the request of the company for a reference and has asked the Court to decide the following questions:—

"1. Whether the Income-tax authorities were justified in law in going behind the contract for the sale of the assets of the Harvey Brothers to the petitioner company for Rs. 15,00,000?"

2. If the answer to the above is in the affirmative, (a) whether there was any material before the Income-tax authorities to justify their finding that the original cost of those assets to the petitioner company was not Rs. 15,00,000 and (b) if there was such material was there any material for their finding that the cost of the assets was Rs. 5,00,000?"

3. Whether there was any material before the Income-tax authorities to justify their conclusion that the debenture loan of Rs. 1,00,000 was illusory and colourable and that the interest paid thereon is not therefore allowable as a deduction?"

4. Whether the transaction of exchange of the Madura Mills shares with the shares of the petitioner company is an isolated transaction and of a capital nature?"

5. Whether on the facts of the case the difference if any between the values of exchanged shares could be said to be profit in the hands of the petitioner assessable to tax?"

6. Whether the Income-tax authorities were correct in adopting the market value in respect of the 20,000 Madura Mills shares allotted to the petitioners?"

7. Whether there was any material before the Income-tax authorities to justify their finding that the difference in value between the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills, Limited, received by the petitioners and the 1,000 shares of their own company allotted by the petitioners to the Madura Mills amounted to 6,00,000?"

Question No. 1.—By virtue of S. 10 (2) (vi) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 an assessee is entitled to an allowance on account of depreciation in respect of buildings, machinery or furniture which belong to him and are used for the purposes of his business. The Commissioner rightly observes that the original costs of any particular asset is entirely a question of fact, and like any other question of fact depends upon the evidence produced to prove it. The mere production of documentary evidence showing that a contract has been made for purchasing assets at a certain price does not conclusively establish the correctness of a claim made by an assessee that for the purpose of S. 10 (2) (vi) the original cost is the amount shown in the document. I also agree with the statement of the Commissioner that where the circumstances show that an assessee has arranged to put an entirely fictitious price on his assets it is open to the income-tax authorities to refuse to accept that price and to ascertain what the true value is.

On behalf of the company the learned Advocate-General has contended that the Court cannot go behind the contract and in support of this argument has quoted the decision of the House of Lords in *Aron Salomon v. Salomon & Co., Ltd.*¹, but I fail to see what bearing that case has here. A leather merchant and a boat manufacturer sold his business to a limited company which had a nominal capital of 40,000 shares of £1 each. Before the incorporation of the company the vendor entered into a contract with the trustee of the future company settling the terms upon which the transfer was to be made. One of the conditions was that part payment might be made to the vendor in debentures of the company. The memorandum of association was signed by the vendor, his wife, a daughter and four sons all of whom subscribed for one share each. In part payment of the purchase consideration debentures were issued to the vendor to whom was allotted 20,000 shares which were paid for out of the purchase money. The total number of shares issued was 20,007 and with his 20,000 shares the vendor had complete control of the company. At the time of the sale the business was solvent, but bad times came and the company was forced to go into liquidation. The question was whether the vendor as the holder of the debentures was entitled to preference over the other creditors of the company. Overruling the Court of Appeal, the House of Lords held that it was not contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act, 1862, for a trader to sell his business to a limited liability company consisting of himself and the members of his family, the business then being solvent, all the terms of sale being known to and approved by the shareholders, and all the requirements of the Act being complied with. There had been no fraud upon the creditors or shareholders and the liquidator was not entitled to rescission of the contract of purchase.

In the present case the Court is not considering a situation analogous to the situation in *Aron Salomon v. Salomon & Co., Ltd.*¹ and it is not considering the provisions of the Indian Companies Act, but the provisions of the Indian Income-tax Act. To accept the argument of the learned Advocate-General would mean that where an assessee had placed a fictitious value on his assets he would be entitled to the statutory allowance for depreciation on the fictitious figure and consequently would escape payment of income-tax. Therefore, to accept the argument would be to go against the true intent and meaning of the Indian Income-tax Act. As I hold that the income-tax authorities have the right to look behind the contract of sale it follows that my answer to the first question is in the affirmative.

Question No. 2.—I have shown the basis on which the company says that the figure of Rs. 15,00,000 is arrived at and I am of the opinion that there was material to justify the finding of the income-tax authorities that the original cost of the assets acquired was not Rs. 15,00,000. The purchase consideration was the allotment of shares of the face value of Rs. 5,00,000 and debentures of the nominal value of Rs. 10,00,000 but the shares and the debentures had no value beyond the value of the assets acquired. The company adduced no evidence of the value of the assets. It relied entirely on the figure stated in the contract of sale. In these circumstances the income-tax authorities took the true value to be the figure at which the assets stood in the books and as this was the only evidence before them I consider that they were justified in their conclusion, especially in view of the age of most of the assets. If the company had placed before the income-tax authorities evidence to show that the assets stood in the books of the firm at a lower figure than their true value the position would have been different. But it did not do so and the inference is that it was not in a position to show that the assets were of higher value.

I would answer both parts of the second question in the affirmative.

Question No. 3.—I have already stated the facts relating to the debenture issue and I consider that these facts provide material amply sufficient to justify the conclusion that the debenture loan of Rs. 10,00,000 was illusory and colourable. It follows that in my opinion the interest paid on the debentures is not allowable as a deduction.

Questions Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7.—These questions may be dealt with conveniently together. The learned Advocate-General has contended that the exchange of the shares of the Madura Mills for the shares of the company and the benefit of the ginning contract must be regarded as one transaction and entirely of a capital nature. He has also said that as the Madura Mills has been allowed to treat it as being a transaction of a capital nature the company must be allowed to treat it in the same way. I am unable to accept either of these propositions. The main part of the consideration which the Madura Mills received for its 20,000 shares was the benefit to be derived from the ginning contract. For ten years the company has to gin cotton for the Madura Mills at a price far below the market price. I consider that the income-tax authorities were justified in regarding the transaction of a capital nature only to the extent of Rs. 1,00,000, represented by the shares of the company allotted to the Madura Mills. The company in return for an immediate gain of Rs. 6,00,000 agreed to reduce its probable annual gains over a period of ten years. In other words instead of getting a probable income of Rs. 6,00,000 spread over ten years it obtained a lump sum payment in one year. Nor do I regard the fact that this gain was not in money but in money's worth, namely, shares, makes any difference.

In my opinion the income-tax authorities were also justified in taking the value of the 20,000 shares which the company received from the Madura Mills to be the market value at the date of the transaction. It has been argued by the learned Advocate-General that to place on the market at once a block of 20,000 shares would mean a depression in the price. As the Commissioner has remarked the shares were not put on the market and were not intended to be put on the market.

In support of his argument that the answers to these four questions should be in favour of the company, the learned Advocate-General has quoted to us *Hawley v. Commissioner of Inland Revenue*¹, *Van Den Berghs, Ltd. v. Clark*², *Short Brothers, Ltd. v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue*³ and *The Commissioner of Income-tax v. Shaw, Wallace & Co.*⁴, but I can find no support for him in these judgments.

In Hawley v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue,¹ the facts were these. In consideration of an advance of £7,000 made by the assessee to a company in 1905, he received debentures of the nominal value of £7,000 repayable after December 1914, by half yearly instalments of £500 and from a director 5,600 £1 ordinary shares of which he was to transfer 400 shares on receiving each payment of £500 in respect of the debentures. He was also to receive one-fifth of the profits each year up to December, 1914, and thereafter a share of the profits corresponding, in effect, to the proportion of the debentures remaining unpaid from time to time. The assessee received no share of the profits for the years 1915, 1916 and 1917 until 1920 when he received a sum of £6,000 in settlement of what was due to him by way of profits for those years. In May, 1921, he was paid £10,000 in full settlement of the liability under the agreement up to December, 1921, the prospective date of its termination. The sums of £6,000 and £10,000 were assessed to super-tax for the years 1920-21 and 1921-22 respectively as forming part of his total income for the years 1919-20 and 1920-21. It was held that he was entitled under the original contract to have his share of the profits paid to him each year and that for the purpose of computing his income for super-tax the £6,000 and £10,000 must be spread over the years in respect of the profits of which they were paid, subject to the entire exclusion from liability to super-tax of such part of the sum of £10,000 as represented a composition of his right to receive a share of the profits of the year 1921. In the case now before us there was no arrangement by which the payment was to be spread over a period of years. The contract was one under which the company got an immediate gain in consideration of its reducing its charges. It must be regarded as a contract entered into in the ordinary course of its ginning business and nothing else.

*Van Den Berghs, Ltd. v. Clarke*¹ was a decision of the House of Lords. The facts are even further away from the facts in the present case but an observation of Lord Macmillan has application here, not in favour of but against the argument of the learned Advocate-General. An English company carried on a large business in the manufacture of margarine and other substitute for butter. In 1908 the company entered into an agreement with a Dutch company of rival manufacture under which the two companies undertook to share profits and losses in the proportion which, on an average of five years, the profits of the rival tradings in margarine bore to each other. In 1913 there was an extension of the agreement which was to be prolonged till the end of 1940. The two companies carried on their businesses separately until the end of 1913. During the last war the agreement could not be observed, but in 1920 a third agreement was entered into by which the former agreements were amended. One of the terms of the amended agreement was that the results of trading in the year 1914 and the later years should be ascertained by accountants on each side and that any dispute arising under the agreements should be settled by arbitration. Disputes did arise and there was a submission to arbitration. The arbitration proceedings were, however, settled on terms by which the agreements were rescinded and the Dutch company paid the English company a sum of £4,50,000 as damages. The question was whether the £4,50,000 was in the nature of a capital asset or a receipt of income to be included in the profits of the English company. It was held that the payment was in the nature of a capital asset. The passage in the judgment of Lord Macmillan which has bearing in the present case is this:

"Now what were the appellants (the English company) giving up? They gave up their whole rights under the agreements for thirteen years ahead. These agreements are called in the stated case 'pooling agreements', but that is a very inadequate description of them, for they did much more than merely embody a system of pooling and sharing profits. If the appellants were merely receiving in one sum down the aggregate of profits which they would otherwise have received over a series of years the lump sum might be regarded as of the same nature as the ingredients of which it was composed."

Lord Macmillan's judgment was accepted by all the members of the House of Lords who heard the appeal and therefore we have here authoritative indication that if a payment represents a lump sum payment of profits which would otherwise be received over a series of years it may be regarded as representing income.

The decision in *Short Brothers, Ltd. v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue*¹, was that the compensation paid in cancellation of certain contracts was chargeable to excess profits duty as a receipt of profits in the course of the company's ordinary trade, and must be included in the profits for the accounting period in which it became payable and was in fact paid. This case certainly does not help the company. The Commissioner of Income-tax v. Shaw, Wallace & Co.,² was quoted because the Privy Council there said that the word 'income' connotes a periodical monetary return coming in with some sort of regularity, or expected regularity, from definite sources. The source is not necessarily one which is expected to be continuously productive, but it must be one whose object is the production of a definite return, excluding anything in the nature of a mere windfall. It cannot be suggested that the allocation of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills was in the nature of a windfall. The contract fell within the scope of the memorandum of association of the company and it seems to me that the resulting benefit to the company must be classed as income.

A decision which is far more in point is that of Rowlatt, J., in the *Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. The North Fleet Coal and Ballast Co., Ltd.*¹ A company owned a chalk quarry and contracted to supply a purchaser with a specified quantity of chalk yearly for ten years. The contract also included in its terms that the quarry company should build a wharf at which the purchaser's ships could load the chalk. As the result of the war of 1914 the agreement was suspended and after the war the purchaser did not wish to take further deliveries. It was then agreed between the quarry company and the purchaser that in consideration of a payment of £900 a year for the remaining four years of the term the purchaser should be relieved of his liability under the contract. Subsequently, the quarry company accepted a lump sum payment of £3,000 in lieu of the four annual payments of £900 and the £ 3,000 was applied by the quarry company in writing down the cost of the wharf. It was held that the £3,000 was chargeable to excess profits duty as a trading profit of the quarry company and therefore must be included in the profits of the year in which it was agreed to be paid. Rowlatt, J., refused to graft a distinction upon the decision of the Court of Appeal in *Shori's case*². He considered that if a sum represented profits in a new form then that was income and income in the year in which it was received.

The answers which I would give to the four questions are these:

No. 4.—The arrangement by which a proportion of the shares of the Madura Mills was issued to the company in respect of the ginning contract is not a transaction of a capital nature and the benefit received by the company represents profits received in the year of payment.

No. 5.—On the facts of the case the difference between the values of the exchanged shares must be allocated to the ginning contract and as such is profit in the hands of the company assessable to the tax.

No. 6.—The income-tax authorities were right in adopting the market value in respect of the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills allotted to the company.

No. 7.—There was material before the income-tax authorities to justify their finding that the difference between the 20,000 shares of the Madura Mills received by the company and the 1,000 shares of the company allotted to the Madura Mills amounted to Rs. 6,00,000.

The result is that the income-tax authorities have succeeded on all the questions raised and therefore are entitled to their costs, which we fix at Rs. 250.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 4—Interest paid in London—Whether interest accruing in British India—Guaranteed interest—Secretary of State paying interest on the amount of guarantee—Whether the amount liable to deduction by the Company.

By virtue of a contract entered into between the Secretary of State for India and the Southern Mahratta Railway Company the company undertook to pay into the Bank of England a certain sum to the credit of the Secretary of the State and he in return undertook to pay half yearly to the company out of the revenues of India interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum on that amount. The practice was the distribution of profits of the company for every year rested with the Secretary of State who was entitled to deduct the equivalent in rupees of the amount he has paid to the company by way of guaranteed interest in the course of the year. In the year of accounting the company deducted a certain sum as having been received from the Secretary of State as interest under his guarantee. On the question whether the said sum of guaranteed interest paid by the Secretary of State which was deducted for the purpose of the company's return was liable to assessment in the company's hands,

Held, that the company was not liable to deduction. Following The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue, (1926) 12 Tax. Cas. 1111, the Secretary of State must be considered to have recouped out of what is called the Company's share of the surplus receipt and the extent of his recoupment depends upon the amount of profits. Hence it is a distribution of profits in recoupment of a guarantor who guaranteed those profits.

The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Secretary of State for India, (1922) I.L.R. 49 Cal. 815: 1 I.T.C. 178, dissented from.

Held, further, that all the profits of the company accrue or arise in British India including the payment of interest in London within the meaning of S. 4 of the Indian Income-tax Act.

Sarupchand Hubumchand v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, (1931) 5 I.T.C. 108; Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Chumilal B. Mehta, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 785: L.R. 65 I.A. 132: I.L.R. 1938 Bom. 752 (P.C.) and The Right Rev. C. J. C. Saunders v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, United Province, (1931) 5 I.T.C. 454, referred to.

Case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, under S. 66 (1) of the Act.

2. The reference arises out of the assessment of the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd., Madras (hereinafter referred to as the 'company') for the year 1937-38. Under S. 22 (1) of the Act the company returned an income of Rs. 24,36,479 for the accounting year 1936-37. In arriving at this income, the company deducted Rs. 23,33,333 being the amount of "guaranteed interest" payable to them by the Secretary of State. This "guaranteed interest" is a sum which, as subsequently explained, the Secretary of State is bound under a contract to pay over to the company for distribution among their shareholders and which he has power to recoup by retaining an equivalent sum from the surplus receipts of the railway. The deduction for income-tax purposes of "guaranteed interest" had been allowed in the assessment of the company in previous years on the authority of the decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Secretary of State for India, which was presumed to be applicable to all Guaranteed Railway Companies. In 1926, however, the case of the assessment of the guaranteed interest of the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Company for the purpose of Corporation Profits Tax was raised by the Inland Revenue Authorities in England. The case was taken to the High Court (King's Bench Division) where it was decided by Mr. Justice Rowlatt that the guaranteed interest was part of the company's profits for Corporation Tax purposes. (*The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue*²). Against that decision the company did not appeal. Mr. Justice Rowlatt's judgment caused the Government of India to entertain considerable doubts as regards the correctness of the decision in the Calcutta case of the Bengal Nagpur Railway in so far, at least, as it applied to railways whose "surplus" or "divisible" profits are ascertained before the deduction of guaranteed interest, and in accordance with their instructions the Income-tax Officer, Madras VI Circle, disallowed the deduction of guaranteed interest in the company's assessment for 1937-38 and determined the total income of the company to be Rs. 47,69,812. The company contends that the above disallowance was not correct, and the whole of this reference turns on this one point.

3. The following statement of facts is taken mainly from the case stated in 1926 by the Special Commissioners for the opinion of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice and has been agreed to by the company as representing the facts correctly. It may be mentioned here that the passing into law of the Government of India Act, 1935, has changed the legal position of the Secretary of State in Council as regards the guaranteed interest in this case, but the change is in form only and not in substance. All the contracts referred to in the reference were made between the Secretary of State in Council and the company. Under S. 178 (1) of the Government of India Act, however, all the liabilities of the Secretary of State in Council in respect of guarantees which were secured on the revenues of India are now secured on the revenues of India and all the Provinces. Furthermore under sub-S. (2) of that section all enactments relating to guarantees given by the Secretary of State in Council are to continue to have effect with the substitution of references to the Secretary of State for references to the Secretary of State in Council and with such other modifications as His Majesty in Council may deem necessary. So far as guarantees for Indian Railways are concerned modifications have, in fact, been made by the Government of India (Adaptation of Acts of Parliament)

1. (1926) 12 Tax Cases 1111.

Order, 1937, which came into operation on 1st April, 1937. This order modified the India Guaranteed Railways Act, 1879, which is the statute whereby the Secretary of State in Council was empowered to give such guarantees. The legal position, therefore, at present is that so far as the "guaranteed interest" is concerned the guarantor is now the Secretary of State and not the Secretary of State in Council. That however makes no difference to the position in this case.

4. The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Company is a guaranteed Railway Company incorporated in England under the Companies Act on the 24th May, 1882, with the following object (inter alia) :—

"To enter into a contract with the Secretary of State in Council of India for the construction and carrying on of a railway to be called the Southern Mahratta Railway and for other purposes, in the terms of a draft already prepared and scheduled to an agreement dated the 19th day of May, 1882, and made between the Secretary of State, of the one part, and Sir Douglas Forsyth of the other part and to carry out and perform the same subject to any modifications which the company and the Secretary of State may from time to time agree upon."

5. The company is controlled by a Board of Directors in London and derives its income from railways which it works in India under numerous contracts with the Secretary of State, of which the principal are

(a) a contract dated 1st June, 1882, known as the "Original" or "Principal" contract, and

(b) a contract dated 26th June, 1908, expressed to be supplemental to the contract of 1882 and which amended the 1882 contract in several important particulars.

6. Under the contract of 1882, the company constructed, equipped and maintained the railways to which the contract related and supplied the necessary staff for working them. The requisite land was provided by the Secretary of State in Council and the land and the railways including all rails, plant, machinery, rolling stock, etc., were his property. All moneys received by or on behalf of the company had to be paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the Secretary of State in Council or into a Government Treasury in India. The Company worked under the supervision and control of the Secretary of State in Council who was empowered from time to time to appoint one person to be a Director of the Company.

7. By cls. 26 and 27 of the Contract of 1882, the company undertook to pay into the Bank of England to the credit of the Secretary of State a sum of £3,000,000 which was to belong absolutely to the Secretary of State who was not to be deemed debtor to the company in respect thereof; and the Secretary of State undertook during the continuance of the contract to pay half yearly to the company in India, out of the revenues of India, interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum on this sum of £3,000,000. Cl. 29 of the same contract provided that subject to certain limitations the Secretary of State was to provide all the moneys required for the projected railway whether as regards construction or working.

8. The Contract of 1908 provided for the continuance of the Contract of 1882, subject to certain variations and modifications which it is not necessary to describe except in so far as they relate to the point at issue.

Briefly, so far as that is concerned, the new position which emerged as the result of the 1908 contract was as follows:—

(a) the provisions of the original contract under which

(i) all moneys received by the company (excepting moneys paid to the company by the Secretary of State in Council pursuant to the contract) were to be paid to the credit of the Secretary of State at such times and in such manner as he may direct, and

(ii) Capital, Revenue and Stores accounts were to be kept remained unaltered.

(b) Cls. 26, 27 and 29 of the original contract referred to in paragraph 7 ceased to have effect altogether and a new financial arrangement was made. This new arrangement (which is described in cl. 8 of the Contract of 1908, as subsequently modified) provided that the capital of the Company's and State Lines should be taken to be the sum of £16,250,000, of which £12,750,000 was to be taken to be the capital of the Secretary of State and £3,500,000 to be the capital of the company, the Secretary of State in Council having the right to require the company to issue new capital stock not exceeding £1,500,000 to be allotted as fully paid up to such shareholders of the Madras Railway Company as he may direct. This further issue was in fact made in 1908 with the result that the amount of the company's capital became £5,000,000 at which it still stands. The sum of £12,750,000 taken to be the amount of the capital of the Secretary of State was an assumed figure adopted for the purpose of determining the proportion in which the profits should be distributed. It was reduced to £11,250,000 when the amount of the company's capital was increased to £5,000,000.

(c) Under cl. 2 of the Contract of 1908 the Secretary of State in Council can determine the contract on 31st December, 1937, or at the end of any subsequent fifth year from that date on giving the company a year's notice. On such determination of the contract the railways and equipment have to be delivered to the Secretary of State and under cl. 23 the Secretary of State has to repay a sum equivalent to the company's capital.

(d) Cl. 15 of the Contract of 1908 provides for payment of the guaranteed interest in respect of which this reference has arisen. This clause is in the following terms:—

"The Secretary of State will during the continuance of the Original Contract and the contracts supplemental thereto has hereby varied until the same shall be determined hereunder pay out of the Revenues of India to the Company in London in sterling interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum for each half year ending on the 30th day of June and the 31st day of December (commencing with the half year ending on the 30th day of June, 1908) on the nominal amount of the capital stock for the time being of the company such interest to be paid on the 1st day of July, or the 1st day of January immediately following the close of such half year."

The amount of the company's capital during the year of account was £5,000,000 and the interest guaranteed by the Secretary of State is $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. of this, which expressed in rupees amounted during the year to Rs. 23,33,333.

(e) Under cl. 42 of the Contract of 1882, as amended by cl. 17 of the Contract of 1908 and cl. 1 (c) of a Contract of 20th May, 1914, moneys received by the company on account of revenue (all of which—except the amount receivable from the Secretary of State on account of the guaranteed interest have to be paid to the credit of the Secretary of State) are to be applied as follows:—

"(1) Primarily in or towards the discharge of expenditure attributable to the half year to which the receipts relate, and

"(2) secondarily in or towards the discharge of expenditure attributable to any previous half year or half years and not already discharged out of receipts on account of revenue, and

"(3) in the next place in payment of the equivalent in rupees of the interest for the half year to which the receipts relate which shall have been paid or shall be payable by the Secretary of State to the company in respect of the company's debentures and debenture stock (except the £1,200,000 debenture stock created under the Contract of 31st August, 1887, relating to the Mysore State Railway) issue with the sanction of the Secretary of State for the purpose of capital expenditure on the Company's and State Lines which shall for the time being be outstanding.

"(4) The surplus (if any) shall subject to cl. 12 of the Contract of 26th June, 1908, be divided between the Secretary of State and the company in proportion to the respective shares in which the capital for the time being of the Company's and State Lines (exclusive of debenture capital) shall have been contributed by them."

(The provisions of cl. 12 of the Contract of 26th June, 1908, are not material to this reference.)

(f) Cl. 21 of the Contract of 1908 provided as follows:—

"The Secretary of State shall be entitled to deduct and retain out of the share of surplus receipts payable to the company in respect of each year (commencing on the 1st January, 1909) under cl. 17 hereof (but not under cls. 19 and 20 hereof), the equivalent in rupees of the guaranteed interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum for such year on the capital stock of the company paid or payable by the Secretary of State to the company under cl. 15 hereof, but if such share of surplus receipts in respect of any such year shall be less than the guaranteed interest of such year, the deficiency shall not be made out of the share of surplus receipts payable to the company in respect of any subsequent year. For the purpose of such deduction as aforesaid the company's share of surplus receipts under cl. 17 hereof in respect of the first half of any such year shall, subject to the provisions of cl. 15 hereof, be retained by the Secretary of State until the company's share in respect of the whole of such year shall have been ascertained.

"For the purpose of this clause the guaranteed interest paid or payable by the Secretary of State for such year shall be taken to be the aggregate of (1) one half of the amount paid for the half year ending on the 30th June in that year; (2) the whole of the amount paid for the half year ending on the 31st December in that year; and (3) one half of the amount (if any) payable for the half year ending on the 30th June in the year next following."

(The provisions of cls. 19 and 20 of the Contract of 1908 above mentioned are not material to this reference.)

9. The only other relevant provision which need be mentioned is Art. 73 of the Company's Articles of Association which runs as follows:—

"Any moneys which may from time to time be paid by the Secretary of State to the company by way of interest under the provisions of the Principal Contract (dated 1st June, 1882) or of any modification thereof, shall be distributed by the Board as dividends among the members in proportion to the amounts paid up or credited as paid up on their shares by yearly or half-yearly payments as the Board may from time to time determine and whether or not such balance of interest or any part of it represent profits of the company or not."

10. The above provisions with reference to the receipt of revenue and payment and application of guaranteed interest are strictly followed in practice. All revenue of the railways is paid to the credit of the Secretary of State. On 1st January and 1st July the Secretary of State pays to the company the half-year's interest at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum on its capital of £5,000,000 and subsequently recoups himself the amount of such interest by deducting it from the share of surplus profits payable to the company in respect of each year in accordance with the provisions of cl. 21 of the Contract of 1908. On or about 1st January and 1st July in each year a distribution for the half year is made by the company to its shareholders which includes both the guaranteed interest and a distribution of surplus profits.

11. During the year of account (1936-37) the divisible surplus of the company amounted to Rs. 1,62,17,601. The Secretary of State's share of this surplus, worked out in proportion to the capital contributed by him (as referred to in paragraph 8 above), was Rs. 1,15,32,381 and the company's share on their capital of £5,000,000 (or Rs. 7,50,00,000) was Rs. 46,85,220. There is no dispute as regards these figures. The whole of this surplus was not, however, made over to the company as the Secretary of State acting under cl. 21 of the Contr act of 1908 deducted and retained out of this divisible surplus a sum of Rs. 23,33,333 being the interest guaranteed by him to shareholders calculated at $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum on the company's capital of £5,000,000 and the balance of Rs. 23,51,886 was made over to the company. The company's contention is that for the following reasons this guaranteed interest is not liable to be assessed as part of the company's income:—

(a) The company was required to raise a capital of £5,000,000 which it did under the terms of the agreement on condition that interest thereon at $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. should be guaranteed by the Government of India.

(b) Both under the terms of the agreement between the company and the Secretary of State and the Articles of Association of the company which are unalterable without the consent of the Secretary of State, the company is under an obligation to pass on the amount paid by the Secretary of State to the shareholders and it therefore acts merely as a medium for purposes of passing on the amount to them. The company is a bare trustee in respect of the said amount.

(c) The amount is payable and is paid on fixed dates before the profits, if any, of the company are ascertained and independently of any profits being made by the company.

(d) The said amount does not form part of the profits of the company.

(e) Assuming without admitting that the said amount forms part of the profits of the company the amount is under the terms of the contract between the company and the Secretary of State payable and is paid in fact in sterling in London and no part of it is received in British India. The amount therefore does not accrue or arise nor is it received in British India nor can it be deemed to accrue or arise or be deemed to be received in British India under the terms of the Act.

(f) The fact that the amount is brought into account as between the company and the Secretary of State for the purpose of ascertaining the amount payable to the company in British India under the terms of the contract between the parties does not cause the amount in question to accrue or arise or to be deemed to accrue or arise or be received in British India. Moreover the company is incorporated and resident in England and is not resident in British India.

(g) The amount of the guaranteed interest in its essence and character is interest on capital borrowed within the meaning of S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Indian Income-tax Act and inasmuch as payment of such interest does not depend upon the earning of profits it is an admissible deduction for the purpose of computing the profits liable to taxation in British India.

(h) The principles of the decision of Rowlatt, J., in *The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue*¹ do not apply as the case there related to levy of Corporation Profits Tax and the principle of the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court governs the case.

12. The following question of law arises out of the case and I refer it for the decision of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court:—

"Whether the said sum of Rs. 23,33,333 being the equivalent in rupees of the guaranteed interest paid by the Secretary of State for India under the terms of the contracts dated the 1st June, 1882 and 26th June, 1908, between the Secretary of State and the company which was deducted for the purpose of the company's return for the accounting year 1936-37 is liable to assessment in the hands of the company."

13. The company's contention that it is not liable to be assessed on the amount of guaranteed interest rests mainly on the following grounds:—

- (1) that it is not the income of the company,
- (2) that even if it is the income of the company such income does not accrue or arise in British India and is also not received in British India, and
- (3) that it is in the nature of interest on borrowed capital and as such an expenditure admissible under S. 10 (2) (iii) of the Act, in arriving at the company's profits.

The contention that it is not income to the company is based on the argument that the amount is paid by the Secretary of State for the purpose of being passed on to the shareholders as interest guaranteed on their capital. This argument is open to the criticism that it ignores the actual facts. The profit arising from working the railway was apportioned between the Secretary of State and the company in certain definite proportions. (Please see paragraph 11.) Out of the company's share as thus determined the Secretary of State retains an amount calculated at 3½ per cent.

of the capital raised by the company from shareholders. This is what is called "guaranteed interest", and it is intended for payment to shareholders to whom the company had held out this inducement when it applied to the public for capital. In other words, the company allows the Secretary of State to make use of a certain portion of its share of profits for being distributed among the shareholders. The remaining amount the company distributes as dividends among the shareholders. It is thus clear that what the Secretary of State retains is really part of the company's share of profits. In the words of Rowlatt, J.:

"It seems to me to be the very simplest case of the application of profits, after they have become profits, by way of distribution of them to make good to somebody who has taken the risks of these profits not reaching that amount."

The company raised capital to the extent of £5,000,000 from the shareholders, who had a Government guarantee that they would get a return of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum on their capital. Although the guarantee was given by the Secretary of State in Council the arrangement was that this should be fulfilled by paying the interest out of the company's share. If the company's share was insufficient to meet the guarantee in full, the Secretary of State in Council had to make good the deficiency, but such a contingency has not so far arisen. As observed by Rowlatt, J., again:

"The prima facie share of profits of the company was greater than the sum which the Secretary of State had paid under the guarantee, therefore the Secretary of State was recouped the full amount of this guarantee and a surplus was left over which enabled the company to distribute not only the $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. which the Secretary of State had provided under this guarantee but a further sum which made the dividend up to something like 5 per cent. or something of that sort."

There is no doubt therefore that what is paid by the Secretary of State as guaranteed interest is really a part of the company's share of profits. It is indeed in exactly the same position as the remaining part of the surplus belonging to the company out of which a dividend is paid to shareholders, and to the assessment of which the company has not raised any objection.

As regards the argument that the income accrues or arises outside British India it will suffice to say that the amount which is retained by the Secretary of State to recoup the amount of the guarantee is a part of the profits of the company the whole of which accrues or arises in British India. In short, it is not distinguishable from the remaining part of the profits of the company. Nor can the amount in any sense be regarded as interest on borrowed capital. The subscribed capital of the company raised by the issue of shares is not a loan taken from the shareholders.

What is paid in the form of guaranteed interest is really not interest in the ordinarily accepted sense but a dividend which in this case is guaranteed whether or not there is sufficient amount of profits. If the profits are insufficient the Secretary of State has guaranteed to make good the deficiency. But so long as there is no deficiency in the profits the payment is made out of profits.

For these reasons, the question should be answered in the affirmative.

Leach, C.J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The assessee in this case is the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Company, Limited, which was incorporated in England in 1882. The main object of the incorporation of the company was the fulfilment of a contract with the Secretary of State for India in Council for the construction and carrying on of a railway in India. After the incorporation, the contract was duly entered into and in accordance therewith the company constructed, equipped and maintained the railway to which the contract related and supplied the necessary staff for its working. The Secretary of State provided the land required for the railway and also the moneys necessary for its construction and working. All the assets of the undertaking including the rails, plant, machinery and rolling stock were to be and are his property. The company manages the railway under the supervision and control of the Secretary of State, who is empowered to appoint one member of the Board of Directors. The Court has been informed that the director appointed by the Secretary of State possesses a power of veto.

By virtue of the contract of 1882 the company undertook to pay into the Bank of England to the credit of the Secretary of State a sum £3,000,000 and the Secretary of State undertook during the continuance of the contract to pay half yearly to the company out of the revenues of India interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. per annum on the amount. The £3,000,000 was duly paid by the company into the Bank of England to the credit of the Secretary of State, who has paid to the company in London half yearly the amount required to meet the interest due, but the Secretary of State has reimbursed himself at the end of the year out of the profits of the undertaking. The £3,000,000 represented the company's capital and the Secretary of State guaranteed interest on it at the rate mentioned. The contract also provided for division of the surplus profits between the Secretary of State and the company according to their respective shares in the capital of the undertaking.

The contract of 1882 continued to govern the relations between the company and the Secretary of State until the 26th June, 1908, when a further contract, expressed to be supplemental to the contract of 1882, was entered into. The contract of 1908 provided for the continuance of the original contract subject to certain variations and modifications. It was agreed that the capital of the undertaking should be taken to be the sum of £16,250,000 of which £12,750,000 was to be the capital of the Secretary of State and £3,500,000 to be the capital of the company. The Secretary of State was given the right to require the company to issue new capital stock not exceeding £1,500,000 to be allotted as fully paid up to such shareholders as he might direct. This new stock was issued in the same year with the result that the amount of the company's capital became £5,000,000 the figure at which it now stands. After the issue of this new stock the capital of the Secretary of State was deemed to be £11,250,000 for the purpose of determining the proportion in which the profits should be distributed.

All moneys received by the company in the course of the working of the railway have to be paid over to the Secretary of State. The company is not entitled to use any receipts of the undertaking for the purposes of meeting working expenses. These expenses are met from a grant made each year by the Secretary of State. As I have indicated the net receipts of the undertaking are divided at the end of each year between the Secretary of State and the company in proportion to their respective shares in the capital. The distribution of the profits rests with the Secretary of State, who is entitled in calculating the surplus to deduct the equivalent in rupees of the amount he has paid to the company by way of guaranteed interest in the course of the year. The surplus has always been more than sufficient to enable the Secretary of State to reimburse himself.

The reference arises out of the assessment of the company for the year 1937-38. The company returned an income of Rs. 24,36,479 for 1936-37. In arriving at this figure, the company deducted Rs. 23,33,333 which it had received from the Secretary of State as interest under his guarantee. This deduction was in accordance with the practice which had been previously followed, a practice which received the approval of the Calcutta High Court in *The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Secretary of State for India*¹. This decision however conflicts with a later decision in England affecting the company, *The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue*² and it is this conflict which has given rise to the reference. The income-tax authorities say that the Calcutta decision is wrong and that the company in calculating its annual profits must include the amount of guaranteed interest received in London. In order that the question may be decided the Commissioner of Income-tax, in agreement with the company, has referred to this Court under the provisions of S. 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, the following question:

"Whether the said sum of Rs. 23,33,333 being the equivalent in rupees of the guaranteed interest paid by the Secretary of State for India under the terms of the contracts dated the 1st June, 1882 and 26th June, 1908, between the Secretary of State and the company which was deducted for the purpose of the company's return for the accounting year 1936-37 is liable to assessment in the hands of the company?"

In *The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co., Ltd. v. Secretary of State for India*¹, that company was called upon to pay tax on an income of Rs. 1,72,60,595 which included a sum of Rs. 13,07,440 being the equivalent of the amount of the guaranteed interest paid in sterling by the Secretary of State on the share of the capital of the company. For the purposes of the present reference the contract of the company with the Secretary of State may be taken to be on all fours with the contract of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, Limited, with the Secretary of State. The Bengal Nagpur Railway Company Limited, claimed that it was only taxable in respect of the amount which it received in India at the end of the year as its share of the surplus profits. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the company was only liable in respect of its share of the surplus profits received in return for its services in the management of the railway, and not in respect of the moneys received in London. It was considered that the payment of the guaranteed interest in London was independent of the earnings of the railway and that the repayment of the amount of the guaranteed interest constituted the payment of a debt due from the company to the Secretary of State.

 Leach, C.J.

In *The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue*¹, the question was whether the company was liable to corporation's profits tax in respect of the amount which it received from the Secretary of State as guaranteed interest. Admittedly, there is no difference in principle between assessment in England to the Corporation's Profits tax and assessment to Indian income-tax. It was held by Rowlatt, J., that the guaranteed interest paid by the Secretary of State formed part of the company's profits and that the recoupment to the Secretary of State out of the surplus profits represented a distribution of profits within the prohibition of deduction from profits in S. 53 (2) of the Finance Act, 1920. Rowlatt, J., put the question this way:—

"Are the profits of the company for the purpose of corporation profits tax the amount of their share before the Secretary of State is recouped, or are they only the balance which is left to them after the Secretary of State is recouped? That is what the question is, or to put it in another way, are they to be taxed on that balance, or are they to be taxed on the balance plus the amount of the guaranteed interest, which is only putting the same thing in another way."

In deciding the case against the company the learned Judge said:

"If you put it in commercial or financial language or look at it from the commercial or financial point of view, the position simply is that these shareholders have been paid out of the proceeds of the working of the Railway, and the Revenues of India have not paid them a penny. The money they have got is simply because the railway has been so successful, and for no other reason they have got it. If it had not been successful they would have got some of it from the Secretary of State for India, but that position has not arisen; or, if you use language framed more exactly with respect to tax law, this, in my judgment, is the position, that the railway company have earned all these profits, all their one-fifth share, or whatever it is, of the profits of the railway company, and it does not matter in the least that they have had to apply those profits being profits, from the working of the railway, in making good to the Secretary of State a guarantee which he had honoured provisionally in favour of the shareholders. . . . The Secretary of State is recouped out of what is called the company's share of the surplus receipts and as I have pointed out, the extent of his recoupment depends upon the amount of the profits. I think that this is a distribution of profits within the prohibition in S. 53, sub-S. 2(b) of the Finance Act, 1920. I think it is a distribution of profits. It is a distribution of profits in recoupment of a guarantor who guaranteed those profits—guaranteed them if you like to the shareholders, but what he guaranteed are the profits. He has guaranteed that the people who put up the capital shall have a return on the capital, and if the profits unaided give that return, the person who gives the guarantee gets them to make good his guarantee. It seems to me the very simplest case of the application of profits, after they have become profits, by way of distribution of them to make good to somebody who has taken the risk of those profits not reaching that amount."

Both the company and the income-tax authorities accept the decision of Rowlatt, J., in *The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue*¹, as correctly stating the law and consequently are agreed that *The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co., Ltd. v. Secretary of State for India*², ought not to be followed. While accepting the judgment of Rowlatt, J., in *The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue*¹, Mr. Grant has contended on behalf of the company that the payment of interest on the £5,000,000 in London cannot be regarded as profits accruing or arising in British India within the meaning of S. 4 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. In fact this is the only point taken on behalf of the company. As the correctness of the decision in *The Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ltd. v. The Commissioner of Inland Revenue*¹, is not challenged, I fail to see any basis for the argument that the receipt of the interest in London must be taken to be income earned there. The decision of Rowlatt, J., emphatically negatives the contention. The basis of his judgment is that all the profits of the undertaking are earned in India, and the payment by the Secretary of State in London is merely a provisional payment which he recovers out of the profits in India.

1. (1926) 12 Taxes Cases 111.

2. (1922) I.L.R. 49 Cal. 815; 1 I.T.C. 178.

There are cases arising under the Indian Income-tax Act, which also militate against Mr. Grant's contention. In *Sarupchand Mukumchand v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay*¹, the Bombay High Court had to consider whether S. 4(1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, applied in these circumstances. A company registered in Indore, a Native State, entered into an agreement with a firm in Bombay under which the firm was to open and maintain at the company's expense shops in Bombay and elsewhere for the sale of the company's goods, to keep the books of account in Indore in respect of all sale proceeds and disbursements of the company, to charge a commission of 1½ per cent. on the gross sale proceeds of all cloth and yarn produced by the company, and to pay itself out of the moneys of the company all sums due to it by way of commission or otherwise. The sale proceeds of the Bombay shop were all sent to Indore and the commission was paid there. It was contended that in these circumstances no income accrued or arose in British India, but the contention was rejected and the decision was approved of by the Privy Council in the *Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Chunilal B. Mehta*². In *The Right Rev. C. J. C. Saunders v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, United Province*³, the Allahabad High Court held that a sum of money paid annually in London to the Bishop of Lucknow by the trustees of a certain fund as a gratuitous and unconditional personal allowance of the holder of the Lucknow See was income accruing or arising in British India and assessable as salary under S. 7 (1) of the Act. *V. G. Every*⁴. In the matter of, the Calcutta High Court held that commission earned by an assessee in British India for services rendered there as an employee of a company, which was received by him in the United Kingdom while on leave, was income which had accrued or arisen in British India within the meaning of S. 4 (1).

It is not necessary to carry the discussion any further. There is ample authority in the cases which I have quoted to support the contention of the Income-tax authorities that all the profits of the company accrue or arise in British India and therefore I would answer the question referred in the affirmative. I would add that the Court is not called upon to consider whether the payment in London would constitute profits arising in British India in the event of the working of the undertaking not realizing sufficient to reimburse the Secretary of State at the end of the year, as this situation has not arisen.

Executor—Grant of equitable mortgage to creditor of estate—Undertaking by creditor not to sue for two years—Executor's undertaking to pay interest "in the meantime"—Nature and extent of personal liability of executors on the mortgage—Doctrine of "admission of assets"—Applicability in India.

Where the executors of a will decide for consideration to grant security over an asset belonging to the testator's estate, then, if it is not intended that the executors should assume personal liability for the secured debt, there is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act or in the law of India to make them so liable by reason either that they have granted the security or that they have done so by deposit of the testator's title deeds. On the other hand, where the executors, in granting such security, make promises relating to the payment of interest, it is for them to make clear that their words of promise are not to be taken in the exact sense of a personal covenant. Where a creditor of the estate agrees with the executor to give time for payment of the debt due to him from the estate, it is a question of fact, or of construction of any relevant document, whether the executor is to be regarded as intending to make himself liable for the debt. There is in Indian law no presumption that the executor so intended, although his words of covenant will prima facie be given their ordinary meaning. There is no trace in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the decisions of the Courts in India of any doctrine comparable with the English doctrine of admission of assets. While Indian law places on a legal representative the burden of showing that he has duly applied all assets proved to have come to his hands, it has no bias tending to make him liable to answer with his own property for the debts of the deceased.

The executors of a will granted to one of the creditors of the testator's estate an equitable mortgage by way of deposit of title deeds, the registered memorandum of which provided inter alia that the mortgagee would not sue for the debt for two years and that the executors would "in the meantime pay interest every month . . . at the rate of six per cent. per annum with compound interest at the same rate." The deed recited inter alia that the executors had at the time no cash available for the satisfaction of the debt.

Held that, on the true construction of the memorandum, the executors' promise to pay interest not having been expressly qualified, and having regard to the limited period to which that provision extended and to the circumstances of the transaction, the executors had made themselves liable personally for the interest accruing during those two years, with interest on that interest as provided. Their liability did not, however, extend to the principal of the debt or to interest beyond the two years or until the debt should be repaid.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court, Bombay, dated 28th September, 1937 (Beaumont, C. J. and Blackwell, J.) reversing a judgment of Bailee, J., dated 5th August, 1936.

The facts appear fully from the judgment.

R. F. Roxburgh, K.C. and R. J. T. Gibson for Appellant.—Clearly the three possibilities are that the executors are fully liable for both principal and interest; that they are liable for neither; or that they are liable for interest either until the debt is repaid or for the period of two years from the date of the memorandum. The liability whatever it may be held to be, can be fixed on the executors either because they have agreed to pay or on the basis that they have made an admission of assets, for there is every indication that the doctrine of English law of the admission of assets is applicable also in India. It is only necessary to saddle the executors with liability that they should have made a statement about the testator's assets which amounts to an admission of assets. Moreover, the executors can be saddled with personal liability to repay the principal itself of the debt by reason only of their liability in respect of interest, for the obligation which they have undertaken in the mortgage memorandum in respect of interest differs from the original obligation of the testator in that he was never liable for compound interest. There again, admission of assets is arrived at through the different undertakings by the executors, with consequent personal liability also for the principal. *Bradley v. Heath*¹ and *Childs v. Monjins*².

To examine the provisions of the memorandum more closely, it is submitted that the fact that a mortgage imports a covenant to pay, coupled with the expression for repayment of the principal at any time within two years to be selected by the executors, imports as a matter of construction a covenant by the executors themselves to pay at or before the end of that period. The suspension of remedy with the promise to pay together constituted an admission of assets by the executors and a consequent assumption of personal liability by them. With regard to interest alone, the words in the memorandum relating specially to that matter aptly express a personal covenant to pay the interest. They cannot be explained away as a mere fixing of dates.

Sir T. Strangman, K.C. and S. P. Khambatta for Respondents.—We submit not only that the appellant's construction of the memorandum is incorrect, but further that, assuming them to be right in their argument that the executors have saddled themselves with personal liability in respect of interest, it is not established that by virtue of the provision for payment of compound interest they have by way of admission of assets saddled themselves with personal liability to repay the whole debt and the doctrine of admission of assets forms no part of the law of India, and there is no principle on which the executors could possibly be held liable for more than the interest for the material two-year period.

Sir George
 Rankin.

SIR GEORGE RANKIN.—This is an appeal by the representatives of the original plaintiff in a suit to enforce a mortgage by deposit of title deeds. The suit was brought on the Original Side of the High Court of Bombay on 7th January, 1936, by an old lady named Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh. Her daughter Meherbai had married one Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden, father of the defendants. Byramji had died on 26th October, 1924, leaving a will whereby he had appointed the defendants, his four elder sons, to be his executors. Probate had been granted to them in 1925.

By his will dated 6th October, 1922 (codicil of 19th August, 1924), Byramji declared (cl. 11) that his immovable properties were generally mortgaged and that it would take a long time before they could be sold at the best price after paying the mortgage debts. He accordingly authorised his executors to postpone the sale for any period not exceeding five years from the date of his death. He referred (cl. 12) to the fact that Bai Jaiji (the plaintiff) and a number of other persons held his promissory notes, stating that he ordinarily renewed them yearly or at longer intervals and paid them interest monthly or at times at longer intervals. He directed that the amount due to these creditors should be paid with interest by his executors and he authorised his executors to renew these notes with interest. After making provision for his daughters, for a fifth son named Rustomji and for certain other persons, he directed that at the end of seven years after his death the residue of his property should be divided into four equal parts, each part to be held in trust for one of his four elder sons (the present defendants-respondents) for life and on such son's death for his children.

At his death the estate of Byramji, which consisted mainly of shares in companies and immovable properties in Bombay, was valued by the Collector for the purposes of the duty payable on obtaining probate at about 8½ lacs of rupees and the debts of Byramji were returned at about 6 lacs. The debt due to Bai Jaiji was entered as amounting to Rs. 25,780 for principal and Rs. 620 for interest. That the solvency of the estate would depend entirely upon the condition of the property market in Bombay has at all times been plain and after the death of Byramji his executors found it difficult to realise his properties. By 1928 the fifth son, Rustomji, was threatening steps to realise the sum of Rs. 50,000 which had been settled upon him by his father's will and in this year several mortgages were given by the executors over immovable properties of the estate to creditors of the testator. In particular, on the 10th August, 1928, an equitable mortgage by deposit of title deeds was given to Bai Jaiji and the registered memorandum set forth the terms thereof as follows:—

"Memorandum of Agreement made and entered into at Bombay this 10th day of August, 1928, between Sorabji Byramji Warden, Hirjibhoy Byramji Warden, Jamshedji Byramji Warden and Pestonji Byramji Warden all the four of Bombay, Parsi Inhabitants, Executors and Trustees of the last Will and Testament of the late Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden of the one part and Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh of Bombay, Parsi Inhabitant of the other part. WHEREAS the said Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden, was during his lifetime indebted to the said Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh in a certain sum, which with interest up to date exceeds the sum of Rs. 30,000 AND WHEREAS the said Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden, died in October, 1924, leaving a Will dated 6th October, 1922, Probate, whereof has been issued by the High Court of Bombay in its testamentary Jurisdiction to the said Sorabji, Hirjibhoy, Jamshedji and Pestonji, the sons of the said Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden, and Executors and Trustees of the said Will AND WHEREAS the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh, has called upon the Executors to pay off the debt due to her by the estate and in default, threatened to proceed further in a Court of Law, and the Executors having at present no cash available for the satisfaction of the said debt, offered to give security to the extent of Rs. 30,000 by giving an Equitable Mortgage of the right, title and interest of the said Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden in the immovable properties described in the Schedule A, B and C hereto by depositing their respective title-deeds described in the Schedules D, E and F which the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh, the Creditor, has agreed to accept and not to sue, till such time not exceeding two years as the depression in the property market in the opinion of the Mortgagors passes off, AND WHEREAS the said Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden was entitled to the entirety of the immovable properties in the Schedules A and B and to a half share in the immovable property described in the Schedule C hereto, NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED that the deeds and documents specified in the Schedules D, E and F relating respectively to the immovable properties described in the Schedules A, B and C have this day been deposited by the said Sorabji Byramji Warden, Hirjibhoy Byramji Warden, Jamshedji Byramji Warden and Pestonji Byramji Warden, with the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh with intent to create an Equitable mortgage upon the said immovable properties for securing to her the said Jaiji repayment with interest of the sum of Rs. 30,000 (Thirty thousand) this day due to her by the estate of the said Deceased Byramji Hirjibhoy Warden, represented by the Executors of his Will the said Sorabji, Hirjibhoy, Jamshedji and Pestonji, such sum to be repayable at any time within two years from the date hereof, such time to be selected by the said Executors and that they will in the meantime pay interest every month on the first day of each English month at the rate of six per cent. per annum with compound interest at the same rate with quarterly rests on all arrears of interest not paid on the due date, AND IT IS HEREBY FURTHER AGREED that the said sum of Rs. 30,000 is repayable in Bombay, and until so repaid with interest as aforesaid, the said deeds and documents and the respective properties to which they relate will be held by the said Bai Jaiji Hirjibhoy Parekh as an equitable security and that the executors will, if so require by the said Jaiji, insure the structures on the lands comprised in the said security in a sum not exceeding Rs. 30,000 at the costs of the executors."

Having received no payment whether on account of principal or interest, Bai Jaiji brought her suit as already mentioned on 7th January, 1936. She asked for the usual preliminary decree for sale but added a claim that if the proceeds of sale should be insufficient, the defendants be held personally liable to make up the deficiency, contending that by the memorandum of 10th August, 1928, the defendants had made themselves personally liable for the repayment of the principal sum of Rs. 30,000 and interest thereon. This was a very proper question to be decided at the trial. Barlee, J., as trial Judge found against the defendants both as regards principal and interest, proceeding on the view that an executor must perform a promise made by him as executor de bonis propriis unless he has expressly excluded his own liability and that this he does not do by the mere use of the word executor. By his preliminary decree (5th August, 1936), he gave liberty to the plaintiff to apply for a personal decree against the defendants in the event of the net sale proceeds being insufficient to satisfy in full the plaintiff's claim for principal, interest and costs. While the defendants' appeal to an Appellate Bench was pending, Bai Jaiji died on 25th December, 1936, and the executors of her will (the present appellants) were substituted in her stead. At the hearing of the appeal, Beaumont, C.J. and Blackwell, J., construed the memorandum as imposing no personal liability on the defendants. Their decree dated 28th September, 1937, negatived the plaintiff's right to apply for a personal decree against the defendants but gave liberty to the plaintiff to lodge a claim for any deficiency against the estate of Byramji but without prejudice to any question whether such claim was maintainable.

The evidence called at the trial has little bearing upon the true construction of the memorandum of 10th August, 1928. The second defendant, Hirjibhai, who appears to have been the most active of the executors, gave evidence that he had advanced some money for paying off debts of the estate, that several creditors had been paid off chiefly out of monies of the estate, that some legacies had been paid out of monies advanced by him including a legacy left to one of his sisters which was paid on her marriage. He stated that the promissory notes held by Bai Jaiji carried interest at 6 per cent. with quarterly rests and that these had been handed over to him at the time of the mortgage transaction of 10th August, 1928, and destroyed. He admitted that the income of the property in suit was collected by him after the granting of the mortgage on 10th August, 1928, just as before. His evidence is that whatever might have been thought possible at the date of his father's death in 1924, by 1928 he had no longer any hopes of taking anything by the residuary legacy, since the utmost that could then be expected was that the debts of the estate might be cleared if land values improved. The only other witness called by the defendants was the solicitor who drew up the memorandum of 10th August, 1928. He stated that he did so on the instructions of the second defendant who wanted to protect his grandmother, but that he did not himself see or consult the lady nor were any instructions taken by him from her though the second defendant was in communication with her throughout. Jaiji herself gave evidence giving her age as 90 years: she said that Byramji had paid her the interest in his lifetime but that after his death the second defendant had not done so in spite of demands but had asked her to wait two years. She denied that she had handed over to him the promissory notes.

Before the Board Mr. Roxburgh, for the appellants, in a clear and careful argument, examined separately three possible answers to the question whether the defendants had rendered themselves personally liable to Bai Jaiji, (1) that they were so liable both for principal and interest; (2) that they were so liable for interest alone either (a) for two years from the date of the memorandum, or (b) until repayment; (3) they were not so liable at all. In the High Court the learned trial Judge had taken the first view and the Appellate Bench the third: their Lordships agree, however, that the second must be carefully considered. It was further contended for the appellants that personal liability might be brought home to the defendants either on the footing that they have agreed to pay or on the footing that they have admitted assets. Upon the second of these alternatives it was suggested that the learned Judges in India do not seem to have disputed the applicability of the principles of English law and that the English decisions, some of which were followed by Barlee, J., are particularly strong to the effect that an executor may incur liability by making a statement about the assets of the testator which amounts to an admission of assets. Their Lordships, however, for reasons which will be indicated later in this judgment, are not prepared to give unqualified adherence to the view that English law as to admission of assets is law in India either within or outside of the Presidency towns.

In the present case it is to be observed that in the plaint the personal liability of the defendants was put entirely upon the memorandum of 10th August, 1928. It was not pleaded that the defendants had become liable by reason of any admission of assets dehors the memorandum whether by conduct or by words. Indeed admission of assets as distinct from agreement to pay personally was not in the plaint put forward as a ground of claim at all. In these circumstances while the memorandum must be given its true effect in law, it is not open to the appellants, for the purposes of this appeal, to rely on statements made in evidence by the second defendant as to his sister's legacy having been paid or other creditors having been paid or having been given security. If however, the appellants should at any time get judgment against the defendants for any sum to be realised out of the assets of the testator, it may be that in execution proceedings it will still be open to them on the basis of some such facts to make a case (under sub-S. (2) of S. 52 of the Code) that the defendants have not duly applied all the assets which came to their hands.

The only matter upon this appeal is the nature and extent of the liability incurred by the defendants under the memorandum of 10th August, 1928. The defendants are in the opening words described as executors and trustees of the will of Byramji. The recitals do not contain any details of the debt due from Byramji's estate. The dates of the loans, the rate of interest, the sums outstanding for principal and for interest are not given: all that is said is that up to date the debt exceeds Rs. 30,000. The recitals do, however, purport to disclose in terms that the executors had no cash available wherewith to pay the debt, that their only prospect of paying depended on the state of the property market which was at that time depressed, and that they were giving security in order to gain two years time. There is here no suggestion that the defendants as executors had been in default in any way or were admitting that they had assets out of which they might and should have paid. Their offer to Bai Jaiji as recited is an offer to give her security for the testator's debt to the extent of Rs. 30,000 by equitable mortgage of the right, title and interest of the testator. Though the second defendant deposed that the debt originally carried interest at six per cent. with quarterly rests, the learned trial Judge was not prepared to believe that compound interest was payable at all, the promissory notes having been destroyed. But the way in which the debt is recited in this memorandum without any distinction between what was then due for principal and interest is, in their Lordships' opinion, some corroboration of the defendant on this point and there is no contradiction by Bai Jaiji. Their Lordships find it very difficult to make any inference against the defendants on the ground that the original terms as to interest were varied by the memorandum—a contention which seems to them to be unproved.

 Rankin.

The operative clause of the memorandum begins by creating an equitable mortgage upon the properties for securing to Bai Jaiji repayment with interest of the sum of Rs. 30,000 then due to her by the estate of Byramji represented by the executors of his will. This is followed first by a clause—"such sum to be repayable at any time within two years from the date hereof such time to be selected by the said executors"—which is no more than a way of saying that it was not to be demandable for two years. Then comes the interest clause (so to call it): "that they (the said executors) will in the meantime pay interest every month on the first day of each English month at the rate of six per cent. per annum with compound interest at the same rate with quarterly rests on all arrears of interest not paid on the due date."

By S. 58, cl. (a), of the Transfer of Property Act, it is clear that a mortgage may be given as security not merely for money lent but for any debt or liability. If the executors of a deceased debtor think fit for consideration to give security over an asset belonging to his estate to one of his creditors in respect of a debt due from the estate, the transaction may or may not be one to which other creditors or persons can take exception. But if it is not intended that the executors should assume personal liability for the secured debt there is nothing in the Transfer of Property Act or in the law of India to make them so liable by reason that they have granted the security or by reason that they have done so by deposit of the testator's deeds. Apart from the clause as to interest, which calls for a separate discussion, the memorandum contains no covenant by anyone to repay the principal sum of Rs. 30,000, no statement that the executors would assume personal liability for it, no representation or admission to the creditor as to the sufficiency of the testator's assets to meet either the original debt or the sum of Rs. 30,000.

There is, however, a covenant to pay interest on the sum of Rs. 30,000. This is not itself qualified by any phrase to the effect that they agree "as executors" to pay it or that they are to pay it out of the assets of the testator. Nor is there any other specific expression directed to distinguish between a simple promise by the defendants to pay and a promise by the defendants, for themselves and their successors in office, to pay upon condition that the assets of the testator should permit of the payment being made thereout. The question arises whether such a qualification can be derived from the context, and on this point much depends upon the period in respect of which the promise to pay interest is made. Their Lordships think it to be reasonably plain that the words "in the meantime" have reference to the period of two years or less referred to in the words immediately preceding and that they cannot be extended to cover the whole period that might elapse between the date of the memorandum and the actual payment of Rs. 30,000 to Bai Jaiji. The defendants were to continue to collect the rents of the mortgaged property and might very reasonably have been expected, for the two years during which she gave up her right to recover her money, to see that the interest was paid to her. The recitals as to her having made demands must be taken against the defendants and it seems unreasonable to doubt that the lady would feel the loss of this portion of her income. On the other hand the clause is the only covenant to pay interest and the only part of the memorandum in which any specific rate of interest is mentioned. It is expressed in language which is common form in Indian mortgages which not infrequently, as the reports show, provide expressly for the payment of interest up to the "due date" of the mortgage but omit to make provision for any subsequent period. The last clause, however, makes the property a security for the interest as well as the principal until repayment. The learned Judges of the Appellate Bench considered that the covenant to pay interest was to be read with the reference to interest in the previous part of the same clause and merely specified the interest already referred to. The question is by no means free from difficulty, but upon a careful consideration of the clause their Lordships think, the promise not having been expressly qualified, that in the context there is not enough to show that the promise was intended as conditional upon the sufficiency of the testator's assets having regard to the limited period of time (two years) to which it extends and the circumstances of the transaction.

It is to be noticed that the executors had not been paying the interest and that apparently the estate was without sufficient cash even to ensure that the interest would be regularly paid. The rate is not expressly stated to be the same rate as applied to the original debt even if it was so in fact. Their Lordships do not think that they will be applying to this Indian case a technical or unjust rule if they hold that it was for the executors to make clear that their words of promise were not to be taken in the direct and simple sense of a personal covenant, and that on a true construction of this memorandum they have made themselves personally liable for the interest which accrued during the two years with, of course, interest thereon.

It was contended for the appellants that if it be found that the defendants had made themselves personally liable to pay any interest, this finding would involve a liability on their part in respect of the whole of the debt both principal and interest, at all events if the obligation which they undertook differs in any way from the original obligation of the testator. It was said that the sum of Rs. 30,000 was only a part of the testator's debt and that the testator was not shown to have been liable for compound interest. Hence, on the facts of the present case, the principle was invoked that a promise by an executor to pay interest differing in any particular from the testator's own obligation involves admission of assets and renders the executor personally liable for principal also. As authority for this proposition, reference was made to *Bradley v. Heath*¹ and *Childs v. Monins*², Williams on Executors, 12th Ed., Vol. II, pp. 1164-5.

These were both cases in which executors appear to have qualified their promise to pay the testator's debt by the words "as executors" and yet were held personally liable on the construction of the instrument as a whole upon the ground that they promised to pay in the future with interest for which the testator was not liable. In *Bradley's case*¹ the matter was entangled with further debts incurred by the executors to the creditor after the testator's death. In *Childs' case*² the instrument was a promissory note, the promise was joint and several and was to pay on demand. These cases disclose reasons why the words "as executor" will not in all circumstances be sufficient to show that the payment is only to be made "out of the estate".

In India as in England it is open to an executor in consideration that a creditor of his testator will forbear to sue to make himself liable for the debt whether the assets of the testator be sufficient or insufficient. The forbearance will be consideration to support the promise. It may even be that where there is an agreement by the creditor to give time, the executor will readily be regarded as intending to make himself personally liable. This must, however, in all cases be a question either of fact (what the agreement was) or of construction, if the agreement was reduced to writing: though their Lordships know of nothing in the law of India which warrants any presumption against the executor in this regard, his words of covenant will prima facie be given their ordinary meaning. If the truth be that the executor has obtained time not by promising that he would pay but by granting to the creditor a mortgage or charge over assets of the testator in respect of the debt or part of the debt, there is no rule of Indian law which alters or enlarges the agreement of the parties. And if it be, as in the present case, part of that agreement that the executor shall assume liability for the interest alone and that only for a defined period, to impose a liability for the whole of the debt would be all the more pointedly, in conflict with the intention of the parties. It is good sense to infer when a person makes himself liable indefinitely for the interest on a debt that he means to assume liability for the principal since if the debt be never paid the interest would run for ever. It is also true that the mere agreement that interest shall be paid shows forbearance by the creditor. Such considerations throw light upon the intention of the parties but they do not otherwise impose liability upon executors. If the realisation of a testator's estate is a matter of difficulty and if it be thought of benefit to the estate that a creditor should be induced to give time for payment of his debt, there may be every reason why the executor should seek to make an arrangement for time on payment of enhanced interest or on other special terms entirely at the expense of the estate and without risk to himself. The question is whether he has done so: to what has the creditor agreed? This is more safely answered by an Indian Court upon a direct view of the circumstances of the case, the character of the document, if any, and its language fairly taken as a whole, than through the refracting medium of decisions given in another country one hundred years before.

1. (1830) 3 Simon 543: 57 E.R. 1104.

2. (1821) 2 Br. & Bing. 460: 129 E.R. 1044.

It is maintained, however, that by admission of assets the executor has incurred personal liability without entering into a contract to pay personally or even after entering into a contract under which the creditor's right to payment is conditional upon the sufficiency of the assets. On the terms of the memorandum in the present case, which their Lordships have now construed, it is not possible to suggest that the executors were representing, affirming or admitting that the assets would be sufficient to meet the debt or the sum of Rs. 30,000. On the contrary they gave plain warning that everything would depend upon the future of land values in Bombay.

As English cases have been cited in the High Court and before the Board upon the subject of "admission of assets" their Lordships think right to notice that the English cases require to be interpreted with reference to their setting or background in English law. In Williams on Executors—the well-recognised repository of learning on this subject—the scheme of the English law and the conditions upon which judgment could be recovered de bonis testatoris or de bonis propriis are described (cf. 12th Ed., 1930, Vol. II, pp. 1166, 1240, 1293-6) and it will be sufficient here to refer to them in a summary manner. If an executor was sued for the debt of his testator and had not assets to satisfy the debt, he had to take care to plead plene administravit or plene administravit praeter: otherwise judgment for the plaintiff amounted to a conclusive admission that he had assets to satisfy it. Where this plea was taken the burden was on the plaintiff to show that assets existed or ought to have existed in the hands of the defendant at the date of the writ but this burden might be discharged by proof of some conduct of the defendant amounting to admission of assets. In an administration action such admission entitled the plaintiff to an immediate order for payment without taking the accounts. Indeed the general rule was that admission of assets to one claimant on them was an admission to all: also that an admission of assets can never be retracted unless a case of mistake be clearly established. To charge an executor on his own promise to pay the debt of the testator, in addition to the writing required by the Statute of Frauds, it was necessary to show consideration for the promise. Clearly enough, forbearance by the creditor to sue would be good consideration, but there were also decisions to the effect that assets come to the hands of the executor were consideration and that if admission of assets was implied by the promise, the promise was binding.

The Indian system of recovering debts due from a person deceased is different in important respects. In the first place the legal representative who is liable to be sued is not in general an executor or administrator at all but the Mahomedan heir or the Hindu son or a mere intermeddler with the deceased's estate as is now made clear by S. 2 (11) of the Civil Procedure Code. The form of judgment given for the debt against the legal representative is for payment out of the property of the deceased. If no such property remains in the hands of the defendant, execution can be had against his own property on proof that property of the deceased had come into his possession, unless he proves that he has duly applied such property of the deceased. The Court executing the decree will require him to produce accounts as necessary (Ss. 50, 52). If the legal representative has wrongly applied part of the assets of the deceased he may be made liable in such proceedings to the creditor: his right being to get credit only for what has been "duly disposed of" or "duly applied". But there is no trace in the Code or, so far as their Lordships are aware, in the decisions of Indian Courts, of any doctrine comparable to the English doctrine as to admission of assets. If he has paid a small legacy when the assets are insufficient to meet the debts, the legal representative may fail to get credit for the money wrongly spent but that is all. He will not render himself liable by an admission as though it were an estoppel; though he must like anyone else fulfil his promises and make good his representations (cf. S. 115, Indian Evidence Act). The law of India puts upon a legal representative the full burden of showing that he has duly applied all assets proved to have come to his hands but it has no bias tending to make a legal representative liable to answer with his own property for the debts of the deceased, even if it be true that he knows better than the creditor the position of the deceased's estate. That "assets come to his hands" is consideration for a personal promise to pay the debt of the deceased is a doctrine to which it is difficult to give a meaning under the Indian Contract Act, but (as has already been indicated) forbearance to sue is consideration as to which there is no difficulty provided it is in fact agreed; though the counter-consideration given by an executor is not necessarily an unqualified promise to pay the debt.

Having construed the memorandum of 10th August, 1928, as imposing personal liability upon the defendants in respect only of the interest accruing during the ensuing two years with interest thereon as therein provided, their Lordships are of opinion that there should be added to the preliminary decree for sale as it now stands an order that the appellants be at liberty to apply, in the event of the net sale proceeds proving insufficient to satisfy in full the principal sum and interest and costs and interest on costs due on the security of the equitable mortgage of 10th August, 1928, for a personal decree against the defendants for the interest or the balance thereof as the case may be due in respect of the period of two years from the 10th August, 1928, at 6 per centum per annum with interest thereon at the same rate with quarterly rests.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. They do not find it necessary to disturb the orders for costs made by the High Court on appeal. As the appeal succeeds only upon the question of two years' interest and fails as regards the principal and further interest, their Lordships do not think fit to award any costs of this appeal to the appellants and direct that the appellants pay to the respondents half their costs of this appeal.

* P. C. Appeal No. 23 of 1939.

15th March, 1940.

Importers having imported into British India a consignment of betel-nuts, the customs authorities levied duty on them on a tariff value. The importers appealed, contending that the goods should be assessed at a lower rate, namely, as raw betel-nuts subject to duty ad valorem. The Collector of Customs dismissed the appeal, the Government of India affirming his decision. The importers having brought an action against the Collector to recover the amount of duty which they alleged to have been overpaid.

Held, that the Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

Quære, whether the importers would have been entitled to resort to the Civil Courts before appealing under S. 188 or were confined to the right of appeal given by that section.

Appeal from a decision of the High Court, Madras, in its civil appellate jurisdiction, dated 2nd February, 1938 (Varadachariar and Pandrang Row, JJ.) reversing a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore.

The facts and arguments clearly appear from the judgment.

LORD THANKERTON.—The sole question for determination in this appeal is as to the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain the suit. The appeal is taken from a judgment and order of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 2nd February, 1938, which set aside a decree of the Subordinate Judge at Cuddalore, dated the 30th March, 1937 (which had dismissed the respondents' suit on the ground of want of jurisdiction), and directed the Subordinate Judge to restore the suit to the file and to dispose of it on the merits.

The respondents are a firm of merchants, having their head office at Panruti in the Province of Madras, and, in the course of their business, they import betel-nuts from Java into British India. The facts in the present suit, which was filed by the respondents on the 10th April, 1934, are not materially in dispute. The suit relates to two consignments of betel-nuts, imported by the respondents in December, 1932, from Java to Pondicherry by sea, and thereafter by rail to Panruti. These consignments, which originally consisted of 3,927 bags in all, were repacked at the Port of Pondicherry, owing to damage to the gunnies, into 4,063 bags, before importation into British India. The consignments were imported into the Province of Madras by rail and carts from Pondicherry to Panruti by various instalments, the first of which consisted of 1,000 bags imported through the Customs station at Pondicherry on the 31st December, 1932.

The remaining bags were imported in several instalments in the months of February, March and November, 1933, through the Customs Stations at Pondicherry and Madalapat.

It appears that, prior to this occasion, the respondents had been in the habit of importing their betel-nuts at the port of Cuddalore in the Province of Madras, but, in the beginning of the year 1932, the Customs Collector at that port had assessed a similar consignment of 3,605 bags as boiled betel-nuts subject to duty on a tariff value, contrary to the respondents' contention that they should be assessed as raw betel-nuts, subject to duty ad valorem. In the hope that they might achieve an assessment in accordance with their contention, the respondents altered their place of importation in the case of the consignments here in question, but their disappointment in that respect has given rise to the present suit, in which they seek to challenge the adverse decision in a civil suit.

On the arrival of the consignments at Pondicherry, the respondents wrote on the 27th December, 1932, to the Collector of Customs, Madras, asking to be allowed to import the goods as raw sliced betel-nuts and not as boiled. As they anticipated an increase in the ad valorem duty to come into effect at the beginning of 1933, they requested a telegraphic reply, which they received on the 29th December, 1932, saying, "If you desire import before January first you must import goods and deposit duty calculated on higher tariff value Inspector will at time of taking deposit and passing goods take sealed samples for test and will also deliver to you other sealed samples to enable you appeal if necessary." The respondents thereupon imported 1,000 bags on the 31st December, 1932, and paid the higher duty under protest to the Assistant Inspector of Customs at Pondicherry Railway Chauki, samples being duly taken. After examination of the samples, the Assistant Collector of Customs, Madras, wrote to the respondents on the 28th February, 1933, as follows:—

"I have to state that on examination of the samples from the consignment in question, it has been found that the betel-nuts imported are 'boiled'. The 1,000 bags cleared on 31st December, 1932, are therefore assessable at 37½ per cent. on a tariff valuation of Rs. 23 per cwt. and the remaining bags, if cleared, will be liable to duty at 45 per cent. on a tariff value of Rs. 16 per cwt."

An appeal by the respondents against this decision was dismissed by the Collector of Customs on the 20th June, 1932.

The matter was taken to the Government of India in revision, but by their order dated the 13th August, 1933, the Government of India confirmed the Collector's decision. The present suit was filed on the 10th April, 1934.

In the suit the respondents seek to recover the excess amount collected from them by levying duty upon a tariff value of Rs. 23 per cwt. upon 1,000 bags and of Rs. 16 per cwt. upon the remainder, viz., 3,063 bags instead of levying duty upon the invoice value of Rs. 10-9-1 per cwt. In paragraph 14 of the plaint they state that the cause of action arose on the 18th August, 1933, when their petition for revision to the Government of India was thrown out. Various issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge, but it was decided to determine in the first instance Issue No. 3—"Has this Court no jurisdiction to entertain this suit and is the suit barred by the provisions of the Sea Customs Act?" By a judgment delivered on the 30th March, 1937, the Subordinate Judge held that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit and dismissed the suit. An appeal was allowed by the High Court on the 2nd February, 1938, and the Subordinate Judge was directed to proceed to dispose of the suit on the merits. This appeal is from that decision.

While the imposition of the duties here in question is regulated by the Land Customs Act (Act XIX of 1924), the matter in issue arises under certain provisions of the Sea Customs Act, (Act VIII of 1878) which are incorporated, subject to the necessary verbal modifications, by S. 9 of the Land Customs Act and the schedule to the Act. The sections of the Sea Customs Act which are material are contained in Chapter XVII of the Act, which is headed "Procedure relating to offences, appeals, etc.", and which includes Ss. 169 to 193. The material sections are as follows:—

"182. In every case, except those mentioned in S. 167, Nos. 26, 72 and 74 to 76 both inclusive, in which, under this Act, anything is liable to confiscation or to increased rates of duty;

188. Any person deeming himself aggrieved by any decision or order passed by an officer of Customs under this Act may, within three months from the date of such decision or order, appeal therefrom to the Chief Customs Authority, or, in such cases as the Local Government directs, to any officer of Customs not inferior in rank to a Customs-Collector and empowered in that behalf by name or in virtue of his office by the Local Government.

Such authority or officer may thereupon make such further enquiry and pass such order as he thinks fit, confirming, altering or annulling the decision or order appealed against:

Provided that no such order in appeal shall have the effect of subjecting any person to any greater confiscation, penalty or rate of duty than has been adjudged against him in the original decision or order.

Every order passed in appeal under this section shall, subject to the power of revision conferred by S. 191, be final.

189. Where the decision or order appealed against relates to any duty or penalty leviable in respect of any goods, the owner of such goods, if desirous of appealing against such decision or order, shall, pending the appeal, deposit in the hands of the Customs-Collector at the port where the dispute arises the amount demanded by the officer passing such decision or order.

When delivery of such goods to the owner thereof is withheld merely by reason of such amount not being paid, the Customs-Collector shall upon such deposit being made, cause such goods to be delivered to such owner.

If upon any such appeal it is decided that the whole or any portion of such amount was not leviable in respect of such goods, the Customs-Collector shall return such amount or portion (as the case may be) to the owner of such goods on demand by such owner.

190. If, upon consideration of the circumstances under which any penalty, increased rate of duty or confiscation has been adjudged under this Act by an officer of Customs, the Chief-Authority is of opinion that such penalty, increased rate or confiscation ought to be remitted in whole or in part, or commuted, such Authority may remit the same or any portion thereof, or may, with the consent of the owner of any goods ordered to be confiscated, commute the order of confiscation to a penalty not exceeding the value of such goods.

191. The Local Government may, on the application of any person aggrieved by any decision or order passed under this Act by any officer of Customs or Chief Customs-Authority, and from which no appeal lies, reverse or modify such decision.

193. When a penalty or increased rate of duty is adjudged against any person under this Act, such officer, if such penalty or increased rate be not paid, may levy the same by sale of any goods of the said person which may be in his charge, or in the charge of any other officer of Customs"

Under S. 9 of the Land Customs Act, references to a Chief Customs Officer in the Sea Customs Act are to be deemed to refer to a Collector of Land Customs, references to a Customs Collector to a Lands Customs Officer, and references to Officers of Customs to Collectors of Land Customs or Land Customs Officers. Further, by S. 4 of the Central Board of Revenue Act (Act IV of 1924), the Governor-General in Council was substituted for the Local Government in S. 191 of the Sea Customs Act.

At the hearing before the Board, the appellant maintained that the decision of the Assistant Collector of Customs, dated the 28th February, 1933, was a "decision or order passed by an officer of Customs" within the meaning of S. 188 of the Sea Customs Act, and that the decision of the Collector of Customs on appeal therefrom, dated the 20th June, 1933, which had been confirmed on revision under S. 191, was final, and excluded the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. He maintained that the only right of challenge of a decision or order by an officer of Customs was by an appeal under S. 188 and that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts was excluded. Alternatively, he maintained that the right of appeal conferred by S. 188 constituted a procedure which was alternative to procedure in the Civil Courts, and that as the respondents, in their option, had chosen to proceed under S. 188, they were bound by that election, and were thus excluded from resort to the civil courts.

There can be little doubt that adjudications as to confiscations, increased rates of duty or penalties made under the power conferred by S. 182 are decisions or orders within the meaning of S. 188, and the appellant submitted in the first place that the decision of the Assistant Collector in the present case was an adjudication as to increased rate of duty under S. 182. In their Lordships' opinion this contention is untenable, as the decision was as to the normal rate of duty, whereas an increased rate of duty connotes something in the nature of a penalty, an illustration of which is to be found in S. 167, No. 35, where goods in excess of the manifest or not corresponding with the specification are liable to confiscation or to be charged with such increased rates of duty as the Chief Officer of Customs directs.

The appellant next maintained that the decision or order referred to in S. 188 was not confined to adjudications under S. 182, but included decisions by an officer of Customs as to the rate of duty applicable to particular goods, which necessarily involved the determination of the particular category in the tariff classification into which the goods fell, and that, accordingly, the decision of the Assistant Collector in this case was a decision or order within the meaning of S. 188. The respondents, on the other hand, maintained that the decisions or orders referred to in S. 188 related only to adjudications under S. 182. This argument of the respondents was not mentioned by the Subordinate Judge, and his judgment does not suggest any doubt of the applicability of S. 188. But it was raised in the High Court, who decided it in favour of the appellant.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court were right in deciding that S. 188 is applicable. The words "decision or order" are wide words, and they appear to be of a more general nature than the adjudications referred to in S. 182, which are also referred to as awards in S. 186. The difference of language in sections which are in such close juxtaposition primarily suggests an intention to cover a wider area in S. 188. It is suggested that the heading of the chapter—"Procedure relating to Offences, Appeals, etc."—rather indicates that the appeals are correlated with the offences. Their Lordships are unable to draw any such inference. The chapter is one relating to procedure and not a chapter relating to offences; indeed, it might be suggested that if the provisions as to appeals were merely part of the procedure relating to offences, there would be no occasion for a separate mention of appeals in the heading. But, in their Lordships' opinion, the heading of the chapter is of no material assistance in the construction of S. 188.

In the next place, the proviso in S. 188, which is limited to adjudications under S. 182, does not, in the opinion of their Lordships, necessarily involve the narrower construction of the opening words of the section. If the latter had expressly referred to any decision or order under S. 182 or any other section in the Act, the proviso would have been drawn in exactly the same terms. But S. 189 uses terms naturally applicable to any duty leviable under any part of the Act.

Their Lordships agree with the High Court that there is no reason for limiting the words "any decision or order passed . . . under this Act" in S. 188 to decisions or orders passed under S. 182. Their Lordships are unable to agree with the somewhat tentative opinion expressed by Sir Charles Innes in Hari Bhanji v. Secretary of State for India,¹ which is referred to by the High Court. That opinion was not relevant to the case before the learned Judge, which related to an illegal levy of duty under the Act of 1863.

The Sea Customs Act, 1878, was passed to consolidate and amend the law relating to the levy of Sea Customs duties which was then regulated by the Consolidated Customs Act (Act VI of 1863), which was repealed by the Act of 1878. If there were any doubt as to the proper construction of S. 188 of the 1878 Act, it would undoubtedly be legitimate to consider the previous law which it was consolidating and amending, and their Lordships desire to add that their view already expressed as to the construction of S. 188 is confirmed by a consideration of the provisions of the Act of 1863. The material provisions of the latter Act are as follows:—

" VI. If any dispute shall arise between any Officer of Customs and any Master or Commander of a vessel, or importer, exporter, owner, or consignee of goods, or agent, or other person, in respect to any matter (not specially provided for by any law for the time being in force) relating to the importation, exportation, or warehousing of any goods, or to the levy of any duty or penalty thereon, or to any seizure or forfeiture thereof, the Chief Customs Authority of the Presidency or place in which such dispute shall have arisen shall settle the same, subject to an appeal to the Local Government, acting under the general instructions of the Governor-General of India in Council.

CLXXXIV. If any dispute shall arise as to the proper rate of Duty payable in respect of any goods imported into, or exported from, any Port in British India, the importer, exporter, owner, or consignee of such goods, or his agent, shall deposit in the hands of the officer in charge of the Custom House at the Port of importation or exportation respectively, the amount of Duty demanded by such Officer, pending the decision of the Chief Customs Authority. Upon payment of such deposit and compliance with the provisions of this Act relating to the entry of such goods, the Officer in charge of the Custom House shall cause the goods to be delivered to such importer, exporter, owner, or consignee, or his agent.

CCXVIII. In every case in which, under this Act, any vessel, cart, or other means of conveyance; or any horse or other animal is liable to confiscation; or any goods are liable to confiscation or to increased rates of Duty; or any person in charge of or owning a vessel, or landing or shipping goods, or passing them through the Custom House, is liable to a penalty, an Officer in charge of a Custom House may, unless it be otherwise provided in this or any other Act relating to the Customs, adjudge such confiscation, penalty, or increased rates of Duty.

CCXX. In any case adjudicated by an Officer of Customs, any party aggrieved by the award may appeal to the Chief Customs Authority of the Presidency or place, or to any superior Officer of Customs empowered in that behalf by the Local Government. It shall thereupon be lawful for such authority or superior Officer to make such further enquiry, and to pass such order as he shall think proper, confirming, altering or annulling the original award. Provided that no such order in appeal shall have the effect of subjecting any person to any greater confiscation, penalty, or rates of Duty than shall have been adjudged against him in the original award.

CCXXI. The award of any confiscation, penalty or increased rates of Duty under this Act by an Officer of Customs shall not interfere with any punishment to which the person affected thereby shall be liable under any other law.

CCXXIII. If, upon consideration of the circumstances under which any penalty or confiscation has been adjudged under this Act, by an Officer of Customs or by a Magistrate, the Chief Customs Authority of the Presidency or place shall be of opinion that such penalty or confiscation ought to be remitted in whole or in part, or commuted, such Chief Customs Authority may remit the same or any portion thereof, or may commute any order of confiscation to a penalty not exceeding the value of the goods ordered to be confiscated."

S. 6 appears under the heading of "General Rules"; S. 184 under "Miscellaneous Provisions"; and the other four sections under "Offences and Penalties". In their Lordships' opinion, it is clear that the provisions of S. 6 and of S. 220 are both now incorporated in S. 188 of the later Act, the subject-matter of the appeal being altered from an "award" to a "decision or order", and the heading of the chapter being altered to "Procedure relating to Offences, Appeals, etc." S. 184 of the 1863 Act is reproduced in S. 189, while S. 221 is reproduced as S. 186 of the 1878 Act, before S. 188, and S. 223 reappears as S. 190 of the later Act.

The decision of the Assistant Collector therefore falls within the terms of S. 188 of the Sea Customs Act of 1878, and the respondents in fact acted on that view, and exercised the right of appeal conferred by that section and by S. 191. It is now necessary to determine whether the order of the Collector of Customs, dated the 20th June, 1933, which dismissed the appeal under S. 188, and which was confirmed by the Governor-General in Council on an application under S. 191, excludes the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain a challenge of the merits of that decision. It is settled law that the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is not to be readily inferred, but that such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. It is also well settled that even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure. Many of the cases referred to in the judgments below are of this nature, and are not relevant to the present case, in which there are no allegations of that nature.

S. 188 provides that "every order passed in appeal under this section shall, subject to the power of revision conferred by S. 191, be final". By Ss. 188 and 191 a precise and self-contained code of appeal is provided in regard to obligations which are created by the statute itself, and it enables the appeal to be carried to the supreme head of the executive government. It is difficult to conceive what further challenge of the order was intended to be excluded other than a challenge in the Civil Courts.

Further, it is to be noted that the same finality clause applies equally to appeals against adjudications under S. 182 and to appeals against decisions or orders as to the rate of duty leviable under the tariff; their Lordships are unable to construe this clause differently according as it applies to these two classes of appeals, as apparently the High Court were prepared to do. In their judgment the High Court refer with approval to the unreported decision of Coutts-Trotter, J., in C. S. No. 747 of 1920, in which he held that the suit, which challenged the adjudication of a fine under S. 182, was barred by S. 188, and the learned Judges add, "We think that the decision in that case is, if we may say so, not open to exception and it does not help the Government in this case, because the Act of the Customs Authorities in that case was an adjudication." Later, the learned Judges rejected the argument that S. 188 only applied to decisions or orders passed by Customs Authorities when acting under S. 182, and held that the opening words of S. 188 were not so limited. Nevertheless, they held, as regards the present case, that the finality clause was not so worded as to exclude the jurisdiction of the civil courts. Their Lordships are unable to agree with this distinction.

Their Lordships are of opinion that in this case the jurisdiction of the civil courts is excluded by the order of the Collector of Customs on the appeal under S. 188, and it is unnecessary to consider whether, prior to taking such appeal under S. 188 the respondents would have been entitled to resort to the civil courts, or whether they would have been confined to the right of appeal under S. 188.

The determination of this question must rest on the terms of the particular statute which is under consideration, and decisions on other statutory provisions are not of material assistance, except in so far as general principles of construction are laid down. The main principles to be observed in the present case are to be found in the well-known judgment of Willes, J., in *Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. v. Hawkesford*¹, which was approved of in the House of Lords in *Neville v. London "Express" Newspaper, Limited*². The question is whether the present case falls under the third class stated by Willes, J., viz., "Where the statute creates a liability not existing at common law, and gives also a particular remedy for enforcing it With respect to that class it has always been held, that the party must adopt the form of remedy given by the statute."

It has been held that the jurisdiction of the civil courts is excluded in three cases in which an appeal under S. 188 had been taken—C. S. No. 747 of 1920, already referred to, *Bhiwandivalla and Company v. Secretary of State*³, which is referred to by the High Court, and *Thin Yen v. Secretary of State for India*⁴. Each of these cases related to an appeal against an adjudication under S. 182. In the case referred to in 71 M.L.J., Notes of Recent Cases, p. 40, Varadachariar, J., held that jurisdiction was not excluded in circumstances similar to the present case, except that there had been no appeal under S. 188, and, for the reasons already explained, their Lordships do not find it necessary to consider the question. Similarly, in the cases of *Vacuum Oil Company v. Secretary of State for India*⁵ and *Ford Motor Company v. Secretary of State*⁶, no appeal had been taken under S. 188; the question of jurisdiction was not in issue, though in the former case an issue had been framed, but it was abandoned by the Advocate-General. It was submitted on behalf of the respondents that an exclusion of the subject's right of resort to the civil courts would be ultra vires of the Indian Legislature in view of the provisions of S. 32 of the Government of India Act, 1915, which re-enacted S. 65 of the Government of India Act of 1858, and reference was made to *Moment's case*⁷, which was a case of tortious trespass on land. But, in their Lordships' opinion, neither S. 32 nor the principle involved in the decision in *Moment's case*⁷ affect the validity of an Act of the Indian Trade marks—Picture of elephant used by plaintiffs on cigarettes or smoking tobacco—Similar picture used by defendants on chewing tobacco—Likelihood of deception of public—Question of fact in each case—Necessity for evidence as to deception or probability of deception.

If a manufacturer of a special kind of smoking tobacco under a trade mark seeks to restrain the use of that mark as for example, cigars, or chewing tobacco, the vital matter is the probability or otherwise of deception resulting from the use complained of and it is a question of fact in each case. It is not a sound test for the Court to compare the plaintiff's and the defendant's marks side by side, since the purchaser will rarely have the two marks before him when he makes his purchase, and in spite of many differences there may be an element of similarity sufficient to cause deception. It is not an answer to the claim of a plaintiff trader who has established a trade mark to say that, apart from the mark, his (the defendant trader's) labels or containers are very different from those of the plaintiff. Differences in the form in which products are put up are, however, not immaterial for they must inevitably form an element in considering the question of the probability of deception through the use of the mark.

The plaintiffs were the manufacturers of smoking tobacco and cigarettes which they marketed under a trade mark the distinguishing feature of which was an elephant in which they had acquired proprietary rights in respect of their cigarettes and tobacco. The plaintiffs' tobacco was well known in India and asked for by members of the public under such names as "Elephant mark tobacco". The cigarettes were known as "Elephant cigarettes". The defendant sold chewing tobacco in tins also designated by an elephant having a certain similarity to the plaintiffs' elephant although different in colour. The defendant's containers were unlike those of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs contended that, having regard to their reputation as makers of smoking tobacco in India, the public would think that the defendant's chewing tobacco was product manufactured by them. No evidence of actual deception of the public was tendered by the plaintiffs, nor any evidence by a member of the public that he would be deceived.

Held, that the question whether or not the defendant's use of his mark would be likely to deceive the public into thinking that the chewing tobacco was manufactured by the plaintiffs was one of fact on which evidence was essential, being a different question from that whether one mark or name was a colourable imitation of another, in considering which the judge had before him the necessary materials for his decision; and that, in the complete absence of evidence on that question the plaintiffs had failed to make out a case for relief against the defendant.

Appeal from a decree of a Division Bench of the High Court, Allahabad, dated 13th March, 1935, in its appellate jurisdiction (Iqbal Ahmad and Niamatullah, JJ., King, J., dissenting) dismissing an appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Cawnpore, who dismissed an action by the plaintiffs, Thomas Bear & Sons (India), Ltd., to restrain alleged infringement of their trade mark rights by the defendant, Prayag Narain.

The plaintiffs were manufacturers and sellers of "Virginia Bird's Eye" tobacco for pipes and of cigarettes. Both articles had since long before 1922 been sold in India in packets and tins bearing a trade mark of which an elephant was the distinguishing feature; and the packets and tins of cigarettes bore also the legend "Elephant Cigarettes." Prayag Narain had been manufacturing and selling chewing tobaccos since 1926, the tobacco being sold in packets and tins also bearing the picture of an elephant not dissimilar to the plaintiffs' elephant. The containers of the defendants' goods were quite different from those used by the plaintiffs. The second respondent, Jagannath, was joined as a respondent as the purchaser from the date of his trade mark, trade-name labels and designs.

The plaintiffs having brought an action to restrain the defendants from infringing their trademark rights, the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dismissed the petition. That decision was upheld on appeal, and the plaintiffs now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

F. E. Bray, K.C. and James Mould for Appellants.—Before elaborating the appellants' contentions it should be made clear that they do not contend that the public are likely to buy the respondent's chewing tobacco thinking it to be the appellants' smoking tobacco and their cigarettes. Moreover it is submitted that to establish that is not necessary to the appellants' case. It is sufficient for them to establish that the public are likely to believe that the goods manufactured and marketed by the respondent are those of the appellants.

It is not conclusive in the respondent's favour that he can point to certain dissimilarities between his elephant and that of the appellants because the actual purchaser, the probability of whose deception is the vital matter, will not have the two marks before him simultaneously. The comparison in the purchaser's mind will take place by recollection, and the question is whether the hypothetical purchaser remembering the one mark, will, on seeing the other, think that they are the same, and consequently that the respondent's goods are the appellants', or vice versa.

The likelihood of deception resulting from the similarity of the two elephants is not dispelled by the presence of the respondent's firm-name, Rama & Co., on his packages, because the large numbers of the illiterate will go by the elephant only. It is submitted that King, J., applied the right test when he said that, since the public associated the elephant brand with the appellant's goods, the question was the psychological one whether seeing a tin of chewing tobacco also bearing the picture of an elephant they would be likely by association to suppose that the chewing tobacco was also manufactured by the appellants. Comparing the two marks it can hardly be doubted that confusion is likely to be caused in the public mind in spite of the obvious dissimilarities. That being so, it is submitted the appellants need go no further, for they have established their case. It is of no avail to the respondent to rely on the dissimilarities between his packages and those of the appellants, for the same manufacturer would be likely to adopt widely differing packages for too very different products while yet marketing both under his trade mark.

The appellants have established their case because, with the marks before them and other evidence, the judges were not in a position to decide where deception of the public would begin or end, and they ought, it is submitted, to have reached the conclusion that the elephant or chewing tobacco will necessarily create an assumption that it was manufactured by the appellants.

There was no appearance by or on behalf of the respondent.

dated the 13th March, 1935. That Court affirmed the decree of the Additional District Judge of Cawnpore in an action brought by the appellants to restrain infringement of trade mark rights and passing-off. At the hearing before their Lordships the respondents were not represented; but the case of the appellants was placed before the Board with equal ability and fairness by their counsel.

The appellants are manufacturers and sellers of cigarettes and of tobacco described as "Virginia Bird's Eye" smoked in pipes. These goods are marketed in a European style. Both the said cigarettes and the tobacco have from a date long before 1922 been sold in India (by the appellants and their predecessors) in packets and in tins bearing a mark the distinguishing feature of which is the representation of an elephant and the packets and tins of cigarettes have also borne the designation "Elephant Cigarettes". Upon the tobacco the representation of the elephant has appeared in red and upon the cigarettes the representation of the elephant has appeared on a red background. These goods were well known and asked for throughout India as "Elephant Mark", "Hathi Markha", "Lal Hathi" and the like.

The defendant has been manufacturing and selling chewing tobacco since 1926, that is, some three years before the action was brought. He sells in packets and in tins. The commodity in the packets is intended for use with chunam (lime), that in the tins for use as an addition to pan (betel). Certain ingredients are added to give fragrance to the article. The tobacco is grown in India. Both the packets and the tins have the picture of an elephant on them, not unlike the elephant used by the plaintiffs though there are differences, particularly in colour, which is black or red as used by the appellants and white as used by the respondent. In other respects the packets and the tins are quite unlike the containers in which the appellants' goods are put upon the market, and the respondent's labels bear the firm name "Rama & Company", while the appellants' goods bear their own name.

The appellants, of course, did not contend that any persons would purchase the respondent's chewing tobacco in the belief that it was smoking tobacco manufactured by the appellants. Their contention was a very different one; they said that having regard to the reputation they had acquired in India in connexion with smoking tobacco and cigarettes sold under the elephant trade mark and frequently asked for as "elephant" tobacco or "elephant" cigarettes, the use of the elephant on the respondent's chewing tobacco was calculated to lead persons buying that article to believe that it was manufactured or put upon the market by the appellants.

There is no statutory law in British India relating to trade marks, and the law which is applied there on the subject is substantially the same as that applied in England before the Trade Marks Act, 1905. It is, however, plain that conditions peculiar to India must be borne in mind in applying any doctrine of English law, and that English decisions which turn or partly turn on questions of fact—as do most cases of common law trade marks and passing-off—can only be applied with care and circumspection. The general principle, founded as it is on justice and equity, is the same in both countries. "No man", as James, L.J., said in the case of *Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Loog*¹, "is entitled to represent his goods as being the goods of another man; and no man is permitted to use any mark, sign or symbol, device or means, whereby without making a direct false representation himself to a purchaser who purchases from him, he enables such purchaser to tell a lie or to make a false representation to somebody else who is the ultimate purchaser."

It is clear that the right of property that may be acquired in such a trade mark is based on the proved association in the market of the device, name, sign, symbol or other means in question with the goods of the plaintiff, so that the use by the defendant on such goods of the trade mark will amount—whether the defendant intends it or knows it or not—to the false representation that the goods are manufactured or put on the market by the plaintiff. There can obviously be no monopoly in the use of the trade mark. A manufacturer of cigarettes under an undoubted trade mark such as an animal, or any other device, cannot legally object to the use of the identical mark on, say, hats, or soap, for the simple reason that purchasers of any of the latter kinds of goods could not reasonably suppose, even if they were well acquainted with the mark as used on cigarettes, that its use on hats or soap denoted that these goods were manufactured or marketed by the cigarette manufacturer

(see Somerville v. Schembrit). Those would be simple cases, but some much more difficult ones can be suggested. If a manufacturer, of a special kind of smoking tobacco under a trade mark seeks to restrain the use of it on cigars, or on a very different kind of smoking tobacco, or on cigarettes, or on snuff, or on chewing tobacco, or on tobacco in some form sold for use as a weed killer—all these things being made of tobacco—questions, sometimes of great difficulty, may arise. It is, however, very important to observe that each of these questions will be a question of fact to be decided on the evidence adduced. The vital element in such a case is the probability of deception. This may depend on a number of matters as well as the question of similarity of the marks or of the get-up. Witnesses can be called to prove the circumstances and the places in which the articles are sold, the classes of persons who buy them, and whether they include persons who are illiterate or ignorant or the reverse, the manner in which the public are accustomed to ask for the articles, and any other matters which will assist the Court to decide whether deception is probable. Evidence of actual deception may be available and if available may be very valuable. There is no such person as an expert in human nature, and it is now well settled that a witness cannot be called to say that it is likely that purchasers of the goods will be deceived. This can only be a matter of opinion formed after the dispute has arisen and too often without any judicial consideration of the opposing contentions. On the other hand a person who is accustomed to buy the articles in question may be called to say that he would himself be deceived, and cross-examination will often show what weight should be attached to such a statement.

It seems desirable to state the views of their Lordships on some of the topics of criticism of the views of the learned Judges which were urged on behalf of the appellants. Their Lordships think that the test of comparison of the marks side by side is not a sound one, since a purchaser will seldom have the two marks actually before him when he makes his purchase; and marks with many differences may yet have an element of similarity which will cause deception, more especially if the goods are in practice asked for by a name which denotes the mark or the device on it. This has been settled in England since the case of *Seixo v. Provesende*¹, where there will be found some remarks by Lord Cranworth, L.C., very relevant to this matter. He also pointed out (at p. 197) that the adoption by a rival trader of a mark which would cause his goods to bear the same name in the market, may be as much a violation of the rights of the first owner as the actual copy of his device. This same view was taken in the case of *Johnston v. Orr Ewing*², a case relating to the use of two elephants on tickets placed upon goods for sale in India. (See as to the effect of the differences between the tickets the remarks of Selborne, L.C., at pp. 224 et seq.) Further, it is not an answer to the claim of a trader who has established, as the appellants have done in the present case, the right to a trade mark (namely a device or a fancy word) to say that, apart from the device or the word, the labels or containers of the rival trade are very different from those of the trade mark owner. It may be observed that, if it were so, such a trade mark would be of little value, for its use by several traders would soon result in its becoming common to the trade. (See Wotherspoon v. Currie,³ and *Johnston v. Orr Ewing*²). In the present case there may well have been persons who knew of the reputation of the appellants' "elephant mark" goods, but were illiterate or did not know or did not remember the particular get-up of their goods; and again the differences of labels and get-up might have been supposed to have been made by the appellants themselves in putting a different or cheaper article upon the market. Their Lordships, however, are not to be understood as saying that the differences in get-up are immaterial; for they must inevitably form an element in considering the question of probability of deception by the use of the mark.

It is a remarkable feature of the present case that there was neither evidence of actual deception, nor any evidence from members of the public that they themselves would be deceived. It is to be observed that the important issue was, not whether the use of the elephant on smoking tobacco or on cigarettes would be likely to cause deception; but whether its use on chewing tobacco in the circumstances in which that article is sold by the respondent would be likely to cause deception.

that is, to cause ordinary purchasers to purchase the chewing tobacco of the respondent in the belief that it was manufactured by or put upon the market by the appellants. The difficulty of answering this question in the affirmative in the absence of evidence as to the probability of deception is apparent from the fact that, apart from the trial Judge, who was not satisfied that there was any point of resemblance between the trade mark used by the appellants and that used by the respondent, King, J., in the High Court alone thought that the probability of deception would exist whilst Iqbal Ahmad, J., took the other view and Niamat Ullah, J. (to whom the matter was referred, under cl. 27 of the Letters Patent of the High Court having regard to the difference of opinion between the two Judges in the High Court) came to the conclusion in his careful judgment that whilst some ignorant and indiscriminating persons might be deceived, persons exercising ordinary caution would not be likely to assume that the chewing tobacco sold by the respondent was manufactured by the appellants.

Their Lordships see no reason to doubt the finding of the trial Judge that the appellants had acquired a proprietary right in respect of their elephant trade mark with reference to their cigarettes and Virginia Bird's Eye tobacco. Nor are they of opinion that the appellants' right is confined only to the sale of the same kind of cigarettes and of Virginia Bird's Eye tobacco; for, in the absence of strong evidence to the contrary, such a mark would ordinarily extend to protect goods so similar in kind to the goods actually put upon the market by the trader in connexion with the trade mark that it is an almost inevitable inference that such goods would be manufactured or marketed by the trader. In other words the probability of deception in the case of goods of a closely similar kind to those actually marketed by the plaintiff would be proved in the course of establishing the trade mark. No such inference could be made in the present case as regards the respondent's goods, since the chewing tobacco he sells differs widely in appearance and in use from the goods sold by the appellants.

Some of the learned Judges in India seem to have taken the view that it was for the Court to decide as to the area of trade protected by the appellants' trade mark, that is, to answer the question whether the use of the trade mark on goods not closely similar in character to the appellants' goods would be likely to deceive. A number of well-known authorities were cited which it was thought would throw light on the correct answer to this question. Their Lordships must repeat that this question is one of fact on which evidence is essential. The question differs from the question whether a particular mark or name is an imitation or a colourable imitation of a mark or name used by the plaintiff. There the Judge has before his eyes the materials for a decision; and in some cases it cannot be doubted that the Judge can himself decide on the degree of resemblance or on the materiality of alleged differences of the marks or words (*North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester Brewery Co.*¹, *Payton & Co., Ltd. v. Snelling, Lampard & Co., Ltd.*², per Lord Macnaghten at p. 635). If the decision of the Court of Appeal in London General Omnibus Co. v. Lavell,³ or some of the dicta in that case are contrary to these decisions, it cannot be relied upon. On the other hand there are many trade mark and passing-off cases which cannot be decided by a visual comparison of the rival marks or names and must depend on the evidence of witnesses. That indeed is nearly always the case when there are factors involved other than the mere resemblance of the marks or words. In the present case a Judge may be entitled to form his own view as to the resemblance of the elephants in shape and colour or on the differences between them; but their Lordships are of opinion that a Judge cannot properly decide except upon evidence as to the classes or kinds of goods which are protected by the appellants' mark, or, to be more precise, on the question whether purchasers of chewing tobacco from the respondent in the packets and tins above described are likely to be misled into thinking that that article is manufactured or put upon the market by the appellants. This question is one which does not depend on a matter of resemblance. As already pointed out, the appellants have no monopoly in the elephant as a trade mark. The English cases may be instructive as showing the way in which such a question should be approached, but the actual decisions depending as they do on what purchasers would be likely to think in England are not a guide in India.

Their Lordships are not disposed to attach much importance to the fact that the appellants were unable to call evidence of actual deception, and they are well aware of the fact that the procuring of evidence of probability of deception is often a difficult and troublesome task. On the other hand the appellants had to establish their case, and in the complete absence of evidence on the point to which attention has been above directed, their Lordships must come to the conclusion that they failed to do so.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 3—Co-operative Central Bank registered under Co-operative Societies Act—Shareholders, individuals and co-operative societies—If the bank an association of individuals under S. 3 of the Indian Income-tax Act—Individual, if means only a person or includes corporations—Business with non-members also—If a mutual benefit society.

Where a co-operative central bank consists of a certain number of shareholders, of whom some are individual persons and the rest co-operative societies, and the Bank does not confine its business to its shareholders but carries on an ordinary banking business as well,

Held, (i) the bank is an association of individuals within the meaning of S 3 of the Income-tax Act and can be assessed to income-tax as such. 'Individual' is not there used as denoting only a person but takes in also a corporate body created by a statute, which is an individual within the meaning of the section.

The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Millowners' Association, I.L.R. (1939) Bom. 451, not followed.

(ii) the bank cannot maintain to be a mutual benefit society inasmuch as it carries on banking business with non-members.

Case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, under S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922) (hereinafter referred to as the Act) is as follows:—

2. The petitioner, the Salem District Urban Bank, Limited (hereinafter referred to as the Bank) is a Co-operative Central Bank registered under the Co-operative Societies Act II of 1912 (Madras Act VI of 1932) carrying on banking business at Salem within the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Salem. The main objects of the Bank are:

(1) collection of funds, for financing co-operative societies registered under the Co-operative Societies Act and affiliated to it,

(2) to develop, assist and co-ordinate the work of the affiliated supervising unions and to secure for them financial help where necessary, and

(3) to undertake such other work as will promote the cause of co-operation in general and to carry out the above objects in particular.

The Bank may also carry on general business of banking not repugnant to the provisions of the Co-operative Societies Act and the rules framed thereunder.

The nominal capital of the Bank is Rs. 3 lakhs made up of 400 shares of Rs. 250 each, termed A class shares, and 4,000 shares of Rs. 50 each, termed B class shares. Any individual can become a member by taking A class shares and any registered society by taking B class shares. The income of the Bank is made up mainly of (1) interest on loans to members, (2) interest on investments, (3) entrance and other fees, and (4) dividends earned, share capital invested in other societies, etc.

3. For the assessment year 1937-38 (previous year ended 30th June 1936) the Bank applied to the Income-tax Officer, Salem, for a refund of the tax deducted at source from the interest on Government Securities held by it. As the Income-tax Officer had information that the Bank had other sources of income assessable to tax he issued a notice under S. 22 (2) calling upon the Bank to make a return of its total income of the previous year. The Bank accordingly filed a return showing an income of Rs. 17,997 for the year ended 30th June 1936. This was made up of the following items:

Interest on taxed securities	..	Rs. 14,500
" " tax-free securities	..	" 5,000
" " mortgages, etc. (loss)	..	" 1,503
Total	..	17,997

After examining the profit and loss statement filed by the Bank the Income-tax Officer determined its total income to be Rs. 37,445 made up of Rs. 5,293 interest on taxed securities, Rs. 1,519 interest on tax-free securities, Rs. 4,009 other sources (interest) the balance of Rs. 26,624 being described as 'co-operative income'. Excluding Rs. 1,519 representing interest on tax-free securities and Rs. 26,624 being profits from co-operative business exempted by Notification issued under S. 60 (1) of the Act from being charged to tax but not exempted from inclusion in the total income the Income-tax Officer worked out the taxable income to be Rs. 9,302 and assessed the Bank on this figure applying the rate of tax appropriate to the total income of Rs. 37,445. The status of the Bank was taken to be that of an association of individuals. A copy of the Income-tax Officer's order is enclosed—Exhibit A.

4. The Bank appealed to the Assistant Commissioner against the assessment contending that it was not an association of individuals as its shareholders consisted of individuals as well as other co-operative societies, that it did not come under any of the classes of assessee mentioned in S. 3 of the Act, and that, in any case, it was a mutual benefit concern and therefore the income derived from its own members was outside the scope of the Act altogether. The Assistant Commissioner overruled these contentions and confirmed the assessment made by the Income-tax Officer. A copy of his order is appended marked Exhibit B.

5. In its present application under Ss. 66(2) and 33 the Bank raises the same contentions urged before the Assistant Commissioner and also some other contentions not raised before the Assistant Commissioner on appeal. A copy of the application is enclosed marked Ex. C. The Bank requests that the assessment may be modified as prayed for or that in the alternative the following questions of law may be referred to the High Court:—

(a) "Whether the petitioner is an "association of individuals" within the meaning of S. 3 of the Income-tax Act and whether the petitioner can be assessed to income-tax as an association of individuals;"

(b) "Whether the petitioner earned or derived any income or profits assessable for the year 1937-38 and whether the sum of Rs. 26,624-10-0 included by the Income-tax Officer as "co-operative income" in the total income of the petitioner was income or profits within the meaning of the Income-tax Act and not to be included in the total income;"

(c) "Whether the petitioner is not a mutual benefit society and as such cannot be said in law to have derived any income or profits assessable under the Income-tax Act;"

(d) "Whether in computing the total income of the petitioner the addition of the sum of Rs. 15,000 being the reserve for bad and doubtful debts is legal in view of the uniform practice of the petitioner to write off the bad debts not out of current profits of the year but out of the reserve;"

(e) "Whether the petitioner is not entitled under S. 8, second proviso to an exemption from assessment to income-tax in respect of the sum of Rs. 5,000 as interest on tax-free securities and not merely Rs. 1,519 allowed by the Income-tax Officer;"

(f) Whether in the circumstance of the case the computation of the Income made by the Income-tax Officer and the refund order issued is legal and in accordance with the provisions of the Income-tax Act".

Questions (d) and (e) do not arise out of the Assistant Commissioner's order and questions (c) and (f) cover the same ground as questions (a) and (b). I do not therefore refer them. I accordingly refer the following two questions for the decision of the Hon'ble the Judges of the High Court.

Question (a).—"Whether the Bank is an association of individuals within the meaning of S. 3 of the Act and whether it can be assessed to income-tax as an association of individuals."

Question (b).—"Whether the Bank is not a Mutual Benefit Society and as such can be said to have derived a profit of Rs. 26,624 as a co-operative society to be included in its total income."

6. Question (a).—One of the contentions of the Bank is that the expression 'other association of individuals' in S. 3 of the Act refers only to cases where the association has no separate legal existence of its own apart from the individuals composing it and that as the Bank is registered under the Co-operative Societies Act as an entity having a separate legal existence it cannot be called an association of individuals any more than a Hindu undivided family or a company. The language of S. 3 of the Act does not warrant such an interpretation of the term. On the contrary, the use of the adjective "other" to qualify the term "association of individuals" indicates that the items enumerated before, namely, "Hindu undivided family, company and firm" are also associations of individuals. The legislature evidently intended to provide for the assessment of all associations of individuals which had income falling within the scope of the Act, and while it specified three well-known classes of such associations, namely, the Hindu undivided family, the company and the firm, it included the remaining classes of associations in the category of "other association of individuals". This is also evident from the language age used in clause (c) under sub-section (2) to S. 14, where reference is made to the share of the profits or gains of an association of individuals other than a Hindu undivided family, company or firm. The argument that an incorporated body with a separate legal existence cannot be regarded as an association of individuals has therefore no substance. Another point urged by the Bank in support of the contention that it is not an association of individuals is that its members consist not only of individuals but also of registered societies. The term 'individual' has not been defined either in the Income-tax Act or in the General Clauses Act. The word means "an indivisible entity" and connotes not only a single person in the ordinary accepted sense, but also an entity like a company or a society which, to adopt the petitioner's own phraseology has a separate legal existence of its own. Thus an 'individual' may be either a single human being or a unit in a class, and in this view an association of individuals may be interpreted as meaning a "body of persons whether incorporated or not". In the present case, each registered society which joined the Bank as a member is an individual unit of the class to which it belongs and the Bank is an association of individuals. Reference is in this connection solicited to the judgment of the Bombay High Court (subsequently confirmed by the Privy Council)* in the case of *Trustees of Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baroneity Trust*¹ and of the Allahabad High Court in *Ram Ratan Das Madan Gopal's case*² in which it has been recognised that it is possible to regard an incorporated body or a group of persons forming a unit as an "individual". I may also be permitted to refer their Lordships to the decision of the Lahore High Court in the case of *Mian Channu Factories Union*³ where this union which was a combination of firms and a Hindu undivided family, was held to be assessable as an "association of individuals". I submit that the question should be answered in the affirmative.

Question (b).—The Bank claims exemption from assessment in respect of the profit made from transactions with its members on the ground that it is a Mutual Benefit Society. The term "Mutual Benefit Society" has not been defined; nor does the Bank say in what way it is a Mutual Benefit Society. The principle underlying the exemption of the income of Mutual Benefit Societies is that one cannot make a profit out of oneself. As observed by Lord Watson in *Styles v. New York Life Insurance Company*⁴, when a number of persons agree to contribute funds for a common purpose and to stipulate that their contribution so far as not required for that purpose shall be repaid to them they should not be regarded as traders and the contributions returned to them should not be regarded as profits. This principle was followed by this High Court when deciding the case of *English and Scottish Joint Co-operative Wholesale Society, Limited*¹. In the course of his judgment *In the case of Madura Hindu Permanent Fund, Ltd.*², Beasley, C.J., referred to a Mutual Benefit Society as "an association of persons not having share capital but borrowing and lending from and to themselves for the mutual benefit of themselves" (at page 338). The question is whether the Bank satisfies this test. A perusal of its bye-laws and an examination of its activities as disclosed by the profit and loss account will show that the Bank is an ordinary banking concern and not a Mutual Benefit Society. The transactions are not confined to its own members and there is no "mutuality" in them. Loans are taken by the Bank from members as well as from others, and interest is payable on such loans at fixed rates. Loans are granted to co-operative societies, individual shareholders, and also to depositors who are not shareholders. There is thus nothing in the activities of the Bank to distinguish it from an ordinary banking concern. The mere fact that it has certain dealings with its own members cannot make it a Mutual Benefit Society, nor is it entitled to claim immunity from taxation in respect of income attributable to such dealings. The contention that it is a Mutual Benefit Society is founded on a wrong understanding of the inherent nature of such societies. It may be possible for a co-operative society to function purely as a Mutual Benefit Society and to claim total exemption in respect of income so derived. The *English and Scottish Joint Co-operative Wholesale Society, Ltd.*¹, whose case was decided by this Hon'ble Court is an example of such a society. But to say that every co-operative society is a Mutual Benefit Society betrays ignorance of the true nature of a Mutual Benefit Society. The Bank is a co-operative society doing business as an ordinary banking concern and is therefore assessable in accordance with the Notification issued by the Government of India under S. 60 (1) of the Act—please see paragraph 18 (3) on pages 172-173 of the Income-tax Manual (Seventh Edition). This Notification lays down that the profits of any co-operative society (subject to certain exceptions) are exempt from the tax payable under the Act but shall be taken into account in determining the total income of an assessee for the purpose of the Act. assessment in the present case having been made on this basis the inclusion of the profit of Rs. 26,624 in the total income of the Bank is correct. The question should be answered accordingly.

Reference to this Court by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, under S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922) for decision on the following questions:—

"(a) Whether the Bank is an association of individuals within the meaning of S. 3 of the Income-tax Act and whether it can be assessed to income-tax as an association of individuals?

(b) Whether the Bank is not a Mutual Benefit Society and as such can be said to have derived a profit of Rs. 26,624 as a co-operative society to be included in its total income."

M. S. Venkatarama Aiyar and P. R. Srinivasan for Respondents.

Leach, C. J.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The assessee is a co-operative central bank registered under the Indian Co-operative Societies Act of 1912. This statute has been replaced, so far as this Presidency is concerned, by the Madras Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1932), but nothing turns on this. The assessee corporation consists of 671 shareholders. Of the shareholders 138 are persons and 533 co-operative societies. For the year of assessment 1937-38 the Income-tax authorities have held that the assessee had a total income of Rs. 37,445 made up as follows:—Rs. 5,293, interest on taxed securities; Rs. 1,519, interest on tax free securities; Rs. 4,009, interest obtained on deposits and Rs. 26,624, profits made on its transactions. The assessee does not confine its business to its shareholders but carries on an ordinary banking business as well. By virtue of a notification of the Government of India under S. 60 of the Indian Income-tax Act of 1922 the "profits" of a co-operative society are exempt from income-tax, but the notification stipulates that the profits shall be taken into account in determining the total income for the purposes of the Indian Income-tax Act. After excluding the Rs. 1,519, representing the interest on tax-free securities of the assessee and the Rs. 26,624 made on its business, the Income-tax authorities have assessed the assessee on an income of Rs. 9,302, but by taking into account the Rs. 26,624 they have held that the assessee must pay tax on the Rs. 9,302 at the rate which would be payable on an income of Rs. 37,445. The assessee challenged the correctness of this decision and asked the Commissioner of Income-tax to refer to this Court under the provisions of S. 66 (2) of the Act certain questions. The Income-tax Commissioner considered that only two questions of law arose and these he has referred. They are as follows:

"(a) Whether the Bank is an association of individuals within the meaning of S. 3 of the Act and whether it can be assessed to income-tax as an association of individuals.

(b) Whether the Bank is not a Mutual Benefit Society and as such can be said to have derived a profit of Rs. 26,624 as a co-operative society to be included in its total income."

The assessee is satisfied with the reference of these two questions and therefore the Court is not called upon to go beyond them.

The first question arises out of a contention advanced on behalf of the assessee that the assessee was not liable to income-tax at all as the assessee does not come within the charging S. 3. S. 3 says:

"Where any Act of the Indian Legislature enacts that income-tax shall be charged for any year at any rate or rates applicable to the total income of an assessee, tax at the rate or those rates shall be charged for that year in accordance with, and subject to the provisions of, this Act in respect of all income, profits and gains of the previous year of every individual, Hindu undivided family, company, firm and other association of individuals."

The argument is that the word 'individual' must be taken to be used merely as denoting a person and therefore the words "and other association of individuals" cannot apply to a corporate body which for the most part is composed of co-operative societies. In support of this contention great reliance is placed on the judgment in *The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Millowners' Association*¹. In that case it was held that the expression "association of individuals" in S. 3 means an association of human beings. The question which the Court had to decide was whether the Ahmedabad Millowners' Association which was composed of 61 members, 60 of whom were limited liability companies and one a person, was assessable to income-tax. The case was decided by Beaumont, C.J. and Wadia, J. In the course of his judgment, the learned Chief Justice stated that he was disposed to agree with the Commissioner of Income-tax that if one merely took the dictionary meaning of the word 'individual' it would include a limited liability company, but he considered that to do so would not be in accordance with its popular use by people speaking the English language. He concluded his judgment with this statement:

"The question is whether 'other association of individuals' includes an association of companies. It seems to me quite clear on the context that it cannot do so. 'Individuals', where first used, must mean human beings, because it is used as something distinct from a joint family, firm and company. The whole expression seems to me to mean "every human beings, Hindu undivided family, company, firm and other association of human beings." One cannot give to the word 'Individuals' in the expression 'association of individuals' a different meaning to that which the word 'individual' bears in the same phrase."

This opinion is in direct conflict with the opinion expressed by the learned Chief Justice in an earlier case: *Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy Trust v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay*¹. One of the questions in that case was whether a corporation styled "The Trustees of the Sir Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy Trust" which had been created under an Act passed by the Governor-General in Council was to be deemed to be an "individual" within the meaning of S. 3 of the Income-tax Act. The income-tax authorities had assessed the corporation as an "association of individuals." Beaumont, C. J., held that the corporation was an "individual" within the meaning of the section and not an "association of individuals". The question of the legality of the assessment was taken to the Privy Council and although the question of the status of the corporation was not directly raised before the Board it falls to be observed that the decision of the Bombay High Court was affirmed.

I consider that the opinion expressed in *Currimbhoy Ebrahim Baronetcy Trust v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay*¹, is preferable to that expressed in *The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Millowners' Association*². While it is true that ordinarily in conversation the use of the word 'individual' would be taken to denote a person, the word has in fact a far wider meaning. The first definition of the word given in the Oxford Dictionary is: "One in substance or essence; forming an indivisible entity; indivisible." It is also defined as "existing as a separate indivisible entity, numerically, one, single." If a corporate body created by a statute is an individual within the meaning of the section—and I hold that it is—a co-operative society registered under the Co-operative Societies' Act must fall within the same category. It is a corporate body and has perpetual succession. I consider that it is not reasonable to suppose that the Legislature intended that there should be a difference in the meaning of the word 'individual' and the plural 'individuals'. If the word 'individual' includes a corporation, the words "association of individuals" must embrace an association of corporate bodies, and therefore the assessee is an "association of individuals."

Support for the opinion that the assessee comes within S. 3 is to be found in the decision of the Allahabad High Court in *Ramratan Das Madan Gopal v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces*¹ and of the Lahore High Court in *Mian Channu Factories Union v. The Commissioner of Income-tax*². In the former case a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the word "individual" in the proviso to S. 55 of the Income-tax Act includes an undivided Hindu family. In the Lahore case, which was also decided by a Bench, a "ginning factories union" which was composed of two firms and a Hindu undivided family was assessed to income-tax on the basis that it was an association of individuals. To give the word "individual" the meaning of "person" only would, it seems to me, be to disregard the scheme of the Act and to rob the word of an accepted meaning. It follows that in my opinion the first question referred should be answered in the affirmative.

The second question requires little discussion. The income-tax authorities have held that the assessee is carrying on an ordinary banking business. It carries on a banking business with non-members and therefore cannot maintain the claim to be a mutual benefit society. It can only escape taxation under the provisions of the notification which the Central Government has published under S. 60 of the Act, which means that it must pay tax at the rate applicable to the amount of its total profits, namely, Rs. 37,445. The principle stated in *The Commissioner of Income-tax v. Trichinopoly Tennore Hindu Permanent Fund*³ and repeated in *Trichinopoly Tennore Hindu Permanent Fund, Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax*⁴, applies.

I would answer the second question in that sense.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 45, rr. 2, 3 and 17—Application for leave to appeal to Federal Court—Decision of single Judge of High Court in revision—Appealability—Certificate by Judge under Government of India Act, 1935, S. 205 (1) that case involves important question as to interpretation of Government of India Act—Consideration whether, or certificate that, case involves question as to interpretation of Government of India Act—Whether necessary in a petition under O. 45, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal.

At the time of dismissing a revision-petition [against an order scaling down a debt under Madras Act (IV of 1938) following the Full Bench decision that the Act was intra vires], the Judge gave a certificate under the Government of India Act, S. 205 (1) that the case involved an important question as to the interpretation of the Constitution Act. The present application for leave to appeal to the Federal Court was opposed on the ground that no appeal lay from the order of a single Judge of a High Court.

Held, that the order dismissing the revision petition was a final order and the Judge having given the certificate under the Government of India Act, S. 205 (1) that his order does involve a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, the appeal to the Federal Court must be admitted.

In a petition under O. 45, r. 2 for leave to appeal to the Federal Court, it is unnecessary for the Court to consider whether there is a substantial question of law involved as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935. It is unnecessary for the petitioner to apply for a certificate or for the Court to grant one.

Petition under O. 45, rr. 2 and 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure and S. 205 of the Government of India Act, praying that, in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to grant leave to the petitioner to appeal to the Federal Court against the judgment and order of the High Court dated 2nd May, 1939 and passed in C. R. P. No. 825 of 1939 presented to the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore dated 11th February, 1939 and made in I. A. No. 1587 of 1938 in O. S. The Order of the Court was pronounced by

The Chief Justice.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Federal Court from an order of Wadsworth, J., which involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935. The application is opposed and it is necessary to set out the course of events preceding the order of the learned Judge and to examine the provisions of the Act and the amendments which have been made to the Code of Civil Procedure by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937.

Leach, C. J.

On the 21st November, 1934, the petitioner obtained a money decree for Rs. 7,569-0-9 with interest and costs against the respondent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore. At that time the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act had not been placed on the statute book. It came into force, however, on the 22nd March, 1938, and in accordance with its provisions the judgment-debtor applied for an order scaling down the decretal amount. His application was granted and as the result of the investigation it was found that taking into account the scaling down provisions the debt had been completely discharged. Consequently the judgment-debtor applied to the Subordinate Judge for an order directing full satisfaction to be recorded and this application was granted. The petitioner then applied to this Court to revise the Subordinate Judge's order on the ground that the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act was ultra vires the powers of the Provincial Legislature and to set aside the order for scaling down and the order directing satisfaction to be recorded.

Leach, C. J.

The application for revision came before Wadsworth, J., on the 2nd May, 1939. By that time the question of the validity of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act had been considered by a Full Bench of this Court in *Mada Nagarathnam v. Puuvada Seshayya*¹. The Full Bench held that the Act was intra vires the powers of the Provincial Legislature. As he was bound to do in the circumstances, Wadsworth, J., dismissed the revision petition, but as it involved an important question as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, he granted a certificate under S. 205 (1) of the Act. It is in respect of that order of dismissal that the petitioner wishes to appeal to the Federal Court. The respondent says there is no appeal from the order of a single Judge of a High Court and in this connection relies on the provisions of S. 111 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure. An examination of that section fails to reveal any support for the argument.

S. 205 (1) of the Government of India Act reads as follows:—

"An appeal shall lie to the Federal Court from any judgment, decree or final order of a High Court in British India, if the High Court certifies that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of this Act or any order in Council made thereunder, and it shall be the duty of every High Court in British India to consider in every case whether or not any such question is involved and of its own motion to give or to withhold a certificate accordingly.

(2) Where such a certificate is given, any party in the case may appeal to the Federal Court on the ground that any such question as aforesaid has been wrongly decided, and on any ground on which that party could have appealed without special leave to His Majesty in Council if no such certificate had been given, and, with the leave of the Federal Court, on any other ground, and no direct appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council, either with or without special leave."

The effect of this section is this. Where a High Court has certified that a judgment, decree or final order passed by it involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Act, the dissatisfied party has the right of appeal to the Federal Court. If the case involves the amount of Rs. 10,000 or more and otherwise complies with the conditions regarding appeals to His Majesty in Council under the Code of Civil Procedure, then the Federal Court is empowered to hear and decide all the questions arising in the appeal. If the Federal Court were not empowered to deal with all the questions in such a case it would mean that there would be an appeal to the Federal Court on the question of interpretation of the statute and an appeal to the Privy Council on the other points in the case. It will be observed that the section also provides that the Federal Court can itself give special leave on other points.

By the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, two additions were made to the Code of Civil Procedure. The first is the insertion of S. 111-A which reads as follows:—

"Where a certificate has been given under S. 205 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, the three last preceding sections shall apply in relation to appeals to His Majesty in Council, and accordingly references to His Majesty shall be construed as references to the Federal Court:

Provided that

(a) so much of the said sections as delimits the cases in which an appeal will lie shall be construed as delimiting the cases in which an appeal will lie without the leave of the Federal Court otherwise than on the ground that a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the said Act, or any order in Council made thereunder, has been wrongly decided.

(b) in determining under cl. (c) of S. 109 whether the case is a fit one for appeal, and, under S. 110, whether the appeal involves a substantial question of law, any question of law as to the interpretation of the said Act, or any order in Council made thereunder, shall be left out of account."

The object of this section is to bring the Code of Civil Procedure into line with S. 205 of the Government of India Act. The two provisos make it perfectly clear that nothing in the Code shall be read as affecting the right given to a party to appeal to the Federal Court under sub-section (1) of S. 205 when the High Court has passed a final judgment, decree or order and has certified that a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, is involved. The provisos to S. 111-A have been expressed in very compact language, but when it is followed there is no doubt left as to its effect.

The second addition is to O. 45 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An additional rule has been here inserted, r. 17, and it reads as follows:

"Where a certificate has been given under S. 205 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, the provisions of this order shall apply in relation to appeals to the Federal Court as they apply in relation to appeals to His Majesty in Council and references in this order to His Majesty in Council and to any order of His Majesty in Council shall be construed as references to the Federal Court and the rules of the Federal Court:

Provided that

(a) rule 3 of this order shall have effect as if at the end of sub-rule (1) thereof there were inserted the words 'apart from any question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, or any order in Council made thereunder;

(b) where the only ground of appeal stated in the petition is that any question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, or any order in Council made thereunder has been wrongly decided, the petition need not pray for such a certificate as is mentioned in rule 3, and the like proceedings shall be had thereon as if such a certificate had been given except that no security shall be required for the costs of the respondent."

R. 3 as it stood before the amendment provided that every petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council should state the grounds of appeal and pray for a certificate either that, as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110, or that it is otherwise a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The addition of the words to r. 3 effected by proviso (a) makes it quite clear that it is unnecessary for the Court to consider in a petition filed in compliance with O. 45, r. 2 the question whether there is a substantial question of law involved as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935. That matter has already been dealt with under S. 205 (1) by the High Court on the passing of its judgment, decree or final order. Proviso (b) emphasises that it is unnecessary for the petitioner to apply for a certificate or for the Court to grant one.

The order of Wadsworth, J., was a final order of this Court. CL 15 of the Letters Patent prohibits an appeal from an order passed by the Court in the exercise of its revisional powers. The learned Judge considered whether the matter involved a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935, and he has certified that his order does involve such a question. No other question is involved and therefore this appeal must be admitted.

Petitions under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 and S. 224 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of Small Causes, Madras, dated 24th September, 1938 and 13th February, 1939, respectively and made in M. P. No. 1581 of 1938 in Suit No. 1104 of 1937 and N. T. A. No. 421 of 1938 respectively.

S. Ramachandra Aiyar for Petitioner.

N. Muthuswami Aiyar and N. Ramanatha Aiyar for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—This petition raises a question under the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. The petitioner was the second defendant in a suit on a promissory note dated 8th October, 1934, executed by himself and by his brother the first defendant. This promissory note was in supersession of an earlier promissory note executed by the first defendant alone on 28th May, 1930. The first defendant is admittedly not an agriculturist within the purview of the Act. The second defendant claims to be entitled to the benefit of S. 9 of the Act on the basis that the debt upon which he has been sued is in renewal of a prior debt so far as he is concerned.

Wadsworth, J.

It seems to us unnecessary to decide the question whether, when there is a debt incurred by A, superseded by another debt incurred by A and B, B can contend that his liability is in renewal of a prior debt. So far as the facts of this case go, it is clear to us that the original debt is not a debt as defined by S. 3 (iii) of the Act which defines a debt as "any liability in cash or kind, whether secured or unsecured due from an agriculturist." The proviso to S. 9 deals with any part of a debt which is found to be a renewal of a prior debt. Both the debts sued on and the prior debt which it is found to have superseded must, if this section is to have any application, fall within the definition of the term 'debt' in S. 3; that is to say, both the prior debt and the debt sued on must be debts due from an agriculturist. In the present case, admittedly the original debt was not due from an agriculturist and it is therefore not open to the petitioner to call in aid S. 9 on the ground that the debt upon which he is sued is in renewal of a prior debt.

This petition need not be decided on the merits in view of our decision in C. R. P. Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870), S. 7 (v) (c)—Valuation for court-fees at 15 times the nett profits—Profits of year previous to the filing of suit, in the nature of a windfall—If to be excluded from consideration—Civil Procedure Code, S. 115—Revision—Decision on court-fee in favour of plaintiff—Decision affecting jurisdiction—Interference in revision.

In a suit for possession of land it was found that a portion of the land had been leased to the Municipality during the year previous to the filing of the suit at an annual rental of Rs. 186 for use as a nightsoil dumping ground. It was contended that this profit was in the nature of a windfall and should be excluded from consideration in determining the court-fee.

Held, S. 7 (v) (c) does not give to the Court any option to consider whether or not the nett profits for the year preceding the presentation of the plaint are exceptional or unusual. Such profits cannot be excluded from consideration.

Held, further, where a decision of the lower appellate Court though on a question of court-fee directs the trial Court to assume a jurisdiction which it has not got, the High Court can interfere in revision.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Kurnool dated 2nd September, 1938, in C. M. A. No. 34 of 1937 (O. S. No. 65 of 1937, District Munsif's Court, Kurnool).

V. Govindarajachari for Petitioners.

P. Chandra Reddi for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners in this case were defendants in a suit for possession of 3.85 acres of inam land and two houses situated within a municipality. Of the 3.85 acres of land an extent of 2.35 acres was admittedly leased to the municipality during the year previous to the filing of the suit at an annual rental of Rs. 186 for use as a nightsoil dumping ground. The trial Court valued this portion of the land under S. 7 (v) (c) of the Court-Fees Act at 15 times the nett profits, that is to say, at Rs. 2,790. The two houses were valued at Rs. 200 and the balance of the land was valued at Rs. 1,770. On the basis of this valuation the trial Court held that the suit had been under-valued and that the true value was beyond the jurisdiction of a District Munsif and therefore returned the plaint for re-presentation in the proper Court after paying the deficient court-fee. This decision was the subject of an appeal before the District Judge. The learned District Judge held that the extent of 1.5 acres not occupied by the municipal manure depot had been over-valued and that the annual income from it would be approximately Rs. 75 per acre. This portion of the learned District Judge's decision cannot be canvassed in revision. He also held that the valuation of the houses was correct. With reference to the land occupied by the manure depot he held that the income from the land by reason of this use was in the nature of a windfall in a particular year and could not be taken as the true profit from the land and that in any case a deduction would have to be made on account of loss of value of the land by the removal of top soil when the manure was being carted away. I have gone through the evidence and find nothing whatever to justify the learned District Judge's conclusion that there would be any detriment to the land by reason of the process of storing manure upon it and carting it away. The decision that the profits of the year previous to the filing of the suit can be excluded from consideration because they partake of the nature of a windfall, seems to me to run directly contrary to the wording of S. 7 (v) (c) of the Court-Fees Act which prescribes:

"Where nett profits have arisen from the land during the year next before the date of presenting the plaint, fifteen times such nett profits."

This section does not give to the Court any option to consider whether or not the nett profits for the year preceding the presentation of the plaint are exceptional or unusual. On behalf of the respondents it has been contended on the basis of a decision in *Ghasi Ram v. Har Gobind*¹, that it must be positively proved that the rental amount for this manure depot was actually received during the 365 days preceding the presentation of the plaint. I find from the evidence and from the judgments of the lower courts that it seems to have been conceded on both sides that this lease amount was paid within the year previous to the filing of the suit. At any rate there is no suggestion that it was not so paid, and it is too late to raise the point now.

It is, however, contended also that this Court has no power in revision to interfere with a decision in a matter of court-fee which is favourable to the plaintiff and the cases in *The Secretary of State for India in Council v. Raghunathan*² and *Manai-thunainatha Desikar v. Gopala Chettiar*³ have been quoted before me. The answer to this contention is that we are not here concerned with the simple question of how much court-fee the plaintiff shall pay. The basic question is whether the District Munsif has jurisdiction to try this suit if it is properly valued. The order which was on appeal before the learned District Judge was one returning the plaint on the ground that the District Munsif had no jurisdiction to try this suit and requiring the plaint to be filed in a superior Court after paying the deficient court-fee. It has been argued that the District Judge certainly had jurisdiction to decide whether or not the plaint was rightly returned and that S. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure only empowers the High Court to interfere with a decision of a court below which has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law or has failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested or has acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The argument is that when an appellate Court acting in its admitted jurisdiction makes an erroneous decision regarding the jurisdiction of a court below it, there is no ground for interference in revision. This contention runs directly contrary to the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in *Atchayya v. Sri Seetharamachandra Rao*⁴, where Wallis, C.J., held that such an order comes within

3. (1939) 1 M.L.J. 317.

the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court by virtue of S. 115 (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure. This decision has been followed by a Bench of this Court in *Kattiya Pillai v. Ramaswamia Pillai*¹, where the question of jurisdiction raised expressly depended on a decision as to the proper court-fee. It is needless to say that there are strong practical grounds for interfering to prevent the trial of a case by a Court which has no jurisdiction, when an appellate Court has wrongly directed this Court to assume a jurisdiction which it has not got.

In the result therefore I allow the revision petition with costs and hold that the proper valuation of the suit should be on a value of Rs. 3,575 made up as set forth in the revision petition and that the trial court's order returning the plaint for presentation in a Court having jurisdiction after paying the proper court-fee thereon is correct, subject to the alteration in the valuation of the suit hereby indicated.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The appellants are the sons of the fourth respondent and are all minors. They filed a suit through their maternal grandfather as their next friend in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore for partition of the family properties and the setting aside of certain alienations made by their father. They attached to their plaint three schedules. Schedule A contained the descriptions of ten items of immovable property belonging to the family. Schedule B was a list of the family's movable properties, and Schedule C, a list of the debts owed by the family. Of the immovable properties, items Nos. 1 to 9 had been mortgaged by their father, and item No. 10 had been sold. These alienations were said to be invalid so far as the interests of the appellants were concerned and it was also alleged that some of the debts were not binding on them. The mortgage of items Nos. 1 to 9 was in favour of the Co-operative Credit Society of Pedatadepalli, which is represented by its President, the first respondent. The appellant's father had been employed as Secretary of the Society and it was his duty to collect moneys from its debtors. Out of his collections he misappropriated amounts totalling Rs. 8,073-4-8. As security for Rs. 5,490-4-8 he executed a mortgage of items Nos. 1 to 9 in Schedule A, and for the balance of Rs. 2,583 he gave a letter acknowledging his liability. Item No. 10 was sold by the father to the second respondent who has transferred his interest in the property to the third respondent. The respondent society averred that all the immovable properties were the self-acquired properties of the father. After considering the evidence adduced by the parties, the Subordinate Judge found that items Nos. 1 and 9, half of item No. 2 and a quarter of item No. 10 represented ancestral properties, the rest being the separate estate of the father. The Subordinate Judge also held that the interests of the appellants in the ancestral properties were liable for the debts of the father to the respondent society. The finding of the Subordinate Judge that items Nos. 1 and 9, half of item No. 2 and a quarter of item No. 10 formed the ancestral properties is accepted by all the parties. The appellants, however, say that the Subordinate Judge erred in holding that the other properties belonged to their father separately. They further say that the Subordinate Judge erred in holding that their interests in the ancestral properties are liable for their father's debts. These are the only two questions which arise in this appeal.

The finding of the Subordinate Judge with regard to the father's separate properties is not really open to serious question. When the father separated from his brothers about the year 1916 his share in the family estate was confined to the properties which the Subordinate Judge has held to be ancestral properties and the income merely sufficed to maintain himself and his wife. The evidence of the father's own brother establishes this. The father, however, held the office of village karnam and was in receipt of its emoluments. He also entered into contracts for the construction of works for local boards and acted as a school master. The non-ancestral properties could only have been acquired out of the income he received from these occupations. We have no hesitation in concurring in the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this question. The alienations of items Nos. 3 to 8, half of item No. 2 and three quarters of item No. 10 therefore cannot be challenged.

The contention of the appellants with regard to the finding of the Subordinate Judge that their shares in the ancestral properties are liable for their father's debts is this. Inasmuch as their father misappropriated moneys of the respondent society he committed a crime and in these circumstances they say that the resultant debt is not binding on them. This argument ignores a long line of decisions of this Court to the contrary. This Court has always held that where a father has lawfully received money the fact that he misappropriates it later will not change the character of the debt and the son is liable under the pious obligation rule. Where a person receives money on behalf of another a civil liability immediately arises and the fact that the person who has received it fails in his duty to pay it over to the person entitled to it does not alter the civil character of the debt—see *Natessayyan v. Ponnuswami*¹, *Kanamar Venkappayya v. Krishna Charia*², *Thirumalayappa Mudaliar v. Veerabhadra*³, *Venugopala Naidu v. Ramanathan Chetty*⁴, *Garuda Sanyassayya v. Narella Murthena*⁵, Venkata- *charyulu v. Mohana Panda*¹ and Ramasubramania Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal,².

In *Mc Dowell v. Raghava Chetty*³, White, C.J. and Subramania Aiyar, J., held that the sons of a Hindu father who had committed criminal breach of trust were not liable for the father's debts. The father was a cashier and he took out of his employer's cash box, which was in the employer's custody, moneys for his own purposes. This was not a case of lawful receipt of money. The act of taking the money out of the cash box constituted an offence. There was here no antecedent civil liability and the decision in *Natessayyan v. Ponnuswami*⁴, was distinguished on this ground. In *Gurunathan Chetty v. Raghavalu Chetty*⁵, White, C.J., sitting with Wallis, J., delivered a judgment which at first sight suggests that where a father has made himself amenable to the criminal law the pious obligation rule cannot apply even when a criminal liability arises subsequent to a civil liability, but it is to be doubted whether the learned Judges there intended to depart from the rule laid down in the other cases which I have cited.

I agree with the remarks of Venkatasubba Rao, J., in *Ramasubramania Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal*², where he said with reference to the decisions of this Court:—

"It cannot be gainsaid that there is absolute want of harmony, so far as the decisions were made to rest upon particular grounds. But if the facts of the cases are examined, the conflict is only apparent and the true principle appears to be that the sons are not liable, where the moneys were originally obtained by the father by the commission of an offence; the sons' liability is, on the other hand, recognised where, in its origin, the debt was not immoral but there was a supervening dishonest act of the father."

That I regard as being not only an accurate summary of the decisions of this Court, but as correctly stating the law.

Mr. Somasundaram has, however, contended that the decision of the Privy Council in *Toshanpal Singh v. District Judge of Agra*⁶ has in effect overruled the decisions of this Court. An examination of the judgment does not support this contention. In fact it shows that the Judicial Committee left this Court's decision untouched. In that case the Hindu Secretary of a School Committee was in charge of a fund deposited at a bank and was authorized to draw upon it only for specific purposes connected with the school. He drew on it for his own purposes and thereby committed criminal breach of trust. The Privy Council held that as the father had committed a crime the sons were not responsible for the resultant loss. Lord Blanesburgh delivering the judgment of the Board expressly pointed out that until the moment of the withdrawal from the fund the father had been guilty of no breach of duty civil or otherwise, and later observed:

"In view of the powers and duties prescribed for Dhianpal" (the father) "in relation to the Rs. 62,000 there was, as their Lordships have already shown, in relation to the moneys misappropriated by him, no antecedent duty in respect of which any similar liability was either created or survived."

This judgment in effect accords approval to the decision of this Court in *Mc Dowell v. Raghava Chetty*¹, but leaves entirely unaffected the line of cases which say that the sons are liable where there was lawful receipt of money and subsequent misappropriation. In this case the father had received moneys lawfully on behalf of the Society and the fact that he had at a later stage used them for his own purposes does not alter the liability of the sons.

The appeal fails and will be dismissed with costs, one set to be divided among respondents 1, 3 and 6 according to the values of their respective claims. As the appeal was filed in forma pauperis the appellants will pay the court-fee due to Government.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—I entirely agree, but I shall, however, add a few words expressing the result of the decisions of this Court on the question argued before us. That the sons are bound by reason of their pious obligation to discharge a debt arising out of a civil liability of their father is well settled. The application of this principle is beset with difficulty in cases where the father receives or retains money with a duty to apply it for the benefit of a third party but omits so to apply it. Where the original taking or the receipt of the money amounted in itself to a criminal offence the sons are not bound. The reason is quite plain and easily understood. A liability resulting through the commission of a crime is necessarily a tainted liability in its origin. Such would be the case where as in Mc Dowell

v. *Raghava Chetty*¹, the cashier took for his own purposes money out of the cash chest of his employer and in the Privy Council decision in *Toshanpal Singh v. District Judge of Agra*², where the Secretary after having properly lodged the money in the bank drew it out for his own purposes. The position will be different where the father is guilty of no misconduct or crime in receiving or withdrawing the money in the first instance though he might be civilly liable to account for it. The civil liability will attach the moment the money is received without any impropriety, and with it will also attach the liability of the sons to relieve the father from the burden of the debt. The pious obligation which thus springs into existence simultaneously with the receipt or withdrawal, subsists so long as the debt itself subsists. Once the liability is thus established it is irrelevant to consider whether the money received or retained by the father lawfully in the first instance was subsequently misappropriated by him. The subsequent misconduct of the father will not be allowed to prejudice the rights already accrued in favour of the third parties on the receipt of their money by the father. This distinction runs through all the decisions of this Court and it is quite apparent that it rests on a logical, intelligible basis. I can see little reason for considering that any doubt has been cast on the rationale of the decisions of this Court by anything said by the Privy Council in *Toshanpal Singh v. District Judge of Agra*². It will be found on an examination of the case that their Lordships considered that the case fell within the class of cases where the original taking or withdrawal itself amounted to an offence.

Referring to the conduct of the father in that case in withdrawing the money from the Bank and misappropriating it, their Lordships observed:

"With reference to these balances (at the Bank) he was under no further obligation unless and until their application was otherwise directed by the Committee. No such direction was ever given. Accordingly if, and to the extent to which Thakur Dhianpal Singh (the father) withdrew those moneys and applied them for his own purposes, he was guilty as from the moment of withdrawal of a criminal breach of trust. But until the moment of withdrawal he had been guilty of no breach of duty civil or otherwise in relation to them."

Their Lordships then proceeded to declare that this statement furnished the key to the decision of the appeal, and held that the sons were not liable, as up to the amount of the misappropriation, the father had completely fulfilled his duty, and there was therefore no antecedent liability established as against him. Their Lordships noticed the argument of the respondents in the case before them, which is identical with the case of the respondents here, but held that that "difficult and doubtful question of law" did not call for decision in the view that the father was, in relation to the moneys withdrawn from the Bank guilty of a criminal breach of trust simpliciter.

1. (1903) I.L.R. 27 Mad. 71.

The question may be difficult but a solution has been found and consistently acted upon in this Court, and so long as it is not declared erroneous by a higher authority, it must govern our decision.

Sowcar,

On 4th March, 1933, the defendant executed a promissory note for Rs 300 in favour of the plaintiff. In October of that year he paid Rs. 100 towards principal. On 18th November, 1933, the interest outstanding was paid off. In a suit for the balance of principal and interest from the date of coming into force of Act IV of 1938 it was contended that interest at 5 per cent must be calculated from date of debt and added to the principal and the amounts actually paid should be deducted.

Held, the interest having been paid off in full the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for the balance of the principal outstanding.

Held, further, S. 12 entitled a creditor to interest on any sum remaining outstanding after the debt has been scaled down from the date up to which it has been scaled down, that is, only from the date of the decree.

K. A. Chakravarthy for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On 4th March, 1933, the petitioners executed a promissory note for Rs. 300 in favour of the respondent (plaintiff). In October of the same year he paid Rs. 100 towards the principal. On 18th November, 1935, we find the endorsement "interest calculated up to date has been paid off in full". The plaintiff brings the present suit for the balance of Rs. 200 principal and Rs. 7-8-0 interest from the 22nd March, 1938 (the date on which the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act came into force) to date of suit. Two questions arose; and the one with which we are concerned is what is the amount due under Act IV of 1938. It was held in favour of the plaintiff, by the District Munsif of Poonamallee that the plaintiff was entitled to the amount claimed.

It is strenuously argued by Mr. Chakravarthy that in applying S. 9 of Act IV of 1938, interest should be calculated at 5 per cent. from the date when the debt was incurred; to that should be added the principal; and from that sum should be deducted the amount actually paid. The plaintiff, it is contended, would be entitled only to the balance, which would probably be something less than nothing in the present case. That however is not the correct interpretation to put on S. 9. S. 9 (1) deals entirely with the question of interest. It says that interest shall be calculated up to the date of the commencement of the Act at 5 per cent. simple interest, that credit should be given for the interest already paid, and that the amount outstanding for interest should be added to the principal outstanding and the plaintiff should be given a decree for the amount so calculated. On 18th November, 1935, the interest outstanding was paid off in full and the plaintiff has made no claim whatever for interest. As he is not bound to pay anything back, he cannot be given less than what he has claimed except for the small amount of Rs. 7-8-0, to which I shall presently refer.

It is further argued that if S. 9 (1) be deemed to deal only with the question of interest and that the amount paid by way of interest has not to be deducted from the principal as well as the interest calculated at 5 per cent, then there would be no meaning in S. 9 (2). I do not however agree; for it is easy to conceive of a case in which the debtor had paid off the entire amount of principal due and also paid an amount of interest which was greater than that calculated at 5 per cent. In such a case, were it not for the provision of S. 9 (2), the debtor would be entitled to a refund.

I have been asked to remand this C. R. P. because the trial Court says in disposing of this point:

"It is not open to me to re-open the adjustment arrived at between the parties before 18th November, 1935."

I do not know what the learned District Munsif had in mind when he said this; but the Court is clearly entitled to consider what principal was paid in the first instance and what interest had been paid. The Court was entitled and was bound to have regard to the transaction from the date on which the debt was first incurred. However, this point has no significance in view of my findings above; for the decree of the lower Court was right.

The plaintiff has claimed interest from the date on which the Act came into force up to the date of suit and costs and subsequent interest; but I find that he is not entitled to so much. S. 12 entitles a creditor to interest on any sum remaining outstanding after the debt has been scaled down from the date up to which it had been scaled down. That is to say, the plaintiff is entitled to interest only from the date of the decree.

With this slight modification, the petition is dismissed with costs.

applicable to such a debt. Where there are two non-agriculturist and five agriculturist members in a joint Hindu family, the non-agriculturists are liable for 2/7 of the unscaled debt while the agriculturists are liable for 5/7 of the scaled down debts. It is not necessary that the property should be split up into individual shares and each share made liable only for its own share of the family debt.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Devakottai dated 20th October, 1939 and made in I. A. No. 188 of 1939 in S. C. S. No. 661 of 1935.

V. Ramaswami Aiyar for Petitioners.

R. Sethurama Sastri for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—A decree was obtained against defendants 1 to 5 personally on a promissory note executed by them for a debt binding on the family. Because it was binding on the family, the other two members, defendants 6 and 7, were made liable to the extent of their share of the family property. Defendants 3 to 7 filed an application in the Court below for scaling down the debt. The debt was scaled down in accordance with S. 8 of the Agriculturists' Debt Relief Act (IV of 1938), and a question arose in view of the allegations that defendants 1 and 2 were not entitled to the benefit of the Act (defendant 1 being said to be an insolvent and defendant 2 to have no further interest in the family property) whether, under S. 14 of the Act, the creditor can proceed against each of the defendants only for his proportionate share of the debt. The lower Court held that S. 14 did not apply to the case of a contractual debt. Defendants 3 to 5 appeal.

S. 14 affects:

"A Hindu family where some of the members liable in respect of a family debt are not agriculturists while others are agriculturists."

The case of the respondent, which has been accepted by the lower Court, is that this debt is not a family debt. It is argued that a debt can only be said to be a family debt when the debtors are made liable only because they are members of a family; for example, if the manager of a family contracts a debt legally binding on the family, it is a family debt as far as the other members of the family are concerned but not as far as the manager is concerned. It is difficult to appreciate this distinction; for it appears to me that if a debt is a family debt, it must be a family debt with regard to everybody. Moreover, I think, the wording of clauses (a) and (b) of S. 14 indicates that this contention of the respondent cannot be correct; because it makes liable not only the debtors' shares of the family property but makes them liable personally for their proportionate share of debt; and they cannot be liable personally unless the debt is a contractual one. So I cannot agree with the lower Court that S. 14 has no application.

Jagannatha
Aiyangar
•
Suppiah
Chettiar.

I do not, however, find any reason to suppose that because one or more members of a family are non-agriculturists, the family property has to be split up into individual shares and that each individual share is liable only for its own share of the family debt. That is not how the section reads. Using the words appropriate to the present case:

"The creditor shall . . . be liable to proceed (a) against the non-agriculturist . . . members and . . . their share of the family property to the extent only of. . . their proportionate share of the debt which shall be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of this Act and (b) against the agriculturist . . . members and . . . their share of the family property, to the extent only of . . . their proportionate share of the debt."

That would mean that where, as in the present case, there are two non-agriculturists and five agriculturists, the non-agriculturists are liable for 2/7 of the unscaled debt while the agriculturists are liable for 5/7 of the scaled-down debt. That is what one would expect the legislature in justice to have done in order to overcome the difficulty that arises in dealing with a Hindu family, some of whose members are agriculturists and some not. In some Malabar families, for example, there is an enormous number of members and if a creditor could only proceed against the individual small fractions of the family property or the individual share of that member, very great hardship indeed would be entailed; and I do not think the Legislature intended by this section to throw that great burden on the creditor. Moreover, the word 'share' would be incorrect if the petitioners' contentions were correct. The correct word would be 'shares'. It therefore follows that if the Act does not apply to the first and second defendants, defendants 3 to 7 would be liable for 5/7 of the scaled-down debt.

It is contended that S. 21 of the Act, which excludes certain insolvents from the scope of the Act, does not apply to this case; for there is no evidence whether a dividend has been declared or not. It is also argued that there is no evidence to show that the second defendant has no longer any interest in the family property. In the view taken by the lower Court, it was not necessary to consider these questions. They will have to be considered in view of the above findings.

The petition is allowed and the interlocutory application remanded for disposal on the lines indicated above. The costs for this petition will be provided for in the order to be made by the lower Court when disposing of the application.

K. R. Vepa for Appellant.

A. Lakshmayya for Respondents.

This appeal coming on for hearing on 21st February, 1940, the Court (Horwill, J.) made the following ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

The plaintiff filed the present suit for possession on his title, alleging that the first defendant was left in possession of the suit land by the second defendant in 1909 and that he continued in possession of the land ever since with the permission of the second defendant. The land was brought to sale by the plaintiff in execution of a decree against defendants 2 to 5. When the plaintiff sought to obtain possession he was resisted by the second defendant. The plaintiff brought a claim petition which was dismissed; and hence this suit.

The trial Court found that the title was with the second defendant and that the plaintiff's case that the first defendant was in permissive possession was true. The appellate Court while confirming the finding that the title was with the plaintiff, found that the plaintiff had not proved that the first defendant was ever in possession with the second defendant's permission. He therefore allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had not proved that either he or the second defendant had been in possession within 12 years of suit. The plaintiff appeals, contending that as his allegation was that the first defendant was in permissive possession, the lower appellate Court wrongly threw the onus upon the plaintiff, i.e., the lower appellate court should have applied Article 144 of the Limitation Act and not Article 142. As the evidence of the defendants of their having been in adverse possession was not given much credit to by the lower appellate Court, it is argued that if the burden had been rightly thrown on the first defendant, the first defendant's appeal would have been dismissed.

The argument of the plaintiff amounts to this: that even though he would ordinarily in a suit for ejectment have to prove that he was in possession within twelve years; yet he could get over this difficulty of limitation and displace the onus by a false declaration in his plaint. The decision of a Bench of this Court in *Ramanujachariar v. Sundarachariar*¹ gives support to this argument. There, the plaintiff's allegation was that he let the defendants into possession under an agreement of tenancy and that they would not give up possession when the tenancy was terminated. The lower appellate Court had found that the agreement set up was not proved; but the learned Judges held that the plaintiff was not bound to prove possession. Although no reasons were given for this finding, yet the learned Judges definitely disagreed with the lower appellate Court that the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove possession within 12 years of suit. The argument there seemed to have been that the frame of the suit determined the provisions of the Limitation Act to be applied and that it was immaterial what the actual findings on the questions raised in the pleadings were. Rustomji, at page 1387 of his book on the 'Limitation Act' (5th edition), says:

"When plaintiff comes into Court alleging that defendant's original possession was permissive, it is for the plaintiff to establish his allegation before defendant can be called upon to substantiate his plea of adverse possession."

He adds at page 1407,

"Decisions of the High Courts in India to the contrary, on the supposed authority of the Privy Council judgment in *Secretary of State for India v. Chellikani Rama Rao*¹ are not good law."

A somewhat similar point came up for decision in *Alam Khan Sahib v. Karupannaswami Nadan*²; and *Ramanujachariar v. Sundarachariar*³, and three other cases were referred to. In that case, Venkatasubba Rao, J., disposed of very briefly with these remarks:—

"Mr. Rajah Aiyar for the appellant, however, relies on the following four cases; . . . of which the first two are decisions of the same single Judge, the third was also decided by a Judge sitting singly, and the fourth (25 L. W. 127) contains no discussion of the principle involved . . . with great respect, we are unable to follow the four cases relied upon by the appellant."

In view of this conflict between the decisions of two benches of this Court, I direct that the papers in this case be put before my Lord, the Chief Justice, for referring to a Full Bench, if he so pleases, the question whether, in a case where a plaintiff sets up a case of permissive possession and fails to prove it, the burden then lies upon the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession within twelve years of suit, or whether the onus is upon the defendant to prove adverse possession for a period of twelve years.

This case coming on for hearing in pursuance of the above Order of Reference, the Court delivered the following

Venkatasubbarayudu, who was adjudicated an insolvent during the pendency of the suit out of which this appeal arises. The insolvent was the plaintiff in the suit. On the 29th November, 1911, the second respondent and his sons mortgaged certain land belonging to them and in 1922 the mortgagees filed a suit in the Court of the District Judge of Rajahmundry to enforce the mortgage. They obtained a decree which they assigned to the plaintiff, who caused the land to be put up for sale in execution proceedings. The plaintiff bought the land at the Court auction and in due course obtained a sale certificate. When he went to take possession of the property he was obstructed by the first respondent, who claimed it as his ancestral property. Thereupon the plaintiff applied to the Court for an order under O. 21, r. 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure. His application was dismissed and consequently he filed in the Court of the District Munsif, Rajahmundry, a suit for a decree declaring his title to the property and for the ejectment of the first respondent therefrom. In his plaint he averred that in 1909 the second respondent, on being appointed a village munsif, entrusted the property to the first respondent, his nephew, who was to manage it for him. With the dishonest idea of defeating the mortgage the second respondent had, it was said, instigated the first respondent to claim the property as his own. In addition to claiming the land as his ancestral property the first respondent averred that he had title to it by adverse possession. The District Munsif found for the plaintiff on all the issues and consequently decreed the suit. The first respondent then appealed to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajahmundry. The Subordinate Judge held that the land was not the ancestral property of the first respondent, but belonged to the second respondent and his family. He disagreed with the District Munsif, however, on the question whether the land had been entrusted to the first respondent. In his opinion this had not been proved, but without considering the question whether the first respondent had been in adverse possession for twelve years he allowed the appeal on the ground that possession had been with the first respondent, since that date. The question which the Court is called upon to decide is whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applies to this case. The appellant contends that Art. 144 applies. The first respondent would have it that the proper article is Art. 142. That the first respondent has been in possession since 1909 is admitted and it is conceded by both sides that if Art. 142 applies the appeal must fail. It is also conceded that if Art. 144 applies the suit must be remanded to the Subordinate Judge to consider whether the evidence justifies the first respondent's contention that he has obtained a title by adverse possession.

Art. 142 prescribes a period of limitation of twelve years for a suit for possession of immovable property when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession. The period of twelve years runs from the date of dispossession or discontinuance. Art. 144 prescribes the same period of limitation for a suit "for possession of immovable property or any interest therein not hereby otherwise specially provided for". The period commences when the possession of the defendant becomes adverse to the plaintiff. Arts. 134, 134-B, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141 and 143 also deal with suits for possession of immovable property. Art. 144 is a residuary article and therefore can only be applied if a suit does not fall within any of the earlier articles. There has been much discussion in the Courts of India with regard to the application of Arts. 142 and 144. If a suit falls within Arts. 142 the plaintiff must show that he has been in possession within twelve years of the suit. When Art. 144 applies the burden of proving adverse possession for this period is upon the defendant.

A discussion of the reported cases relating to Arts. 142 and 144 would be a most formidable task and in my opinion it is not necessary to undertake it. I consider that the Privy Council has indicated the application of these articles in *Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi*¹, *Muhammad Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh*² and *Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Garbar Ali Khan*³. In *Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi*¹, the plaintiffs had proved that formerly they were the proprietors of the land to which they alleged title, and from which they claimed to oust the defendants. They had, however, been dispossessed, or their possession had been discontinued, some years before the suit was brought by them and the land was occupied by the defendants, who denied their title. The Judicial Committee held that in these circumstances the burden was on the claimants to prove their possession at some time within the twelve years next preceding the suit. It was not sufficient for them to show an anterior title without proof of their possession within twelve years to shift the burden on the defendants of showing that they were entitled to remain in possession. In the judgment under appeal the Subordinate Judge who tried the case observed:

"When I showed above that the plaintiffs are the rightful owners of the disputed land, it is for the ryot defendants to show that they are entitled to retain possession of these lands."

Their Lordships' comment on this observation was this:—

"That, as a proposition of law, is one which hardly meets with the approval of their Lordships."

Their Lordships went on to say:

"This is in reality what in England would be called an action for ejectment, and in all actions for ejectment where the defendants are admittedly in possession and a fortiori where, as in this particular case, they had been in possession for a great number of years, and under a claim of title, it lies upon the plaintiff, to prove his own title. The plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title, and it is the opinion of their Lordships that, in this case, the onus is thrown upon the plaintiffs to prove their possession prior to the time when they were admittedly dispossessed, and at some time within twelve years before the commencement of the suit, namely, for the two or three years prior to the year 1875, or 1874, and that it does not lie upon the defendants to show that in fact the plaintiffs were so dispossessed."

In *Muhammad Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh*¹, the Privy Council pointed out that Art. 144 only gives the rule of limitation where there is no other article in the schedule specially providing for the case. Although the proprietary right would continue to exist until, by the operation of the law of limitation, it has become extinguished, where a claim comes within the terms of Art. 142, adverse possession is not required to be proved in order to maintain a defence. The plaintiffs' ancestors at the settlement in the Delhi District in 1843, declined to pay revenue in respect of a plot of land which had been held under rent-free tenure and had been resumed in 1838. The land was nevertheless assessed and the Government made an engagement with the villagers (the defendants in the suit) under which the villagers were to be put into possession. A revision of the settlement took place some thirty years later and the plaintiffs claimed possession on the strength of their title. According to the judgment under appeal to the Privy Council the plaintiffs were undoubtedly the proprietors before 1838, but the land had been since 1842 in the possession of the defendants, who had exercised all the rights of proprietors. There was no possession of any description in the plaintiffs or their ancestors since the period of the engagement, and under those circumstances the Judicial Committee held that whether any proprietary right existed did not matter. The question was whether there was a dispossession or discontinuance, and clearly there was. The proprietary right would undoubtedly continue to exist until by the operation of the law of limitation it had been extinguished; but upon the question whether the law of limitation applied, it appeared to be clear that the case came within the terms of Art. 142. Therefore it was unnecessary to embark upon an inquiry whether there had been adverse possession.

The decision in *Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Garbar Ali Khan*¹ was to the same effect. The suit was one for ejectment of persons who admittedly were at the date of suit in possession of the land. Their Lordships said:

"It lay upon the plaintiffs to prove not only a title as against the defendants to the possession, but to prove that the plaintiffs had been dispossessed or had discontinued to be in possession of the lands within twelve years immediately preceding the commencement of the suit. Their Lordships find that the plaintiffs failed to prove a title against the defendants to the possession of the lands in dispute or any part of them; they failed to prove that the lands, the possession of which they claimed, were not the lands covered by the sanad; and they failed to prove that they had been dispossessed or that their possession had been discontinued within twelve years before suit."

In view of these decisions of the Privy Council it cannot in my judgment be maintained that a person who proves title in a suit for ejectment has the right to the decree sought unless the defendant proves adverse possession for twelve years. The plaintiff is not entitled to succeed unless he shows in addition to title, that he has been in possession of the property within twelve years of the suit. The Privy Council has declared that to be the effect of the Art. 142 and that suits for ejectment come within that article. It may be a hardship that a person who proves a title to property should lose it to a trespasser unless he can also show that he has been in possession within twelve years of suit, but that is what the Limitation Act says and the Court must administer the law. And drafting his plaint in a manner which disguises the real nature of the suit will not help a plaintiff. In *Gopal Chunder Chakerbutty v. Nilmony Mitter*¹, Garth, C. J., pointed out a mere allegation of a tenancy will not relieve a plaintiff from the burden of proving that he or those under whom he claims had been in possession within twelve years. If it did that device might always be resorted to for the purpose of evading the law of limitation.

I will now proceed to examine the decisions of this Court to which reference has been made in the course of the arguments. The first decision is that of Ayling and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., in *Tanjore Palace Estate by its Receiver, Sundaram Aiyar v. Thiagaraja Pillai*². A mortgagee filed a suit to enforce a mortgage created in 1897 and obtained a decree for sale. At the auction sale held on the 5th September, 1906, the mortgagee purchased the property and obtained symbolical possession. A third party was in possession and the mortgagee did not institute a suit to recover possession until 4th September, 1918. The defendant who had been in possession from 22nd May, 1905, then claimed he had been in adverse possession for more than twelve years. The Court held that the possession of the defendant though adverse to the mortgagor did not affect the rights of the mortgagee or of the auction purchaser and consequently the suit was not time barred. This principle had been settled by a Full Bench of this Court (Wallis, C.J. and Sadasiva Aiyar and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.) in *Vyapuri v. Sonamma Bai Ammani*³, where it was held that the possession of a trespasser who has dispossessed a mortgagor, the mortgage being a simple one within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act, is not adverse to the mortgagee. In the present case dispossession took place before the mortgage was created and therefore it differs materially from that decided by Ayling and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ. The learned Judges went on to express the opinion that Art. 142 does not apply

"when upon the facts proved or admitted, dispossession cannot possibly have occurred before 12 years of the institution of the suit" and to observe that:

"The plaintiff is entitled to say that the allegation relating to his possession may be treated as superfluous and that he may be allowed to rest his case upon the footing that his suit is within 12 years of the accrual of his right."

Madhavan Nair, J., discussed the applicability of Arts. 142 and 144 in *Periya Jeeyangarswami v. Mahomed Esoof Sahib*¹. In that case a suit was brought by a dharmakarta of a devasthanam for possession of land which the devasthanam alleged had been leased to the defendants. The District Munsif who tried the suit found for the plaintiff, but his decision was reversed on appeal by the Subordinate Judge, who held that the alleged lease had not been proved and that Art. 142 applied. As the plaintiffs had failed to prove possession within twelve years of suit the Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal. On second appeal Madhavan Nair, J., held that the proper article to apply was Art. 144 and based his opinion on the judgments of the Privy Council in the *Secretary of State for India v. Chellikani Rama Rao*² and in *Kuthali Moothavar v. Peringati Kunharankutty*³ and of that of the Allahabad High Court in *Jai Chand Bahadur v. Girwar Singh*⁴.

In the *Secretary of State for India v. Chellikani Rama Rao*², the question was whether the Secretary of State in Council was entitled to incorporate into a reserved forest under the Madras Forest Act (V of 1882) certain islands which had been formed on the bed of the sea near the mouth of the river Godavari within three miles of the mainland. It was held that the islands belonged to the Crown and that the claimants had not proved adverse possession for a period sufficient to establish a right against the Crown. In the course of their judgment, their Lordships said:

"Nothing is better settled than that the onus of establishing title to property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting such possession. It is too late in the day to suggest the contrary of this proposition. If it were not correct it would be open to the possessor for a year or a day to say, 'I am here; be your title to the property ever so good, you cannot turn me out until you have demonstrated that the possession of myself and my predecessors was not long enough to fulfil all the legal conditions.' Such a singular doctrine can be well illustrated by the case of India, in which the right of the Crown to vast tracts of territory, including not only islands arising from the sea, but great space of jungle lands, necessarily not under the close supervision of Government officers, would disappear because there would be no evidence available to establish the state of possession for sixty years past. It would be contrary to all legal principles thus to permit the squatter to put the owner of the fundamental right to a negative proof upon the point of possession."

In *Kuthali Moothavar v. Peringati Kunharankutty*¹, the Judicial Committee observed:

"Standing a title in 'A' the alleged adverse possession of 'B', must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness which should qualify such adverse possession. But the onus of establishing these things is upon the adverse possessor. Accordingly when the holder of title proves, as in their Lordships' view he does with some fulness prove in the present case, that he too has been exercising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts, even although they might have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds."

I do not regard these pronouncements of the Privy Council as deciding the question of the effect of Art. 142. I regard them as laying down principles which have to be applied when the issue is confined merely to a plea of adverse possession in particular circumstances. As I have already pointed out the Privy Council had dealt with the application of Art. 142 in *Mohima Chunder Mosoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi*², *Muhammad Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh*³ and *Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Garbar Ali Khan*⁴, which Madhavan Nair, J., did not consider.

The Allahabad High Court in *Jai Chand Bahadur v. Girdar Singh*⁵, expressed the opinion that it was sufficient for the plaintiff in an ejectment suit to rest his case on title. There the plaintiff, who was a Zamindar, sued to eject the defendant from certain land which he alleged the defendant was in possession of as his licensee. The defendant denied the license and set up a claim of adverse possession. The claim of adverse possession failed and the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed on the title which he had proved as Zamindar. The question whether the license was ever granted or revoked was immaterial. This decision appears to be in direct conflict with the pronouncements of the Privy Council to which I referred at the outset.

The next decision of this Court is that of Phillips, J., in *Kuppuswami Mudaliar v. Chockkalinga Mudaliar*⁶. It was argued there that Art. 142 has no application to a suit for possession based on title but having considered the decisions in *Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neoghi*¹, *Muhammad Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh*² and *Dharani Kanta Lahiri v. Garbar Ali Khan*³, Phillips, J., rejected this argument.

In *Ramanujachariar v. Sundarachariar*⁴, Devadoss and Wallace, JJ., held that Art. 142 is applicable only to cases where the plaintiff alleges possession and dispossession in his plaint. They considered that notwithstanding that the plaintiff sets up a tenancy or license as the basis of the defendant's possession the article applicable is still Art. 144. The learned Judges did not however consider any of the authorities.

The latest decision of this Court is that of Venkatasubba Rao and Abdur Rahman, JJ., in *Alam Khan Sahib v. Karuppannaswami Nadan*⁵. In that case the plaintiff was a mutawalli of a Mohammadan trust. He sued for possession of immovable property and alleged that the defendants had been his tenants. It was held that the tenancy was not proved. The defendants did not appear at the trial, but the plaintiff's witnesses themselves stated that the property had never to their knowledge been in the possession of the plaintiff. It was held that the suit was governed by Art. 142 and not by Art. 144 and that it should be dismissed as the plaintiff had not proved his possession within the statutory period. The learned Judges, however, considered that on the facts of the case it was unnecessary to deal with the broad question whether in a suit in ejectment where the plaintiff's title is proved there rests any duty upon him of shifting the burden on the defendants to prove adverse possession under Art. 144.

I have said sufficient to indicate that in my opinion a plaintiff who is suing for possession of property in the occupation of another cannot rest his case on title alone. He must show that he has exercised rights of ownership by being in possession within twelve years of suit. It follows that in my opinion the observations which I have quoted from the judgment in Tanjore

*Palace Estate by its Receiver Sundaram Aiyar v. Thiagaraja Pillai*¹, cannot be accepted and that *Periya Jeeyangarswami v. Mahomed Esoof Sahib*² and *Ramanujachariar v. Sundarachariar*³ were wrongly decided.

In the present case the appellant and his predecessors in title have admittedly been out of possession since 1909 and this disposes of the appeal, but before I conclude it is necessary to deal with another argument advanced on behalf of the appellant. It is said that where the plaintiff is the purchaser at a Court auction held in execution of a mortgage decree his case does not fall within Art. 142. It is contended that that article only applies when the plaintiff is suing on his own title or on the title of the previous owner of the property and does apply when he is the representative of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. In *Kunhiamma v. Kunhunni*⁴ and *Maganlal v. Sankara Girdhar*⁵, it was held that the purchaser at a Court auction in execution of a mortgage decree is the representative of the mortgagor and the mortgagee, having acquired both their interests in the property sold. But this cannot mean that he is outside Art. 142. When the owner mortgages his property part of his interest passes to the mortgagee, but when the property is sold at a Court auction the purchaser has vested in him the full title of the mortgagor as it existed before the mortgage and the law which applies to the mortgagor applies to him. S. 2 (8) of the Limitation Act defines the word 'plaintiff' as including any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue. The appellant here derived his right to sue from the mortgagor. It is true that part of his interest in the property came to him from the mortgagor through the mortgagee but that does not warrant the assertion that different considerations apply when he is suing for the ejectment of a person in possession of the property which he has bought. In my judgment there is no substance in the last contention advanced on behalf of the appellant.

For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), Ss. 7, 8 and 9—"Decree"—Decree passed after the commencement of the Act—If liable to be scaled down.

On a promissory note executed on 29th October, 1929, a suit was brought on 3rd January, 1938, and the written statement filed on 30th January, 1938. Though Madras Act (IV of 1938) came into force when the suit was pending, the defendant failed to put forward a claim to have the debt scaled down in accordance with the Act and a decree was passed on 18th April, 1938, for the full amount claimed by the plaintiff. The defendant then applied for scaling down the debt on 29th April, 1938.

Held, reading the Act as a whole the word "decree" in Ss. 7, 8 and 9 must be taken to refer to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act and the decree passed after the commencement of the Act cannot be scaled down.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—The question that falls to be decided in this Revision Petition is whether a debt for the repayment of which a decree has been passed after the commencement of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, 1938, is liable to be scaled down in accordance with S. 8 of the Act when the debt is one incurred before the 1st of October, 1932. The facts are simple and not in dispute. The respondent sued the petitioner in S. C. S. No. 4 of 1938 on the file of the Court below for recovery of the principal and interest due on a promissory note executed on 29th October, 1929. The suit was brought on 3rd January, 1938, and the petitioner filed his written statement on 30th January, 1938. Though the Act came into force when the suit was pending, the petitioner failed to put forward a claim to have the debt scaled down in accordance with the Act, and a decree was passed on 18th April, 1938, for the full amount claimed by the respondent. Soon after the passing of the decree, however, the petitioner applied to the Court on 29th April, 1938, to scale down the debt and the application was dismissed on the ground that there is no provision in the Act for scaling down a debt in respect of which a decree has been passed after the Act came into force. The petitioner has preferred this Revision Petition and contests the correctness of that view.

Kotayya

Patanjali
Sastri, J.

It is argued that the non obstante clause in S. 7 and the words "whether the debt or other obligation has ripened into a decree or not" in S. 8 indicate that all debts incurred before the commencement of the Act should be scaled down irrespective of any decrees passed in respect of them, whether such decrees were passed before or after the commencement of the Act. These provisions are not free from ambiguity and may, at first blush, appear to lend some countenance to the contention of the petitioner. But on a closer examination of these sections in the light of other provisions of the Act and the scheme revealed thereby, it is fairly clear that the reference to decrees is intended only to extend the benefit of scaling down to debts which had ripened into decrees before the Act came into force. The provisions appear to envisage the state of things on the 1st October, 1937, and the reference to contracts obviously relates to contracts made prior to that date. It is therefore reasonable to assume that the word 'decree' which occurs in the same context is also used subject to the same qualification. It is significant that the machinery provided in Ss. 19 and 20 for 'amendment' of decrees by scaling them down in accordance with the Act, and for stay of execution pending proceedings for such amendment, are made applicable only to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act and there are no similar provisions in respect of decrees passed after the Act came into force. Similarly, S. 18 provides for 'amendment' of decrees passed before the Act in suits instituted after 1st October, 1937, by a proportionate reduction of costs also. These provisions which, in the case of decrees passed before the Act, expressly supersede the finality which attaches to decrees under the general law seem to indicate that, in the contemplation of the Legislature, the relief which the Act provides for agriculturists should be claimed and obtained before decree, where such decree happens to be passed after the commencement of the Act, and that the principle of finality should operate unimpaired in such cases. Indeed, if the Legislature intended to exclude the operation of this principle in the case of all decrees against agriculturists whether passed before or after the commencement of the Act, the provisions of S. 19 and the latter part of S. 18, sub-S. (1) relating to 'amendment' of decrees passed before the commencement of the Act would be meaningless and otiose.

Kotayya

Patanjali

Nor is there any apparent reason to suppose that the Legislature intended to introduce into the Act such a startling departure from the basic principle of all judicial proceedings, namely, that all available pleas in answer to a claim should be made the subject of enquiry before the Court passes the decree. It is one thing to provide relief to agriculturists by way of scaling down their debts even when such debts had already ripened into decrees before such relief was thought of, but it is a different thing to declare that even if they failed to claim, when they could have claimed, such relief before a decree was passed, they should nevertheless be entitled to claim it at any time afterwards. It may be laudable to rehabilitate agriculturists by a compulsory scaling down of their debts but it could be no part of this object to condone, and thereby encourage, their laches in the conduct of legal proceedings. On the other hand, having regard to the exproprietary nature of the provisions, Courts should watch with a jealous eye attempts to have the scope of the Act extended, under colour of interpretation, beyond what its terms expressly warrant. I am therefore of opinion, reading the Act as a whole, that the word 'decree' in Ss. 7, 8 and 9 must be taken to refer to decrees passed before the commencement of the Act.

The petitioner's learned Counsel placed reliance upon the decision of my learned brother Wadsworth, J., in Kanakaraju

*v. Achutaramanaraju*¹, as supporting his contention. The judgment is very brief and the question does not appear to have been fully argued and considered and my learned brother is now inclined, in the light of the fuller argument before us, to agree with the view expressed above. In *Somasundaram Chettiar v. Peria Karuppan Chettiar*², the suit was dismissed by the trial Court as barred by limitation but was decreed by this Court on appeal. An application for scaling down the debt was made to this Court before the decree was drafted and issued, along with another application to stop the drafting of the decree pending the disposal of the former application. This Court held that in those circumstances the judgment-debtor was entitled to have the debt scaled down. The broader question arising for decision in the present case was raised but the learned Judges observed that it was not necessary to deal with it on the facts before them. This decision therefore does not assist the petitioner. A decision of the Allahabad High Court in *Abdul Noor v. Brijmohan Saran*³ was also brought to our notice but it relates to the construction of differently worded provisions in the United Provinces Agriculturists' Relief Act and has no bearing on the interpretation of the provisions of Madras Act IV of 1938.

This Revision Petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

A proprietor of an estate was declared by the Governor in Council acting under powers conferred by the United Provinces Court of Wards Act (IV of 1912) to be incapable of managing his property. In a suit for a declaration that such declaration was ultra vires and illegal, .

Held, subject to the necessary limitation that good faith is essential to the validity of any declaration, the effect of S 11 is that no resort is left to the Court to any person desiring to challenge a declaration made under S. 8.

Held, further, that in arriving at the "gross annual profit" of a property for the purposes of S. 8 the amount of land revenue payable must be deducted, but no allowance must be made for any expenses of managing the estate.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment.

J. D. Casswell, K.C., R. K. Handoo and J. L. Roy for Appellant.—We submit in the first place that this action is not barred by S. 11 of the Act. The words "gross annual profits" mean what they say and their natural and ordinary meaning is the gross annual rents accruing to an owner of property without any deductions whatsoever, whether in respect of land revenue or of expenses of managing the estate. If the land revenue chargeable on the estate is not deducted, the interest due on all the appellant's debts is less than one-third of his gross income. By erroneously, as we submit, deducting the land revenue, the authorities have made the necessary calculation under proviso (a) of S. 8 on a false basis. If they had not deducted land revenue they would have been faced with a figure which by the clear terms of the proviso left them without power to make the declaration now challenged.

The word "gross" has but one meaning in the business world and it is difficult to reconcile its use in the section with the contention of the respondent that a large item of annual expenditure is to be deducted in determining the "gross annual profits" of an estate.

In S. 141 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act (III of 1901) land revenue is made payable out of the "rents, profits or produce" of property. Profits, therefore, are there regarded as ejusdem generis with rents or produce. The word 'profits' in the Act of 1912 ought therefore to be interpreted accordingly as similar to rent or produce; if the land revenue is stated in the one Act to be payable out of the profits it would seem to follow that that same word "profits" in the Act of 1912 must mean an income from property out of which land revenue has not yet been paid.

is not barred, it is submitted that no declaration by the Local Government founded on a mistake of law (as to the meaning of 'gross profits') can be made in accordance with the conditions precedent for such a declaration laid down in S. 8 (1), and if the Local Government are mistaken in their interpretation of 'gross profits' they have failed to establish the prerequisite set up by proviso (a) to S. 8 (1). The foundation for the jurisdiction to make a valid declaration is therefore lacking.

J. M. Tucker, K.C. and W. Wallach for Respondent.—It is submitted that the whole scheme of the Court of Wards Act shows that by "gross annual profits" is meant the income of the property after deduction of land revenue. The realities of the matter demand such an interpretation. The Act is concerned with the resources which an estate proprietor has with which to meet his obligations. It would not be likely to take those resources at a figure which must be necessarily diminished by the land revenue. Land revenue comes first and it is only when that has been paid that the remaining resources of the estate can be said to be available for interests on debts.

Even, however, if the Local Government were wrong in law in their interpretation of the Act, that would not mean that the essential prerequisite to the exercise of their jurisdiction to make a declaration was lacking. The prerequisite is, that the Local Government shall be satisfied that the conditions laid down by clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso to S. 8 (1) are fulfilled, not that they shall be fulfilled in fact. That prerequisite must necessarily have existed for the declaration complained of to have been made. Therefore the action is barred.

Cur. adv. vult.

4th March, 1940. Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by LORD PORTER.—The appellant is the proprietor of the Amethi estate in the Sultanpur District of Oudh in the United Provinces of India. On the 7th March, 1930, he was declared by the Governor in Council of the United Provinces who claimed to be acting under the powers conferred upon him by the United Provinces Act, No. IV of 1912 (commonly called the United Provinces Court of Wards Act, 1912) to be incapable of managing his own property.

Lord
Porter.

The appellant maintains that the declaration was ultra vires and on the 19th March, 1932, instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Allahabad claiming a declaration that the declaration above mentioned was wholly illegal and of no effect against the plaintiff. His suit was dismissed on the 14th May, 1934, and this dismissal was confirmed by the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad on the 31st March, 1937. From this decision the appellant has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The Governor's action was taken under Ss. 8 and 9 of the Court of Wards Act which are as follows:—

"8.—(1) Proprietors shall be deemed to be disqualified to manage their own property when they are—

(a) minors;

(b) females declared by the Local Government to be incapable of managing their own property;

(c) persons adjudged by a competent civil court to be of unsound mind and incapable of managing their own property;

(d) persons declared by the Local Government to be incapable of managing or unfitted to manage their own property—

(i) owing to any physical or mental defect or infirmity unfitting them for the management of their own property;

(ii) owing to their having been convicted of a non-bailable offence and being unfitted by vicious habits or bad character for the management of their own property;

(iii) owing to their having entered upon a course of extravagance;

(iv) owing to their failure without sufficient reason to discharge the debts and liabilities due by them:

"Provided that no such declaration shall be made under sub-clause (iii) or (iv) unless the Local Government is satisfied—

(a) that the aggregate annual interest payable at the contractual rate on the debts and liability due by the proprietor exceeds one-third of the gross annual profits of the property; and

(b) that such extravagance or such failure to discharge the said debts and liabilities is likely to lead to the dissipation of the property.

"(2) No declaration under clause (d) of sub-section (1) shall be made until the proprietor has been furnished with a detailed statement of the grounds on which it is proposed to disqualify him and has had an opportunity of showing cause why such declaration should not be made.

"9.—(1) The Local Government may direct the Collector or such other person as it may appoint, to make an inquiry into the circumstances of any proprietor and the extent of his indebtedness. . . ."

So far as they are relevant to this appeal the facts are as follows:—

On the 13th July, 1929, an enquiry under section 9 (1) of the Act of 1912 was instituted by the Local Government into the debts and liabilities of the appellant. After the enquiry the appellant received a letter from the Commissioner of Fyzabad, dated the 17th September, 1929, enclosing a statement of the loans contracted by the appellant; and a statement of the gross annual income, gross annual profits, and land revenue derived from his property. By the letter and statements the appellant was informed that his debts, totalled Rs. 14,45,160-7-9 on which the annual interest at the contractual rates amounted to Rs. 1,22,110-9-0; that the gross annual income from his estates amounted to Rs. 5,71,626-10-9; that the amount payable in respect of land revenue, etc., was Rs. 2,65,117-14-4; that the gross annual profits from his estates (arrived at by deducting the amount payable as land revenue, etc., from the gross annual income) amounted to Rs. 3,06,508-12-5; and that therefore the annual interest payable at the contractual rates exceeded one-third of the gross annual profits. Further the letter charged the appellant with failure, without sufficient cause, to discharge his debts and liabilities and said that such failure was likely to lead to the dissipation of the property. Finally the appellant was informed that, under S. 8 (1) (d) (iii), (iv), provisoes (a), (b) of the 1912 Act, he was liable to be declared by the Local Government to be incapable of managing his property, but that, under S. 8 (2) of that Act, he could show cause against such a declaration being made.

As a result of this communication the appellant attempted to show cause why no declaration should be made but was unsuccessful and, as stated above, the declaration was made.

From the statement sent to him it is apparent that in calculating whether the annual interest at the contractual rates exceeded one-third of the annual profits of his property, the Local Government in order to ascertain the gross annual profits of the estate deducted the land revenue from the gross annual income. If this deduction was rightly made it was evident that the annual interest on the appellant's debts exceeded one-third of the gross annual profits—if on the other hand the land revenue should not have been deducted, the annual interest on the debts is less than one-third of the gross annual profits.

Though some question of the right of the Local Government to deduct certain cesses and annual charitable contributions was also raised, it is conceded that they were not of sufficient amount to have any bearing on the question at issue, and in argument consideration of them was put aside. The sole question considered was whether land revenue was or was not rightly deducted before ascertaining what sum was to be regarded as the gross annual profits.

Altogether apart however from the question whether the construction which he put upon those words was accurate or inaccurate the respondent maintained that the appellant was prohibited from challenging the action taken by reason of the provisions of S. 11 of the Court of Wards Act. That section is as follows:—

“No declaration made by the Local Government under S. 8 or by the Court of Wards under S. 10 shall be questioned in any Civil Court.”

A number of other questions had been raised and argued before the Courts in India but before their Lordships the respondents rested their case solely upon the two points mentioned.

(1) It may be, as stated by Jessel, M.R. and repeated by Lord Bramwell in *East v. London Assurance Corporation*¹, that of itself the phrase “gross annual profits” has no definite meaning. It must take its colour from its surroundings. In the present case therefore it is necessary to consider those surroundings by an examination of the scheme of the Court of Wards Act, the way in which land tax is regarded in India and any provisions of the Land Revenue Act which bear upon the matter, in addition to the exact wording of S. 8 itself.

The object of disqualification under S. 8 is no doubt threefold—it will protect persons incapable of managing their own affairs—it will prevent the splitting up or as the Act itself says “the dissipation of the property” and in either event it will enable land revenue to be more easily and more certainly collected.

That the collection of land revenue is an important consideration is apparent both from the objects aimed at and from the fact that by S. 4 of the Act the Board of Revenue is made the Court of Wards for the United Provinces. Indeed in earlier schemes in respect of the disqualification of proprietors, the necessary provisions were contained in the Land Revenue Acts themselves, and even in the present Act the definition of proprietor is only reached by reference to “Mahal” and its meaning in the Land Revenue Act from time to time in force.

Moreover though minors, certain females and lunatics—to take three of the classes mentioned in S. 8 of the Act—may require protection whether their property be in land or personalty, it is to be observed that under that section only proprietors, that is, those beneficially interested in a mahal, are dealt with, and mahal primarily means a local area held under a separate engagement for the payment of land revenue.

1. (1885) 10 App. Cas. 438 at 456.

No doubt when once a proprietor is made a ward, all his property is, under S. 16 (1) of the Act, put under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, but the original assumption of wardship is only possible in the case of proprietors or landowners paying Land Revenue.

In considering the way in which land revenue is regarded in India no comparison with tenures in England is of much (if any) assistance. Its universality, its quantum, and the tendency of the Indian outlook to regard the Government as a sharer in all the produce of the land are matters of importance.

By S. 58 of the Land Revenue (United Provinces) Act of 1901 it is provided

"58.—(1) All land, to whatever purpose applied and wherever situated is liable to the payment of revenue to the Government, except such land as has been wholly exempted by special grant of, or contract with, the Government or by the provisions of any law for the time being in force.

"(2) Revenue may be assessed on land, notwithstanding that that revenue, by reason of its having been assigned, released, compounded for or redeemed, is not payable to the Government.

"(3) No length of occupancy of any land, nor any grant of land made by the proprietor, shall release such land from the liability to pay revenue."

But not only is the incidence of the revenue universal, it is also generally fixed at a sum varying from 40 to 45 per cent. of the total income. If in addition to this percentage the proprietor has encumbered his estate to the extent of one-third of the income, between 70 and 80 per cent. of the total receipts would be removed from his control and from 20 to 30 per cent.
only remain—a small margin from which to ensure the payment of revenue and the protection of the mahal against foreclosure or sale under any mortgages created by the proprietor.

In their Lordships' view these considerations inevitably lead to the conclusion that Land Revenue must be deducted in calculating the gross annual profit of a property.

Even apart however from these considerations the wording of S. 8 of the Court of Wards Act itself would lead their Lordships to the same conclusion.

Under proviso (a) to sub-section (iv) of S. 8 the contrast is between the aggregate annual interest payable by the proprietor and the gross annual profits—a phraseology which would naturally point to a contrast between what the proprietor received and the interest which he owed, and would so point none the less though it is the profits of the property and not of the proprietor which have to be considered. Indeed to substitute the former consideration would bring into account a matter which is obviously extraneous to the considerations with which the Legislature was concerned, namely, the profit derived by the proprietor from his personal estate. Moreover the words are “annual profits”—not “annual rent” or “income,” and seem to refer to some profits half way between the total income of the estate and the net profits remaining after the management expenses have been paid.

If the total produce or income of the estate had been intended it would have been easy enough to say so—indeed in S. 141 of the Land Revenue Act of 1901 land revenue is said to be a first charge on the rents, profits or produce of every mahal, as opposed to the phrase “gross annual profits” in S. 8 of the Court of Wards Act.

Moreover if land revenue is not to be deducted before the gross annual profits are arrived at in calculating the ratio of charges to profit land revenue would appear on neither side of the account, neither as a charge nor as a deduction from profits.

Therefore even accepting the view presented by the appellant that “gross profits” has of itself no definite meaning, their Lordships, bearing in mind the circumstances above mentioned, are of opinion that in the Court of Wards Act land revenue must be deducted but no allowance for any expenses of estate management must be made in arriving at the gross annual profit of the property.

This conclusion alone would involve the dismissal of the appeal, but the preliminary question whether any action in the Courts was possible having regard to the provisions of S. 11 of the Act was fully argued and is a matter of importance on which their Lordships think their decision should also be given.

Ss. 10, 11, 12 and 13 deal with the limitations of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court and are as follows:—

“10. A proprietor may apply to the Collector to have his property placed under the superintendence of the Court of Wards and the Court of Wards may, on being satisfied that it is expedient to undertake the management of such property, make a declaration to this effect.

"11. No declaration made by the Local Government under S. 8 or by the Court of Wards under S. 10 shall be questioned in any Civil Court.

"12.—(1) The Court of Wards shall assume the superintendence of the property of any proprietor disqualified under clause (b) or (d) of sub-S. (1) of S. 8 or in regard to whose property a declaration has been made under S. 10.

"(2) The Court of Wards may in its discretion assume or refrain from assuming the superintendence of—

(a) the property or person and property of any proprietor disqualified under clause (a) or (c) of sub-S. 1 of S. 8;

(b) the person of any proprietor disqualified under clause (b) or (d) of sub-S. 1 of S. 8.

"(3) The Court of Wards may assume the superintendence of the person of any minor, who has an immediate or reversionary interest in the property—

(a) of any proprietor disqualified under S. 8; or

(b) of any proprietor in regard to whose property a declaration has been made under S. 10.

"13. If the right of the Court of Wards to assume or retain the superintendence of the person or property of any disqualified proprietor is disputed by such proprietor or, if he be a minor or of unsound mind, by some person on his behalf, the case shall be reported to the Local Government, whose orders thereon shall be final and shall not be questioned in any Civil Court."

It will be observed that S. 11 is only concerned with action taken under sub-S. (1) (b) or (d) of S. 8, and under S. 10, that is, those cases in which a declaration is made, leaving the other cases in which superintendence of the property is assumed (or possibly all cases after it has been assumed or in which it is retained) to be dealt with by S. 13.

In terms S. 11 appears to prohibit the bringing of an action disputing the validity of a declaration made by the Local Government under those sub-clauses of S. 8. Some limitation must no doubt be put upon the generality of the provision in as much as good faith at any rate is required. The appellant, however, goes further and says that the Court of Wards is without jurisdiction and can be declared to be without jurisdiction by the Civil Court in all cases in which the preliminary requirements of S. 8 have not been fulfilled. So far as sub-Ss. (1) (b) and (d) are concerned the primary requirement contained in those sub-clauses themselves is merely that the Governor in Council should declare the proprietors incapable or unfitted to manage their own property.

Under (b) it seems impossible to put any limitation on that jurisdiction. Under (d) (i) (ii) (iii) and (iv) the matter again seems to be one for the discretionary judgment of the Local Government. It is conceivable that under (d) (ii) the jurisdiction only exists provided the proprietor has been in fact convicted of a non-bailable offence and that if this fact were non-existent the Local Government would be acting ultra vires in making a declaration, but it is difficult to imagine that in sub-Ss. (i) (iii) and (iv) and indeed in that part of sub-S. (ii) which concerns unfitness by reason of vicious habits or bad character, the Local Government should have an absolute discretion whereas in the final part of sub-S. (ii) its jurisdiction should be limited.

In argument before their Lordships however the allegation that the action of the Local Government was ultra vires was founded not upon the wording of the sub-clauses but upon the proviso to sub-clauses (iii) and (iv) and it was said that if the Governor in Council showed by his decision that he interpreted the phrase "gross annual profits" wrongly in law then he could be declared to have assumed an unjustified jurisdiction.

But in such an argument the same difficulty arises as is to be found on a consideration of the sub-clauses themselves. No logical distinction between fact and law was propounded to their Lordships and indeed it is difficult to see why a wrong calculation under proviso (a) should be unchallengeable, whereas a wrong view as to the meaning of "gross annual profits" should be open to question. Nor indeed is it easy to draw a distinction between fact or law on the one part and opinion on the other since proviso (b) by which the Local Government are equally governed is a matter of opinion alone.

Apart from a close analysis of S. 8 itself there are other reasons for thinking the decision of the Local Government to be unfettered. Under S. 8 (2) careful provision is made for a hearing of the proprietor's case before a decision is made, and in the case of sub-clauses (a) and (c) S. 13 expressly provides for the method which shall be followed if the right of the Court of Wards is challenged and the decision so attained is declared to be final.

Moreover the proviso itself expressly requires the satisfaction of the Local Government, not that of a Court and it is, in their Lordships' view, unlikely that a decision solemnly come to by the Governor in Council after full enquiry and when declared by the Act to be final, should thereafter be subject to review by the local Courts of the Province.

In coming to this conclusion their Lordships are in no way overlooking the importance of jealously scrutinizing the jurisdiction conferred on executive bodies or of giving no wider interpretation than is necessary to any limitation of the powers of the Court. But however carefully the liberty of the subject has to be guarded not only is there sound sense in making the decision of the Local Government final but it has also to be remembered that a right construction of the Act can only be attained if its whole scope and object together with an analysis of its wording and the circumstances in which it is enacted are taken into consideration.

From an examination of the Act alone their Lordships would have reached the conclusion that owing to the provisions of Ss. 11 and 13 of the Act no resort to the Courts was left in this case under S. 8, and the other circumstances to which their Lordships have referred so far from weakening have strengthened that conclusion.

Having reached a decision opposed to both the contentions put forward on behalf of the appellant they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Indian Income-tax Act (XI of 1922), S. 4 (2)—Income from foreign country—Assessee receiving remittance in British India—Whether amount assessable as income—Amount representing loan or overdraft in the foreign country—Inference to be made in the circumstances.

Where an amount mentioned, represented a sum of money remitted to the assessee in British India from Saigon in French Cochin-China on a date which fell within the year of account, and the income-tax authorities included the remittance in the assessable income of the assessee on the ground that it represented foreign profits received in British India within the meaning of S. 4 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, but the questions for decision were, whether the objection of the assessee that the remittance was not of income liable to be taxed under the section but came out of capital, being the proceeds of a loan borrowed in Saigon was correct, and therefore whether the amount was to be excluded in the calculation of the assessable income of the assessee.

Held, that a person who has income accruing to him in a foreign country is at perfect liberty to keep it there, or to spend or utilise it in that or any other country in any way he thinks fit. His liability to tax arises not because he makes the profits, but because he brings or receives them here. It is not necessary that he should receive those profits in the exact form in which they were made, but he must receive them here substantially as profits. If the remittance is traceable, and is traced to the assessee's foreign profits there would be ground for holding that the provisions of the Act are attracted, though even here it is necessary to exercise caution so as to avoid the error pointed out by the Privy Council in Income-tax Commissioner, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Advance Mills, Ltd., (1940) 1 M.L.J. 137: L.R. 67 I A. 115 (P.C.). On the other hand, it is equally clear that the mere existence of an overdraft cannot save foreign income from liability to taxation, as money paid out of the overdraft and remitted to this country is not necessarily the money of the lender, and may be that of the recipient. The question in each case is, what is the correct inference to be drawn and the Court is entitled to get behind appearances in order to get at the truth.

(1935) 19 Tax Cases 683, followed.

Case-law reviewed.

Case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras, under S. 66 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act is as follows:—

2. The petitioner derives income from property, cloth trade, money-lending and other sources within the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Tanjore Circle. He also owns certain house property in Saigon outside British India.

3. For the year 1936-37, he was assessed on a total income of Rs. 19,947 which included a sum of Rs. 10,000 received during the previous year (1935-36) from Saigon. The Income-tax Officer held this to be a remittance of income from Saigon in the following circumstances.

4. As stated already the petitioner owns a number of houses in Saigon from which he derives rental income. He also incurs a large expenditure there in respect of these houses by way of house and water taxes, repairs, etc. Between the 1st April, 1935 and 30th November, 1935, his collections from rent amounted to $18,906 so that by the 1st December, 1935, his net income of the year 1935-36 from the Saigon properties had amounted to $10,184. On the 7th December, 1935, he remitted $5,719 (equivalent of Rs. 10,000) to British India and the Income-tax Officer assessed this as a remittance of income. The petitioner contended before the Income-tax Officer that this was not taxable. His reasons were (1) that he had no income at Saigon available for remittance and (2) that the remittance was made out of amounts borrowed from the Banque Franco-Chinoise at Saigon. The contention that there was no income available at Saigon was found by the Income-tax Officer to be untenable on the evidence of the accounts. The other contention tracing the origin of the remittance to a loan taken from the Bank was also examined with reference to the accounts. It was found that the petitioner had opened a current account with the said Bank on 22nd June, 1933 and that on 24th June, 1933, he secured an overdraft of a sum of 15,000 from the Bank which he utilised for the following objects:—

$8,000 for remittance to headquarters for expenses in connection with a marriage.

$3,000 for payment of fees to a notary for settling a partition dispute between the petitioner and his deceased brother's legal representative.

$3,700 for repairs to the houses and payment of taxes. From the 24th June, 1933, all the rents collected were being paid into the Bank and whenever money was required for meeting expenses such as cost of repairs, taxes, cost of litigation, commission for collection of rent and re-payment of prior debts, sums were withdrawn from the Bank. The amounts withdrawn from the Bank and paid into it during the years 1933-34, 1934-35 and 1935-36 (up to 30th November, 1935) were as follows:—

	Withdrawals.	Payments.
1934-35 ..	$40,067	$45,255
1935-36 (1-4-35 to 30-11-35)	$15,165	$23,150

On 30th November, 1935, the net debit balance against the petitioner in the Bank account was $12,165. On 7th December, 1935, a sum of $5,719 (Rs. 10,000) was withdrawn from the Bank and remitted to British India. It is with reference to these facts that the petitioner contended that the amount remitted was a loan taken from the Bank. The Income-tax Officer overruled the contention and held that it was a remittance of income. The Assistant Commissioner upheld the Income-tax Officer's finding. Extracts from the orders of the Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner are appended, marked Exhibits A and B respectively. From a translation of the contract for opening of credit in current account (copy appended marked Exhibit C) now produced before the Income-tax authorities for the first time it is found that the petitioner was permitted to start a current account with the Bank and to overdraw in that account provided that at no time should the debit balance against the petitioner exceed $50,000. or translation of the mortgage guarantee, deed referred to in Article III of this contract has been produced.

5. The petitioner now requires me to refer to the High Court the following alleged question of law:—

"Whether on the facts set out above the sum of $5,719 or Rs. 10,000 could be deemed to be a receipt of income assessable under S. 4 (2) or whether there is any evidence for the conclusion that the sum of Rs. 10,000 sent on 7th December, 1935, was not borrowed money but was remittance of profits."

A copy of the application for reference filed by the petitioner is appended, marked Exhibit D. I have reframed the question as below, and refer it for the decision of their Lordships:—

"Whether on the facts of this case the sum of Rs. 10,000 was properly assessed under S. 4 (2) as a receipt of foreign income in British India."

6. My opinion on the question is as follows:—

There is no doubt that the petitioner's income in Saigon on the date of the remittance was in excess of the amount remitted to British India. This income was deposited in the Bank, and it was from that deposit that the sum of Rs. 10,000 was withdrawn and remitted to British India. The argument on which the petitioner bases his claim is that the existence of an overdraft in his Bank into which his rental receipts had been deposited and from which the remittance has been made precludes the possibility of any income being available for remittance. This argument is untenable as has been held in the case of *Fellowes Gordon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue*¹, the facts of which are almost parallel to those of the petitioner's case.

"A man may have an income in Ceylon and may receive remittances of that income in this country through an account in which he is debtor during the whole period in which the remittances are made. There is no difference between income arising from Ceylon and income arising from this country in that respect. A man may have an income and still be in debt, and the amount of his income may be remitted to him through the hands of his creditor."

In the light of these remarks, it is perfectly legitimate to hold that the amount received from Saigon was the petitioner's income which was available for remittance. I submit that the question should be answered in the affirmative.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The assessee derives income from immovable property, trade in cloth, money-lending and other sources existing within the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer, Tanjore Circle. He is also the owner of considerable house property in Saigon in Indo China. For some years he has kept an account with the Saigon branch of the Banque Franco-Chinoise and has the right to overdraw it to the limit of $50,000. On 1st April, 1935, his overdraft amounted to $20,149. It is unnecessary to embark on an inquiry into the purposes for which the $20,149 was used, but it is common ground that it was used in part for paying for repairs to the assessee's properties in Saigon and meeting taxes levied thereon. The period of account was the year from the 1st April, 1935, to the 31st March, 1936, and the assessee's net income from his Saigon properties during that year was $18,414. As the result of payments into his account of the income from these properties he had reduced his overdraft to $12,165 by the 30th November, 1935. On the 7th December, 1935, while the overdraft still stood at that figure, he withdrew from the account a further sum of $5,719 the equivalent of Rs. 10,000. The $5,719 represented a remittance which he made to British India, and the question which the Court is called upon to decide is whether this remittance represents a remittance of profits derived from his Saigon properties. After making the remittance the assessee continued to draw on the account for various purposes and to make payments in from the rents he received in Saigon. The payments in the account from the 7th December, 1935, to the end of the financial year amounted to $11,570 and the year closed with his overdraft standing at the figure of $9,441. It is conceded by the assessee that the $11,570 has been rightly treated as being net income. The assessee says, however, that the payments into his banking account both before and after the 7th December, 1935, should be treated as payments in reduction of the overdraft. He contends that inasmuch as throughout the year he was still overdrawn, in spite of his payments into the account from the income from his properties, the Income-tax authorities are bound to treat the remittance of $5,719 on the 7th December, 1935, as being a remittance of borrowed money. In the course of his argument Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar admitted that if the overdraft had been completely discharged by payments in of further profits after the new financial year commenced the position would have been different but the overdraft had not been paid off. On the other hand, the income-tax authorities say that the true position cannot be gathered by treating the payments into the account and the withdrawals as being entirely separate transactions. They maintain that the net result of the assessee's payments in and his withdrawals from the account is that he has reduced his overdraft by $12,695 and has remitted the balance of his total profits ($18,414 less $12,695) to British India.

I am unable to accept as being correct the contention of the assessee that payments into the account from his profits must be treated as separate transactions and regarded in toto as payments in reduction of the overdraft. I consider that the income-tax authorities are right in saying that the account must be examined as a whole and that when this is done the remittance cannot be treated merely as a remittance of the proceeds of a loan. The principles which govern this case are in my opinion to be found in the decisions in *V. V. R. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*¹, *Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. S. K. M. S. P. Meyappa Chettiar*² and *Fellowes Gordon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue*³.

In *V. V. R. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras*¹, a Bench of three Judges of this Court considered the case of a Nattukottai Chetty firm which was carrying on a banking business in Rangoon and Saigon with headquarters at Karaikudi in the Madras Presidency. The assessee firm received in Rangoon, which was then in British India, a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 from its agent in Saigon. The agent had been instructed by the Office at headquarters to borrow and remit that amount to the Rangoon branch. The remitted sum was made up of borrowings amounting to $59,000 and the realisation of outstanding loans. The question was whether the $59,000 represented a remittance of foreign profits. It was found that the Saigon branch had accumulated profits which were more than sufficient to cover the remittance and that it had repaid the whole of the borrowed amount within 28 days. It was held that the $59,000 represented in these circumstances a remittance from profits and not from capital. In Commissioner of Income-tax, *Madras v. S. K. M. S. P. Meyappa Chettiar*¹, this Court applied the same principle.

The facts in the case of *Fellowes Gordon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue*² are very similar to the facts in the present case. The assessee there had plantations in Ceylon and during each of the years ending the 5th April, 1928, and the 5th April, 1931, was for more than six months resident within the United Kingdom. In the year ending the 5th April, 1928, he received from his agents in Ceylon for the credit of his account with the National Bank of India, Limited, in London, a total sum of £2,200, and in the year ending 5th April, 1931, a total sum of £1,400. His income from his plantations in Ceylon during these two years was more than sufficient to meet the cost of the remittances. During the whole of the time when the remittances were taking place the assessee was indebted to his agents in Ceylon with whom he had an account. The account started with a debit balance of some Rs. 35,000 and ended with a debit balance of some Rs. 7,000. In the interval between the commencement and the end of the account there were very great variations, some upwards and some downwards, but at all material times the assessee had an overdraft with his agents. There were other transactions which affected the amount of the balance from time to time, but in so far as the balance was reduced, the reduction were due to no other cause than the payment into the account of income from the assessee's possessions in Ceylon. The case was decided by the Court of session in Scotland and the Lord President (Lord Normand) stated that he was unable to understand on what principle the assessee was to escape income-tax "upon the income arising from his Ceylon possessions on the full amount of the actual sums being remittances received by him in this country and ultimately traceable to his income." The Lord President went on to observe:

"It is suggested that the mere existence of an overdraft precludes his liability to tax on the ground that any money paid out of an overdraft and remitted to this country is the money of the lender and not of the recipient. Learned Counsel for the appellant did not hesitate to say that that would apply although there was a very large income in Ceylon, and an overdraft was specially arranged for the purpose of bringing this alleged principle into play. I am quite unable to accept that proposition. A man may have an income in Ceylon and may receive remittances of that income in this country through an account in which he is debtor during the whole period in which the remittances are made. There is no difference between income arising from Ceylon and income arising from this country in that respect. A man may have an income and still be in debt, and the amount of his income may be remitted to him through the hands of his creditor. I can see nothing in the case of *Kneen v. Martin*¹, which is in any way inconsistent with what I have just said. It is perfectly true that it may not be sufficient to say that you had an income in Ceylon and you have received remittances of less amount than that income in this country. But here the reasonable inference is that what was received in this country was not derived from some realisation of capital or from some capital account, but was in truth derived from the income arising from possessions in Ceylon; and I think that the Commissioners, on the facts of the case, were entitled to arrive at the conclusion at which they did arrive, and that the appeal should be dismissed."

As in that case the assessee in the present case had a debit balance with his bankers at the beginning of the period and a debit balance of lesser extent at the end of the period and it is not suggested, nor can it be, that the inference may here be drawn that the remittance was from the realization of capital. The assessee had made profits in Saigon far in excess of his remittance to British India. By merely increasing his overdraft to pay for the remittance does not mean that the remittance was in substance a remittance of borrowed money. Having made the remittance the assessee paid into the account out of his profits from his properties in Saigon far more than was necessary to meet the cost of the remittance. The Court must look at the substance of the transaction, and if it does that, I consider the proper conclusion to be drawn is that there was here a remittance of profits. If the assessee's contention was to be accepted it would mean that by manipulating an overdraft account kept abroad and keeping it permanently in debt an assessee would be able to escape taxation of his remittances of profits. The test is from where did the money for the remittance come and in the words of Lord Normand it must be ultimately traceable to his income in Saigon. I can see no difference in principle between the two cases.

I would answer the question referred by saying that on the facts of this case the remittance was properly assessed under S. 4 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as a receipt of foreign income in British India, and I would award the Income-tax authorities the usual costs granted by this Court in such cases, namely, Rs. 250.

King, J.—I agree.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—The question that has been referred for our decision is:

The amount mentioned represents a sum of money remitted to the assessee in British India from Saigon in French Cochin China on 7th December, 1935, a date which fell within the year of account 1935-36. The income-tax authorities have included this remittance in the assessable income of the assessee, on the ground that it represented foreign profits received in British India within the meaning of S. 4 (2) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922. The assessee objected that the remittance was not of income liable to be taxed under the section but came out of capital being the proceeds of a loan borrowed in Saigon; and he therefore claimed that it should be excluded in the calculation of his assessable income. This contention has been negatived by the Department, but at the request of the assessee, the Commissioner of Income-tax has referred the question set out above for the opinion of this Court.

The Commissioner's conclusion that the remittance was made out of profits available to the assessee in Saigon, is obviously in the nature of an inference drawn from facts proved, rather than a finding on a pure question of fact. There is no direct proof adduced to establish a connection between the profits available to the assessee in Saigon and the remittance in question, in the sense that it was wholly or in part identifiable with those profits. But such identification is not necessary, if in substance the remittance is shown to have come out of the profits, and is traceable to that source. The only question, which is of course a question of law is whether the inference drawn can be said legitimately to follow from the facts found.

The facts found are these: The assessee, a resident of the Tanjore District in this Province, owns extensive immovable properties in Saigon, in French Cochin China, from which he derives income in the shape of rents. In connection with these properties, he has to incur expenses, for taxes, repairs, etc. It also appears from the statement furnished by the Commissioner in response to the requisition contained in our Order dated 14th November, 1938, that the assessee also lends and borrows moneys in Saigon. His monetary transactions are carried on through the agency of the Banque Franco-Cinoise at Saigon, which has allowed him an overdraft at first limited to $15,000 but subsequently increased to $50,000. Into his account with this Bank his receipts by way of income from his immovable properties are paid from time to time. Whenever the need arose he drew on the Bank, utilizing the money drawn mostly in Saigon but occasionally for remittance to this country for his use here. In the beginning of December, 1935, the assessee's account with the Bank shows that he had overdrawn his account by $12,165.23. The remittance in question was, as I have said, made by the Bank on 7th December, 1935 and appears as a debit in the account of $5,719.33 which is the equivalent of the Rs. 10,000. By reason of the remittances the overdraft swelled to $17,884. Further credits and debits followed according as the assessee paid in or withdrew monies, and the account shows that there was at the end of the account year, that is, on 31st March, 1936, a debit balance of $9,441.70 against the assessee.

It has been found as a fact, that the net income of the assessee from his Saigon properties during the account year amounted up till the date of remittance to $10,184, the total income at the end of the year being $18,184 so that whichever date is taken, there was an available income far in excess of the amount remitted. But from this circumstance alone however, it is not right to infer that what the assessee received was income and not capital. The decision in *Fellowes Gordon v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue*¹, most relied on by learned Counsel for the Income-tax Commissioner concedes this position. The Lord President has said in that case:

"It is perfectly true that it may not be sufficient to say that you had an income in Ceylon and you have received remittance of less amount than that income in this country."

Any other view would inevitably result in consequences which the Statute could never have intended. A person who has income accruing to him in a foreign country is at perfect liberty to keep it there, or to spend or utilise it in that or any other country in any way he thinks fit. His liability to tax arises not because he makes the profits, but because he brings or receives them here. It is not necessary that he should receive those profits in the exact form in which they were made, but he must receive them here substantially as profits. If the remittance is traceable, and is traced to the assessee's foreign profits there would be ground for holding that the Act is attracted, though even here it is necessary to exercise caution so as to avoid the error pointed out by the Privy Council in Income-tax Commissioner, Bombay v. Ahmedabad Advance Mills, Ltd.,¹ where machinery purchased in a foreign country with profits made in that country and imported into British India was held not to give rise to a case of profits received within the meaning of S. 4 (2) of the Act. The illustrations given in the last paragraph of their Lordships' judgment are instructive, and indicate the danger of regarding traceability by itself as a conclusive circumstance. On the other hand, it is equally clear that the mere existence of an overdraft, cannot save foreign income from liability to taxation, as money paid out of the overdraft and remitted to this country is not necessarily the money of the lender, and may be that of the recipient. It is easy to imagine cases where under cover of an overdraft, income might in truth be remitted and received as such. A man might so manipulate his dealings with a Bank, as to leave a permanent debit balance against himself, and yet be held liable to be taxed on his remittances, if it appears that he took advantage of a banking facility as a convenient shield to conceal a receipt of profits. The position is not altered by the absence of deliberate intent, if the true nature and effect of the payments and withdrawals is such as to bring about the same result. There is no abstract rule of law to be applied generally to cases of this kind, and I do not understand the Court of Session to have laid down any such rule in the case cited. The question in each case is, what is the correct inference to be drawn and the Court is entitled to get behind appearances, in order to discover the truth.

A man with profits available in a foreign country and wanting to bring them into this country may find it necessary as a measure of convenience to obtain a temporary overdraft, or resort to a temporary borrowing which he proceeds to make good immediately out of his profits. In such a case, the remittance though in forma specifica is a remittance of capital, it is in truth a remittance of profits, and is taxable as such. The loan or the overdraft as the case may be and its repayment by the assessee out of profits may be so connected together by proximity of time or otherwise, as to lead to the reasonable inference that the remittance was in substance a remittance of profits though to start with, it might appear or is made to appear as if it came out of a capital source. The decision of this Court in *V. V. R. Firm v. Commissioner of Income-tax*¹ and *Commissioner of Income-tax, Madras v. Meyappa Chettiar*² are illustrations in point. Granting that ordinarily a remittance of borrowed money is not to be deemed a remittance of profits, Beasley, C.J., in the former case held that the facts there present, namely, the existence of available profits, the fact of the money being borrowed and remitted on the instructions of the assessee, and its repayment within 28 days out of profits collected, justified the finding that it was a remittance not of capital but of profits.

In this connection it may be mentioned that learned Counsel for the assessee fairly conceded that a remittance out of borrowed money beginning in a capital source, would be turned into a remittance of profit, the moment profits were realised and applied to the discharge of the loan. Otherwise it would become possible for an assessee to evade, for ever the payment of tax on his foreign income again and again brought into this country by adopting the expedient every time of first borrowing and then utilizing his income for the repayment of the loan borrowed. The presumption underlying the decision in *Scottish Provident Institution v. Allan*³, would come to the rescue of the department in such a case to prevent the Crown being cheated out of its revenue. If there are available profits more than sufficient to cover the remittance, the presumption to start with is that the remittances came out of the profits, though ultimately the question to a large extent is one of fact (19 Tax Cases 41). If I followed Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar aright, his only point was that the conversion of what was originally a capital remittance into a remittance of profits takes place not when the remittance is made but when the profits are applied to the discharge of the loan borrowed and remitted. In my judgment it is the proposition conceded, which I think was rightly conceded, that furnishes the true ground of decision in this case.

If we are to confine attention to the transactions of the assessee with the Banque Franco-Cinoise during the year of account only, the answer to the reference should in my view be in favour of the assessee. It should be mentioned at the outset that there is no suggestion in this case that the transactions with the Bank were other than what they purport on their face to be. There is no reason to think that the assessee has adopted a device or invented a scheme through the instrumentality of his banking account to find a way of escape from legitimate taxation. If an inference is to be drawn against him, it must be on a proper consideration of the transactions as disclosed in the account. That his ownership of the Saigon properties and his other affairs in that place rendered it genuinely necessary or expedient for him to spend or invest his money there is beyond question. As already mentioned he has had to incur expenses for repairs, taxes, etc., and has also lent and borrowed moneys in the foreign country. These are facts which have not been disputed, and indeed they plainly appear from the evidence before the Income-tax authorities. For these transactions he had drawn from his banking account in which all the withdrawals appear as debits against him. The debits amounted on 7th December, 1935, the date of the remittance, to the sum of $12,165. The whole of the assessee's income during the year, as found by the Commissioner being less than this sum, why is it to be presumed or inferred that the profits did not go in reduction of the overdraft, but were in part remitted to this country? I can see at least two reasons against such an inference being drawn, but none in its favour. It was perfectly open to the assessee to apply his income to the discharge of his debts to the Bank on his overdrawn account, with the double advantage of saving himself from the payment of interest to the Bank, and Income-tax to the Crown. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a man must be presumed to have done that which was to his advantage, rather than that would result in a detriment. In the second place, and again in the absence of anything to the contrary, when there are debits and credits in an account, the credits should be appropriated towards the discharge of the earlier debits serialim in the order of dates. This is the rule of appropriation laid down in *Clayton's case*¹, and embodied in Ss. 59 to 61 of the Indian Contract Act, and if this rule is applied to the assessee's account with the Bank, there would still remain a debit balance even after appropriating the whole of the year's income towards the debits prior to the remittance. On this footing there would be a total absence of profits from which the remittance could be deemed to have come.

With very great respect, I am unable to agree that Fellowes Gordon's case furnishes a parallel governing the decision of the present case. It was proved and found in that case as in this, that the assessee had derived profits in Ceylon in the years there in question to an amount in excess of the remittances. The account produced there unlike in the present case was of a fragmentary character, showing the debit balances on the various dates of the remittances against the assessee with no information regarding the dealings in the intervening periods. It does not appear from the statement of account there produced, whether or not the whole of the opening balance on 27th April, 1927 and 5th July, 1930, would be wiped out if the revenue receipts for those years had been appropriated in accordance with the rule in Clayton's case, whereas in the present case it is quite clear, it is the other way about. This difference in fact strikes me as a material one capable of affording a legitimate ground of distinction. It is also to be observed that the chief arguments on behalf of the assessee in that case were (i) that the account showed a debit balance at the date of each of the remittances and (ii) that it was not material to know from what source the advances made by his agent, were repaid. I may say at once that the first point affords insufficient basis for a correct inference. The second ignores what is to my view an essential source of material information. Against these arguments, the Crown contended, I think quite rightly, that the fact that his current account with his agent was overdrawn at the dates when the remittances were made was not sufficient evidence that the remittances were from a capital source. There are indications in the judgment of the Lord President that this insufficiency influenced the decision. He has drawn pointed attention to it by observing as follows:

"The account starts with a debit balance of some Rs. 35,000, and it ends with a debit balance of some Rs. 7,000. In the interval between the commencement and the end of the account there were great variations, some upwards and some downwards. We are not exactly informed what other transactions took place in Ceylon which affected the amount of the balance from time to time, but this much is certain, that, in so far as it was reduced, the reductions were due to no other cause than the payment into the account of his agents, of income from the appellant's possessions in Ceylon. It therefore appears that the income in Ceylon was in excess on the whole, of the total amount of the remittances received in this country by the appellant. That being so, I am unable to understand on what principle he is to escape income-tax upon the income arising from his Ceylon possessions on the full amount of the actual sums, being remittances received by him in this country and ultimately traceable to his income." (The italics are mine).

There is no reference in this judgment to the principle of appropriation arising by reason of the rule in Clayton's case or the presumed intentions of the party, as the necessary material for the application of the principle was not available. In its absence it would be perfectly legitimate, to hold that the presumption arising from Allan's case had not been rebutted, and I think that this was the real basis of the Lord President's conclusion. Otherwise it will be difficult to reconcile the decision with what the Lord President himself stated lower down in his judgment where he pointed out that the existence of profits, and the fact of a remittance are by themselves insufficient.

If the matter stood there, I should be prepared to answer the question referred in favour of the assessee. But the matter does not rest there. From the additional information furnished by the Commissioner it appears that in the year 1933-34, the assessee received a remittance of $8,000 from Saigon through his Bankers and out of this amount debited in the account, a portion only, namely, $1,680 or Rs. 2,300 had been taxed in 1934-35 as a remittance of profit, leaving a balance of $6,320 untaxed in that year. According to the proposition of law conceded by Mr. Venkatarama Sastriar and referred to already, if this balance has been wiped out by the revenue receipts of the year 1935-36, it is automatically turned into a remittance from an income source though in origin it was from a capital source. The income during the account year was admittedly sufficient to discharge the whole of that balance and certainly to the extent of the whole of the remittance sought to be assessed to tax. It is this fact, which in my judgment turns the scale in favour of the Crown and I accordingly agree in the answer given by my Lord though as I have explained, I rest my decision on a different ground.

There is nothing in the language of the proviso to S. 9 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act to suggest that it can be applied but once in the process of scaling down. The section makes provision for scaling down debts incurred on or after the 1st of October, 1932, and directs that if any part of the debt sought to be scaled down is found to be a renewal of a prior debt, that part should be deemed to be a debt contracted on the earlier date scaled down accordingly, but in doing so, if it is itself a renewal in part or in whole of a still earlier debt, the proviso comes into operation again; for it is an integral part of the mode of scaling down prescribed under the section.

Where the petitioner obtained a decree in 1937 against the respondent on a promissory note of 1935 which was in renewal of an earlier debt incurred in 1933 which in turn was the result of a settlement of 1931 in respect of dealings between the parties, on the question whether the proviso to S. 9 could be applied more than once, until the debt is traced back to the principal amount originally arrived at after the settlement mentioned above,

Held, that the object of the Legislature in enacting this provision is plainly to require the Court to trace the debt back through various renewals to the principal sum or sums originally advanced and scale it down under S. 8 or S. 9 as the case may be.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—The main question arising for decision in this C. R. P. is whether in scaling down a debt under S. 9 (1) of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, the proviso to that section can be applied more than once, until the debt is traced back to the principal amount originally advanced. The petitioner obtained a decree against the respondents in S. C. S. No. 447 of 1937 on the file of the lower Court on a promissory note executed on the 9th of April, 1935. This promissory note was executed in renewal of an earlier debt incurred in April, 1933, which itself was the result of a settlement in respect of dealings which commenced in June, 1931.

The petitioner's learned counsel contends that in scaling down the decree debt in question under S. 9 (1) of the Act, the Court can have regard to the earlier debt of April, 1933, but it cannot go further back to the commencement of the dealings in 1931 and scale down the debt under S. 8 with reference to the principal sums then advanced. We are unable to accept this contention. There is nothing in the language of the proviso to suggest that it can be applied but once in the process of scaling down. The section makes provision for scaling down debts incurred on or after the 1st of October, 1932, and directs that if any part of the debt sought to be scaled down is found to be a renewal of a prior debt, that part should be deemed to be a debt contracted on the earlier date and scaled down accordingly but in doing so, if it is itself a renewal in part or in whole of a still earlier debt, the proviso comes into operation again, for it is an integral part of the mode of scaling down prescribed under the section. We are of opinion that the object of the Legislature in enacting this provision is plainly to require the Court to trace the debt back through various renewals to the principal sum or sums originally advanced and scale it down under S. 8 or S. 9 as the case may be.

It was next urged that when the last promissory note on which the suit was brought was executed, there was an allocation of the prior payments towards interest and the note was taken only for the principal amount then found to be due and that there could be no question therefore of scaling it down. The respondents however denied such appropriation at the time and alleged on the other hand that the amount of the promissory note represented nothing but interest due on the original dealings. This is a question of fact on which the respondents' case has been accepted by the Court below, and we are not prepared to interfere with its finding in revision.

The Civil Revision Petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), S. 20—Property sold in execution and satisfaction entered—Delivery of property to purchaser—If can be stayed pending application under Ss. 19 and 23.

Merely because full satisfaction has been entered it does not mean that execution is at an end. If the property purchased by the decree-holder has not been delivered to him then execution is not at an end and S. 20 of Act IV of 1938 can therefore be applied to stay a delivery of possession.

: The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition against the order of the District Munsif of Kovvur dismissing an application under S. 20 of Madras Act IV of 1938 praying for stay of delivery of property in execution of a decree.

A simple money decree had been passed against the petitioner and in execution of that decree certain property of his was brought to sale and the sale was confirmed. A petition was put in for delivery of the property and at the time when this application under S. 20 was made, no orders had been passed on the delivery petition. The District Munsif, without giving any reasons for his opinion, stated that no execution petition was pending and dismissed the petition.

There would be a very serious hiatus in Madras Act IV of 1938 if there was no provision to stay delivery pending an application under Ss. 19 and 23 of the Act; but I am satisfied that no such hiatus exists. The terms of S. 20 are wide enough to cover a case of this sort. Delivery of property is the most important stage of execution and merely because full satisfaction has been entered up, it does not mean that execution is at an end. If the property purchased by the decree-holder has not been delivered to him, then execution is not at an end and S. 20 can therefore be applied to stay a delivery proceeding.

Some question has been raised whether in fact the petitioner has put in an application under S. 23 and whether, in case he has not, his proceedings under S. 19 would be infructuous. That question however does not arise at this stage, and the original petition under S. 19 asking the Court to stay the decree and set aside the sale and an amendment petition to make it clear that the application was also under S. 23 are still before the lower Court, and I do not wish to express any opinion on their merits.

The petition is therefore allowed and the interim order of stay passed at the time of admission made absolute pending disposal of the petitions in the Court below. The respondent will bear the costs of the petitioner in this Court.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Wadsworth, J.—This revision petition raises the question of the meaning of words "debts incurred before the 1st October, 1932," in S. 8 of the Madras Act IV of 1938. The transaction with which we are concerned is a decree dated 21st August, 1936, which itself is passed on the basis of a promissory note of 1928 which promissory note was in renewal of an earlier promissory note of 1925. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the debt to be scaled down is the decree itself and not the antecedent debt which formed the basis for the decree. He bases his decision on the definition of the word 'debt' in S. 3 of the Act which contains the words:

"Debt means any liability in cash or kind due from an agriculturist, whether payable under a decree or order of a civil or revenue court or otherwise."

He holds that since the definition of the word 'debt' covers one payable under a decree we must regard the decree as the starting point and since the decree was passed in 1936, it must be scaled down under S. 9 of the Act and not under S. 8. The learned Subordinate Judge has not, however, considered two provisions in the Act, which, in our opinion, render it impossible to hold the view which he expresses.

Firstly, we have the second part of S. 7 which says:

"No sum in excess of the amount as so scaled down shall be recoverable from him or from any land or interest in land belonging to him; nor shall his property be liable to be attached and sold or proceeded against in any manner in the execution of any decree against him in so far as such decree is for an amount in excess of the sum as scaled down under this Chapter."

This provision seems to contemplate the scaling down of the original debt notwithstanding a decree and it is difficult to give any meaning or purpose to this clause if the process of scaling down is to start with the decree. Secondly, we have the first clause of S. 8 which, in dealing with the way in which debts incurred before the 1st October, 1932, shall be scaled down, speaks of interest outstanding on the 1st October, 1937:

"Whether the same be payable under law, custom or contract or under a decree of Court and whether the debt or other obligation has ripened into a decree or not."

It seems to us impossible to give any effect to the words 'whether the debt or other obligation has ripened into a decree or 'not' if the debt contemplated in the initial words of the section is the decree itself. On the other hand this first clause of S. 8 seems quite clearly to contemplate the debt incurred before the 1st October, 1932, as the original debt which ultimately ripened into a decree, and consequently it must be the date of the original debt which is the governing factor and not the date of the decree. The inclusion of a decree in the definition of 'debt' in S. 3 (iii) of the Act is quite consistent with this view. For obviously there are many debts which start with the decree, as for instance, when there is a decree for damages, which of itself creates a debt bearing interest and liable in certain circumstances to be scaled down. Clearly the idea underlying these provisions is that when the decree merely enforces the payment of a pre-existing debt bearing interest, that pre-existing debt shall be regarded as the liability, the date of which shall govern the section to be applied.

This subject has come already before this Court, though there is apparently no considered decision of a bench hitherto. In *Kanakaraju v. Achutaramanaraju*¹, there is a very brief judgment of one of us, adopting the view which we have just adumbrated though it deals with another point which does not arise here. In *Narayanaswami Naidu v. Rajamanickam Pillai*², Horwill, J., has taken the same view even with reference to a compromise decree. We are not now concerned with compromise decrees; which may possibly be affected by different considerations. But it is to be noted that the learned Judge definitely regards the debt incurred before the 1st October, 1932, as the original liability which has ripened into the decree and does not treat the decree itself as the starting point. Other cases have been quoted before us in which this view has been tacitly assumed to be correct without any argument or consideration of the point involved. (Vide *Anandam v. Muthukumaraswami*³ and the decision of the bench in *Perianna v. Sellappa*⁴.)

Unfortunately the respondent, in the present case is not represented. But we have to express our gratitude to Mr. D. Narasaraju who has given us the benefit of his argument for the respondent as amicus curiae, he having gone into the subject with reference to another case posted for hearing by us in which a similar question arises. The only authority which he has been able to cite on behalf of the respondent is contained in a mere observation of Venkataramana Rao, J., in *Sreenivasa-chariar v. Krishniiah Chetty*¹, where the learned Judge merely remarks that there is a good deal of force in the contention that when the decree has been passed after the 1st October, 1932, it is governed by S. 9 of the Act. He gives, however, no decision to this effect and the matter does not appear to have been argued at length before the learned Judge. We are clearly of opinion that when there is a debt incurred before the 1st October, 1932, which has ripened into a decree after the 1st October, 1932, the scaling down must be governed by S. 8 and not by S. 9.

We therefore allow the petition and remit the matter to the lower Court with a direction to scale down the debt in accordance with this decision. The petitioner is entitled to costs.

The village Court was satisfied by comparison of the signature with that found on an admitted document and by a consideration of the admitted circumstances that the promissory note was executed by the defendant. The mere fact that a decree was given on a lesser degree of proof than would have been required by the Court of a District Munsif is not sufficient to constitute a material irregularity justifying interference in revision. adduced by parties. Before the suit of the appellants was filed in the lower Court the insolvent was adjudged an insolvent and as the properties of the insolvent were vested in the Official Receiver he was later made a party to the suit. The necessary leave of the Court was not obtained by the creditors for suing the insolvent. The main question for decision was whether the suit was maintainable without obtaining the leave of the Insolvency Court. Another incidental point in the lower Courts raised was whether S. 28 (2) of the Act applies to maintenance holders under the Hindu law.

JUDGMENT.—It cannot be disputed that the claim for (1) marriage expenses, (2) arrears of maintenance, (3) lump sum on account of residence and (4) clothing for first plaintiff was a claim for debts provable in insolvency. This together was over 90 per cent. of the claim put forward in the suit. Even as regards the claim for future maintenance I am not satisfied, having reference to the language of S. 34 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, that it is not a debt provable in insolvency. If it is not, it would seem that no insolvency proceedings against a Hindu with female relations entitled to maintenance, could be taken effectively.

The plaintiff being a creditor to whom the insolvent was indebted in respect of a debt provable under the Act was forbidden by S. 28 (2) of the Act to bring any suit against him without the leave of the Insolvency Court. The cases reported in *Jyanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma*¹ and *Suryanarayana Rao Naidu v. Balasubramania Mudali*², have little if any bearing on the question now at issue. They were cases of sales in execution in which delivery was resisted by maintenance holders. Here we are concerned with the legality of the filing of the suit. I agree with the lower Courts that S. 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act was a bar to this suit. This appeal is dismissed with costs of third respondent. Court-fee to be paid by the appellant.

The suits by the plaintiff-appellant, a member belonging to a Credit Co-operative Society, were for a declaration that certain orders made in 1933 and 1932 by the liquidator of the Co-operative Credit Society in question, determining the contribution payable by the plaintiff, were illegal and void and of no effect whatever as against him. The suits were resisted on the grounds, namely, (1) that there was want of notice as required by S. 80, Civil Procedure Code, and (2) that the suits were not maintainable without leave of the Registrar as required by S. 48 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act.

Held, that (1) the liquidator appointed by the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies to liquidate a private Co-operative Society, is not an officer in the service of the Government; hence the suits would not be defeated on the plea of want of notice as required by S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang
Row, J.

Pandrang Row, J.—These are appeals from the decree in two connected suits O. S. Nos. 1 and 12 of 1935, on the file of the District Court of Chingleput. The plaintiff was the same in both the suits and the defendant also was the same. The plaintiff is the appellant and the defendant, who is the respondent in these appeals, was described as the Uttukottai Co-operative Society by its Liquidator. The suits were for a declaration that certain orders made in 1933 and 1932 by the Liquidator of the Co-operative Credit Society in question determining the contribution payable by the plaintiff in the suits at Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 2,000 respectively were illegal and void and of no effect whatever as against the plaintiff. The suits were resisted on various grounds and they were tried together and disposed of in one and the same judgment by the District Judge. It is an unfortunate feature that in this case judgment was pronounced by the Court below more than a year after case had been closed.

On all the points except one, the findings of the Court below were in favour of the plaintiff. But the suits were dismissed, though without costs, on the sole ground that no notice had been given as required by S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In other words, it was only on the ground of want of notice that the suits were found to be not maintainable, and in other respects the findings were in favour of the plaintiff. The only point therefore argued in these appeals in the first instance, so to say, on behalf of the appellant is that the finding of the lower Court on the question of notice is wrong. S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure requires that unless notice is given at least two months before the suit, no suit can be instituted against the crown or against any public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity. In this case no notice whatever was given, and the contention on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that no notice is required because the defendant in the suit is not a public officer as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure [vide S. 2 (17)]. It has been contended that even assuming that the defendant in the suit is the liquidator and not the society, he cannot be regarded as a public officer within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure. In this connection perhaps it is desirable first to deal with two applications presented at a very late stage, namely, after the hearing of the appeal was over and just before judgment was to be delivered, one application in each appeal to amend the cause title so as to show the defendant as "the Liquidator of the Society" instead of "the Society by its Liquidator." It is enough to say as regards the oral application for permission to withdraw the suits, that it is not withdrawn, and there is no need to pass any other order on it except to dismiss it as it is withdrawn. As regards the first application for amendment of the cause title of the plaint, it would be highly undesirable from every point of view to allow applications of this kind which are made after the whole case is argued and the parties have an opportunity of knowing or at least guessing with some degree of accuracy what is going to happen to their case. It is not as if this objection to the maintainability of the suit in view of S. 48 of the Co-operative Societies Act was not raised in the trial Court, and the application to amend the cause title should have been put in much earlier. There is really no explanation forthcoming for the delay in making the present application. We are therefore not prepared to allow that application and it is accordingly dismissed. We may add, however, that the application to amend is absolutely contrary to what is alleged in the grounds of appeal, where it is contended that the defendant in the suit was the Co-operative Society and not the liquidator and therefore the question of notice did not arise at all. In other words, the main ground on which the finding of the Court below, which is against the appellant, was attacked was that the Court below failed to notice that the defendant in the suit was the Co-operative Society and not the liquidator, and of course, it was nobody's case that the Co-operative Society is a public officer. Apart from the fact that the suit is really directed against the society who is represented by the liquidator, because the society has been ordered to be wound up and a liquidator has been appointed by the Registrar, the question remains whether even a liquidator appointed by the Registrar can be regarded as a public officer within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is contended that he is a public officer because he is an officer in the service of the Crown. It is obvious, however, that qua liquidator he is not an officer in the service of the Crown, and it is not the case of either side that the liquidator as such receives any pay from the Crown or receives any remuneration for his duties as liquidator. The liquidator in this case is the Deputy Registrar of Co-operative Societies who, of course, in that capacity is a public officer. But that does not mean that when he is actually acting in the capacity of a liquidator of a Co-operative Society, he is an officer in the pay of the Crown or in the service of the Crown.

The only decision which has been relied upon by the Court below is the one reported in Liquidator, Yedha Society, Nimar v. Prag. Apart from the fact that in that decision it is merely stated without any discussion that a liquidator should no doubt be considered a public officer within the meaning of S. 2 (17) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the actual facts of the case show that it was not necessary in that case to give any notice to the liquidator because the suit was not brought against the liquidator in respect of any action of his. In other words, the observation was an obiter dictum. Another case which has been cited to us is the one reported in Liquidator of Society, Sanga Kheda Kalan Co-operative Bank, Hoshangabad v. Ayodhya Prasad Shrivastava, in which Pollock J. refers to the earlier decision of the Nagpur Court as one in which it was assumed without discussion that a liquidator is a public officer as defined in S. 2 (17) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The reason given by Pollock J. for holding that the liquidator is a public officer is that the liquidator was appointed by the Government and his duties are quasi-judicial. In other words, the proposition put forward in the case is that as the liquidator is appointed by the Government and performs public duties, he is an officer in the services of the Government when acting as the liquidator and therefore a public officer as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure. In the present case the liquidator is not appointed by the Government but by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. Even otherwise we find it difficult to accept the general proposition that because the liquidator is given quasi-judicial powers, the duties which he performs must necessarily be regarded as being public duties. Nor are we prepared to accept the proposition that every person who is appointed by the Government to perform public duties is a public officer. If that view were accepted it would follow that even a member or chairman of a local body appointed by Government would be a public officer. The word 'service' must necessarily mean something more than being merely subject to the orders of Government or to control by Government. We are unable to accept the view that a liquidator who is appointed by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies to liquidate a private Co-operative Society is an officer in the service of the Government, and this is the only ground on which it has been sought on behalf of the respondent to support the finding of the Court below. We are therefore of opinion that the present suits cannot be rightly defeated on the plea that no notice was given as required by S. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The decrees, however, of the Court below dismissing the suits have been supported on the ground that the findings on other points by the Court below in favour of the plaintiff appellants are wrong. The main point is whether the suit is maintainable in view of the provisions of S. 48 of the Co-operative Societies Act, which runs as follows:

"Save in so far as is expressly provided in this Act, no Civil Court shall take cognizance of any matter connected with the winding up or dissolution of a society under this Act, and when a liquidator has been appointed no suit or other legal proceeding shall lie or be proceeded with against the society except by leave of the Registrar and subject to such terms as he may impose."

Considerable reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant on the Bench decision in *Vaikunta Bhat v. Sarvothama Rao*¹. That, however, was a case which had to consider a similar provision in the Imperial Act, namely, S. 42 (6) which runs as follows:

"Save in so far as is hereinbefore expressly provided, no Civil Court shall have any jurisdiction in respect of any matter connected with the dissolution of a registered society under this Act."

In construing that provision it was held by the learned Judges that the liquidator in the case before them acted without jurisdiction and that therefore the Civil Court's jurisdiction was not ousted by S. 42 (6) of the Co-operative Societies Act of 1912. That was a case which is otherwise on all fours with the present case, because there also the question arose whether a person who had once been a member of a Co-operative Society could be rightly made to pay a contribution by an order of the Liquidator when he had not admitted his liability. In the case before them the contention was that the appellants had ceased to be members five years before the liquidation and it was held that it cannot be said that they had no right to ask the Civil Court to decide whether they were under any liability to contribute at all. That decision as well as the other decisions which have been mentioned to us were all of them with reference to the Act of 1912 and S. 42 (6) thereof. As will be seen from the words of the provisions of the law with which we have to deal, namely, S. 48 of the Madras Act VI of 1932, the second clause thereof is far more precise in its language than the provisions in the earlier Imperial Act. For it says that when a liquidator has been appointed (as in this case) no suit or other legal proceeding shall lie or be proceeded with against the society except by leave of the Registrar. There was no provision of this kind in the earlier Imperial Act for a suit being filed with the leave of the Registrar against a society after a liquidator was appointed. In this case it is admitted that the Registrar refused leave when leave was asked for, and we find it impossible to find any reason for ignoring the plain words of the provisions of law which are applicable to the present case and in particular, the second clause of S. 48 of the Act which is as clear as possible. It says that no suit can be instituted against a society when a liquidator has been appointed except by leave of the Registrar. This provision appears to us to stand in the way of the present suits, and though this point was not prominently placed before us in the argument and was certainly not referred to in the Court below, we are not able to find any out of the situation created by the new law. This finding, namely, that the suits are not maintainable in view of the provisions of S. 48 of Madras Act VI of 1932 is sufficient to dispose of these appeals. Nevertheless, as the other point, namely, the question of liability of the plaintiff-appellant has been argued at considerable length before us, it is perhaps desirable that we should briefly express our opinion thereon and all the more so because a special request has been made on behalf of the appellant that we should express our opinion on this point.

The point really is a simple one because the facts are practically undisputed. The plaintiff-appellant sent his resignation on the 4th June, 1930, to the Secretary of the Society and there is no doubt that that resignation was received by the Society and a meeting was held in the next month to consider the resignation. A copy of the letter of resignation appears also to have been sent to the Co-operative Department. The Society in its resolution dated 1st July, 1930 (vide Ex. II) resolved that the resignation should not be accepted. A copy of the resolution was sent to the plaintiff-appellant by registered post, but he appears to have declined to receive it. There can be no doubt that he was aware of the contents or at least of the fact that his resignation had not been accepted. On the 24th January, 1931, at a general body meeting of the Co-operative Society the plaintiff was present as a member and took part in it for some time, though he later on was asked to go out by the Chairman who presided at the meeting. It is argued on behalf of the respondent that these facts show that the resignation did not take effect and that the plaintiff-appellant really continued to be a member in spite of the letter of resignation sent by him on the 4th June, 1930. This argument assumes first that unless a resignation is accepted, it does not take effect in a case of this kind, and secondly, that the subsequent conduct of the plaintiff-appellant amounts to a withdrawal of his letter of resignation. As regards the first assumption, it appears to be really without foundation. In the case of an office in a private body like a Co-operative Society the law does not require that resignation should be accepted by the Society or anyone else before it takes effect. The by-laws of the Society are altogether silent as regards the mode in which a member ceases to be a member, and there is no reference to resignation in the Act or in the by-laws. There are one or two references in the Act to the withdrawal of members from the Society, and it is not contended that there can be no withdrawal or cessation of membership by means of resignation of membership. On the side of the plaintiff-appellant reliance has been placed on two English cases, Finch v. Oakel and Glossop v. Glossop. Finch v. Oakel was a case which related to the membership of the Bermondsey and Totherhithe Licensed Victuallers and Beer Sellers' Trade Protection Association and though the member who had resigned wanted subsequently to withdraw his resignation, the Society declared that he had ceased to be a member by reason of the resignation and it was held that he had really ceased to be a member as soon as his letter of resignation had been received by the Committee of the Association. In that case also the rules of the Association contained nothing as to the right of members to retire, this matter being left to be governed by the ordinary principles of law. In those circumstances it was held that he could withdraw from the Association at any moment of his own pleasure and without the consent of his fellow members or the Association and, therefore, that immediately the letter of resignation reached the Association, the member who sent in his letter of resignation ceased to be a member and he could again become a member only by following the rules regarding election of members framed by the Association and not by any withdrawal. In the latter case (Glossop v. Glossop), it was a director of a limited company who resigned his office as Managing Director. On the very day on which the letter of resignation came up for consideration before the special meeting of the Directors, an attempt was made to withdraw the resignation. But the meeting resolved that the office of Managing Director had been vacated. In this case, however, the matter of resignation was provided for in two articles of the Company; which provided that the office of Managing Director should be vacated on the happening of any of the contingencies mentioned therein, whereby the office of Director should be vacated. The provision regarding the latter subject was to this effect:

"The office of director shall be vacated (inter alia)—if by notice in writing to the Company he resigns his office, provided that the vacation of office shall not take effect unless the directors shall pass a resolution to the effect that he had vacated his office within six months from the happening of the event whereby such director had vacated his office."

In these circumstances, it was held that the Managing Director could not withdraw his resignation without the consent of the company and that he had vacated his office by his letter of resignation and that the resolution of the Board at the special meeting was effective and valid. On the side of the respondent, reliance has been placed on two decisions, namely, those in *Sundarsana Rao v. Christian Pillai*¹ and *Kuppu Govinda Chetti v. Secretary, Co-operative Central Bank, Conjeevaram*². The latter case does not contain any discussion of the question but is important in view of the fact that it deals with the very letter of resignation with which we are concerned in this case, though the decision therein was in respect of the resignation of the office of the President of the Society, the petitioner being also the President of the Society and the letter of resignation being in respect of both his office as president as well as his membership. We are not concerned in the present case with the office of president but only with the question of membership and therefore the decision in *Kuppu Govinda Chetti v. Secretary, Co-operative Central Bank, Conjeevaram*², is not very helpful. The discussion of the point is contained in *Sundarsana Rao v. Christian Pillai*¹, where the same learned Judge, namely, Sir Vepa Ramesam relies to a great extent on certain passages from the text books on elections. The case with which the learned Judge had to deal was one in which the question for decision was whether a certain person had ceased to be an Honorary Magistrate prior to a certain date on which he was elected as a member of a local body. In that case it was held that an Honorary Magistrate does not cease to hold his office by his resignation but only on the acceptance of his resignation. "That decision. is certainly supported by the extracts from the text books on elections which relate to public offices or offices in local bodies in England which cannot be ordinarily given up without either the consent of some authority or the payment of a fine for non-acceptance. That case was one similar to *The Queen v. Corporation of Wigan*¹, which was decided in the light of the statutory provision in S. 36 of the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882, which provided that a person elected to a corporate office may, at any time, by writing signed by him and delivered to the town clerk, resign the office, on payment of the fine provided for non-acceptance thereof. The reasoning which would apply to resignation of a public office of this kind cannot be applied to resignation of the membership of a society with which we have to deal in the present case. We are therefore inclined to the view that the membership of the plaintiff-appellant ceased immediately his letter of resignation reached the Society, that is to say, early in June 1930. There was thus an immediate cessation of his membership, and there being no provision for withdrawal of any resignation in the Act or in the by-laws, he could become a member again only by complying with the provisions relating to membership. The mere fact that he refused to receive the copy of the resolution sent to him in July 1930 and that he attended a meeting of the Society some six or seven months later, has no legal effect so far as this question is concerned in the sense that these subsequent circumstances could not possibly restore him to his membership or make him a member after he had ceased to be one. It follows from this that the plaintiff-appellant ceased to be a member more than two years prior to the orders complained of in the present suits and to the liquidation.

The only other point which perhaps deserves some reference is the question whether the liquidator acted within his jurisdiction in these circumstances. So far as this point is concerned the decision of the Bench in *Vaikunta Bhat v. Sarvothama Rao*², appears to us to hold the field and, being a case clearly in point, has to be followed unless it is declared not to lay down the law correctly. Reliance has also been placed on two decisions of the Lahore High Court which are to the same effect, namely, *Mukand Lal v. Liquidator, Malhotra Bank, Hafisabad*¹ and *Anjuman-i-Imdad Qarza Bahami v. Mehr Din*². In view of the fact that these decisions relate exactly to the present point, whereas the other cases, and in particular *Secretary of State for India v. Meyyappa Chettiar*³ and cases of that description, deal with other enactments, it does not seem necessary for us to consider in detail the question whether the cases dealing with other enactments really affect the present question having regard to the decisions which deal with the exact point, which arises in these cases. On these points we are inclined to decide in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. Nevertheless his appeals must fail and the suits must stand dismissed because of the absence of leave from the Registrar for the institution of the suits which, in our opinion, is required by the provisions of S. 48 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act VI of 1932. Having regard to the circumstances of these cases, we think the just course to follow with regard to costs is to direct the parties to bear their own costs in this Court, the appeals being dismissed and the memorandum of cross-objections also.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), S. 4—Applicability—Suit on promissory note—Courts being closed for summer recess—Assignment of note on reopening date—Suit filed on same day—Maintainability.

The promissory note on which the petitioner sued was dated 10th May, 1930. There was an endorsement of payment on 8th May, 1933, which gave a fresh period of limitation, and so the suit on the note had to be filed on or before 8th May, 1936. On that date, however, the Courts were closed for the summer recess. On the reopening day, namely, on 1st June, 1936, the payee under the promissory note assigned his rights in the promissory note to the petitioner, who filed the suit thereon the same day.

Held, that S. 4 of the Limitation Act was applicable to the case, and the suit was consequently saved from the bar of limitation.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of District Munsiff of Puthur in S.C.S. No. 208 of 1936.

P. Sritlara Rao for Petitioner.

T. Krishna Rao for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following:

JUDGMENT.—The promissory note on which the petitioner sued was dated 10th May, 1930. There was an endorsement of payment on 8th May, 1933, which gave a fresh period of limitation; and so the suit had to be filed on or before 8th May, 1936. On that date however, the Courts were closed for the summer recess. On the reopening day, 1st June, 1936, the payee under the promissory note assigned his rights in the promissory note to the present petitioner, and on the very same day the petitioner filed the suit. The District Munsiff of Puthur, in whose Court the suit was filed, held that the suit was barred by limitation. He relied on the observation of the Chief Justice in the Full Bench decision of this Court in *Fatma Bi v. Nagoorkhan*¹, to the effect that S. 4 did not extend the period of limitation. He was of opinion that as at the time when the assignment was made the suit was barred, no rights passed to the assignee under the assignment. He therefore, although finding all the other points raised in favour of the petitioner, dismissed the suit.

All that happens after the lapse of three years after the creation of a debt is that the debt cannot be enforced in a Court of Law. The debt does not cease to exist; nor does the relationship of creditor and debtor. As Beasley, C.J., said in *Fatma Bi v. Nagoorkhan*¹, there was on the date of the reopening of the Court an enforceable debt. The question that arose in that appeal was whether a person who could have filed the suit on the reopening of the Court but was unable to do so because the debtor was adjudged an insolvent, could prove in insolvency; and S. 46 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act came up for consideration. That section says that all debts to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent shall be deemed to be debts provable in insolvency; and the Full Bench held that on the date of the insolvency, which was the day when the Court reopened, that is, more than three years after the debt had been incurred, the debtor was still subject to the debt. If on the date of the assignment there was a debt, then there was nothing to prevent the creditor assigning it to some other person. A debtor might well pay his debt even though it were barred by limitation and one would expect an honourable debtor to do so. The lower Court is therefore clearly wrong in saying that on the date of the assignment there was no interest that could be assigned.

Thimmanna
Bhat
v.
Althappa
Adyanthaya

A decision of Beaman, J., in Visram Vasudeo Thakoor v. Tabaji Balaji Wagh has been referred to by the learned advocate for the petitioner in support of his contention that the petitioner was entitled to sue; but that learned Judge, differing from a Bench decision of his own Court in *Bai Hemkore v. Masamalli*², adopted a reasoning which has since been held to be erroneous both in his own Court and in other Courts. As to the actual point that is raised here, Beaman, J., had very little to say. He argued on an analogy from a case where an acknowledgment took place during the Court recess after the period of limitation had expired. A decision on which some reliance has been placed by the other side is one of King, J., in *Chidambaram Chettiar v. Venkatasubba Naik*³. That was a case where an acknowledgment took place beyond the period of limitation but during the recess. S. 19, which saves limitation in the case of certain acknowledgments made within the period of limitation prescribed, says that

"Where before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit . . . in respect of any property or right, an acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing . . . a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed."

The wording of S. 3 of the Limitation Act indicates that S. 4 does not lengthen the period of limitation prescribed; for it says

"Subject to the provisions contained in Ss 4 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted . . . after the period of limitation prescribed therefor . . . shall be dismissed."

So that suits to which S. 4 can be applied are therefore clearly not suits instituted during the period of limitation prescribed. S. 4 deals with one of the exceptions to the general rule that a suit filed after the period of limitation prescribed shall be dismissed.

Whether, on the date of the reopening of the Court the petitioner could maintain the suit against the respondent would depend on the wording of S. 4, which permits of a suit being filed on the reopening of the Court beyond the period of limitation. S. 4 runs:

"Where the period of limitation prescribed for any suit . . . expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit . . . may be instituted . . . on the day that the Court reopens."

The period of limitation prescribed for the filing of the suit with which we are now concerned expired while the Court was closed; and S. 4 says that when that is the case, the suit may be instituted on the date when the Court reopens. S. 4 therefore directly applies to the present case and the suit was therefore maintainable, and should have been decreed in the petitioner's favour.

The petition is accordingly allowed and the suit decreed with costs.

The respondent has filed an application under S. 8 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act for scaling down the debt. That application will be transferred to the lower Court for disposal; and the decree passed by this Court will be subject to the result of that application.

Where a new electric line is laid it might be desirable that certain trees which prevent the laying of the line should be cut down and further it may be necessary to cut down other trees because they are so close as to be a potential danger to the line. In such cases, the engineer has no power to cut the trees himself. He may apply to the Magistrate for a decision as to what trees the owner is bound to clear away. Where trees are cut by exercising authority under S. 10 (d) the magistrate is bound to award compensation. The award is open to reconsideration by the District Judge under S. 16 (3). Petitions under Ss. 115 of Act V. of 1908 and 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of East Tanjore at Negapatam dated 5th October, 1936, and passed in O.P. Nos. 37 and 44 of 1935 respectively.

R. Sundaralingam for Petitioner.

The Government Pleader for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In laying a line for the conveyance of electric power in connection with the Pykara scheme it was necessary to take it through a tope of the petitioner situated in Anavadapathi village. It appears that the engineer in charge of the scheme proceeded to cut down certain trees in the petitioner's tope and when he objected, the engineer applied to the Sub-Magistrate under S. 18 (1) of the Indian Telegraph Act, which Act applies also to electric power lines and the magistrate ordered the petitioner not to interfere with the engineer in the cutting down of the trees. Apparently acting under S. 18 (2), he passed an order which has been filed as Ex. IV, which evaluates all the trees which were cut by the engineer. The petitioner then applied to the District Judge under S. 16 (3) of the same Act with regard to the quantum of compensation awarded. The learned District Judge thought that S. 16 (3) did not apply; and held that the case of the petitioner was covered by S. 18, which says that the Magistrate's order is final and the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain any complaint about the inadequacy of the compensation awarded.

S. 18 contemplates action by a Magistrate on the application of the telegraph authority; but not direct action of cutting down trees by the telegraph authority itself. Moreover, S. 18 only applies to the cutting down of the trees after a line has been erected; because S. 18 (1) begins "if any tree standing or lying near a telegraph line". If a telegraph line does not exist, there can be no tree standing near a telegraph line. On the .. Respondent (Plaintiff).

Evidence Act (I of 1872), Ss. 74 and 65 (e)—Statements by assessee in support of his return furnished under Income-tax Act, S. 22—Whether public documents within S. 74, Evidence Act—Certified copies of—Admissibility under S. 65 (e) of Evidence Act—Income-tax Act, S. 54—If a bar.

In a suit on a lost promissory note certified copies of statements filed by the plaintiff in support of his income-tax return, were tendered in evidence to prove the notes,

Held, it would be putting an unwarranted restriction on the words "Documents forming the acts or records of the acts" to say that they should be confined to those parts of an income-tax record which the Income-tax Officer has himself prepared and to exclude documents which he has himself called for or which have been admitted to the record for the purposes of the assessment. The statements would be public documents within the meaning of Evidence Act, S. 74 and certified copies of the same would be admissible in evidence as secondary evidence under S. 65 (e) of the Evidence Act. There is nothing in S. 54, Income-tax Act, which prohibits a party from putting in evidence a certified copy of an income-tax return.

dated 13th February, 1933. The former promissory note formed the subject-matter of O. S. No. 14 of 1935 against which A. S. No. 234 is preferred. The execution of this promissory note was admitted but the defendant (appellant) pleaded that it was discharged except for a small amount. The second promissory note formed the subject-matter of O. S. No. 28 of 1936 (against which A. S. No. 235 is filed) and its execution is totally denied by the appellant. The promisee (plaintiff) was a well-to-do Vaisya money-lender and it is common ground that up to 28th March, 1934, he and the defendant, an important Mokhasadar, were on very friendly terms and had considerable dealings. On 1st February, 1934, the defendant made over the income from some of his lands to his wife for a term of years and it is said that this transaction made the respondent uneasy about his advances to the appellant. On 17th February, 1934, both the parties were at Ellore and it is alleged that the respondent accompanied by P. W. 2, who is admittedly a member of the same community and indebted to the respondent, visited a vakil (P. W. 3) who also belongs to the Vaisya community and who is the legal adviser of P. W. 2. That vakil was asked to draft a promissory note in renewal of previous debts due from the appellant to the respondent, the promissory note to be executed both by the appellant and his wife because of the alienation in the wife's favour already referred to. The plaintiff's case was that the vakil was shown both the promissory notes not only the note for Rs. 9,000 and odd but also the note for Rs. 24,400 and that he prepared a draft with reference to those two notes which were to be renewed by the joint promissory note. It is alleged that in the same evening the draft was handed over to the appellant in the shop of P. W. 2 and that an arrangement was made that the appellant should send word to the respondent, so that the latter might come to the appellant's house for the execution of the new promissory note. The respondent lives at Chintalapudi, the appellant at Pothapur some five miles away from Chintalapudi.

On 28th March, 1934, there was a meeting of the Chintalapudi Taluk Board of which both the plaintiff and the defendant were members. It is alleged that there was on that day some slight misunderstanding between them arising out of a vacancy on the District Educational Council. There is nothing to show, however, that there was any serious quarrel and the incident is only referred to on behalf of the appellant as indicating that the appellant would not be very likely to send an invitation on the following day to the respondent. It is by no means clearly established that any real misunderstanding did in fact arise. On 29th March, it is alleged that the appellant sent his servant, G. Sitayya, who has not been examined, to the respondent to ask him to come on the following day with the notes to Pothanur for the execution of the joint promissory note. On the same evening, it is alleged that the appellant himself visited the respondent and told him that he and his wife would execute a fresh promissory note and asked him to bring the prior notes. At the same time he is alleged to have borrowed a further sum of Rs. 300.

On 30th March, 1934, the respondent went to Pothanur accompanied by his brother Sitayya (who has not been examined) and a dependent (P. W. 22) in a cart driven by D. W. 2. D. W. 2 denies that he drove the cart and even denies that he knows how to drive a cart and there is reason to think that he has been won over. The party is said to have met P. W. 12 and P. W. 17 on the way to Pothanur and to have told them the purpose of their journey. P. W. 12 is indebted to the plaintiff and P. W. 17's evidence is contradicted by D. W. 1 with reference to the object with which he had gone out that day. Little importance can be attached to either of these witnesses. When they arrived at the appellant's house, the respondent and his companions were asked to go and get their food and return afterwards. They are alleged to have had a meal in the house of the village school master (D. W. 10) who has been examined to deny this occurrence. He is, however, obviously subject to the influence of the appellant and no weight can be attached to his denial. When the respondent and his companions returned to the appellant's house shortly after noon, it is alleged that the proceedings were witnessed by three independent witnesses. One is P. W. 4, a Christian, employed in a Ghintalapudi tannery, who is said to have gone there accidentally when going on his rounds collecting skins. He is mentioned as an eye-witness in the report to the police made the same evening and there is no apparent reason for him to be introduced into the case unless he was actually present. He generally supports the respondent's story. Besides him three other persons belonging to the village of Ganicherla, four miles from Pothanur are said to have been present. They are P. Ws. 5 and 6 and another man who has not been examined. Their presence is not mentioned in the complaint to the police. The P. Ws. 5 and 6 are both indebted to the plaintiff. They are said to have gone to the respondent's house to buy timber. They support the respondent's version of the occurrence but the fortuitous presence of these persons who are indebted to the respondent at the time of this occurrence must necessarily be suspicious and the suspicion is enhanced by the omission of their names from the complaint to the police. No great weight can therefore be attached to their evidence.

The respondent's story of the occurrence at 1 P.M. on the 30th of March is briefly this:

He and his party were sitting on the verandah. The appellant went inside to call his wife and came out saying that his wife was behind the door, she being a lady who does not appear in public. The appellant said that he would read the notes to his wife and asked the respondent for them. The respondent handed over the whole bundle of promissory notes. The appellant began reading out the note for Rs. 24,400 and suddenly rushed into the house with the notes in his hand and bolted the door from inside. He then called to his servant Subbayya, whose presence is spoken to by all the respondent's witnesses, and told him to drive the respondent's party away. Then some 25 or 30 of the appellant's servants came with sticks and drove them out. The respondent and his companions returned on foot to Chintalapudi, meeting P.W. 12 and another on the way. P.W. 12 is significantly another of the plaintiff's debtors and his evidence carried the matter little further.

At 10 P.M. on the night of the 30th, the respondent made a complaint to the Chintalapudi Police. This complaint (Ex. XIII) states that the appellant was indebted under the two promissory notes, the second of which was in respect of the respondent's wife's money, that as a result of the conveyance of the appellant's property to his wife, the respondent pressed for payment and on the invitation of the appellant went to Pothanur with his brother and P.W. 22 taking "the aforesaid promissory notes" and it mentions the cart driver D.W. 2. The appellant asked them to come back at noon so that all the old promissory notes could be read over to his wife. Ex. XIII then describes briefly the incident in the afternoon mentioning the presence of P.W. 4. There are certain significant omissions from Ex. XIII. The most important is that it says nothing about the respondent's brother Mallayya to whom the major portion of the money due under the promissory note for Rs. 24,400 is alleged to have been originally due. It does not mention the presence of P.Ws. 5 and 6 nor does it refer to the witnesses who are said to have met the respondent on his way to and from Pothanur.

This complaint was investigated by the police. On 4th April, 1934, the respondent made a statement to the police which is Ex. XVII. In that statement he says that the promissory note for Rs. 24,400 was executed in substitution for two debts due under promissory notes by the appellant to the respondent's wife and his brother Mallayya. The respondent was apparently asked if this larger promissory note was mentioned in his ledger and he said that he would search for the ledgers and then say and that he could not say if that amount was entered separately in another book or if it was entered in the usual book and he could not say if he had opened a ledger in his wife's name. He said that he had taken his account books on the first of April to show to his Vakil with reference to a civil suit and had handed them over to his younger brother and that he would make a fuller statement after sending for the books from Ellore. It must be conceded that the terms of the statement to the police do not suggest that the respondent at that time was confident that the details regarding this transaction for Rs. 24,400 would be found in his ordinary accounts.

The criminal case against the appellant failed and subsequent revisional proceedings were also unsuccessful. The respondent thereafter filed first a suit on the admitted promissory note for Rs. 9,000 and odd and it was only after this suit had made some progress that the further suit was filed on the promissory note for Rs. 24,400 and the two suits were clubbed together for trial.

There are numerous circumstances in this case which have made it very difficult to come to a confident conclusion. Prima facie the evidence adduced by the respondent regarding the occurrence at Pothanur is such as to give rise to suspicion. Nearly all the witnesses who speak to this occurrence are his castemen or demonstrably persons amenable to his influence. The delay in filing the criminal complaint was sufficient to permit of some exaggeration if the complainant had been so minded. The omission of reference to Mallayya's debt in Ex. XIII, the addition to the original story of several apparently interested witnesses and the non-committal attitude of the respondent on the 4th of April when questioned about his accounts, were also circumstances which would justify a suspicion that we had to deal with a story which was undergoing developments; and it may well have been that these suspicious factors led to the failure of the criminal case. On the other hand, there are many circumstances which prevent us from rejecting the respondent's story as a completely false story, though no doubt it was supported by a considerable volume of dubious evidence. It cannot be denied that something must have happened at Pothanur on the 30th of March which led to the complaint (Ex. XIII) and we see no reason to doubt that the incident which led to this complaint was witnessed by the tannery employee (P.W. 4). Otherwise, there is no apparent reason for including his name in that complaint. It was probably also witnessed by the cart driver, D.W. 2, who has been prevailed upon to deny all knowledge of the occurrence. The defence story is a complete denial of the whole occurrence coupled with a denial of the execution of the promissory note for Rs. 24,400 and the prior notes which led up to that transaction and also with a story of discharge of the earlier promissory note except for a sum of Rs. 500 and odd. Now, it seems to us clear that the defence evidence must be to a great extent, if not entirely, false evidence. It is common ground that the respondent and the appellant, both men of influence and position, were on very friendly terms up to the 30th of March, 1934. The slight incident on the 28th, even if true, was admittedly not of such importance as to affect their generally friendly relationship. In such circumstances, it is incredible that the respondent, a rich Vaisya money-lender, would have invented out of nothing at all a completely false story of an outrageous crime whereby he could fasten upon his friend a liability for approximately Rs. 34,000, which was not true at all. It would of course be quite conceivable, if there had been a violent quarrel between the parties connected with the admittedly genuine promissory note for Rs. 9,000 and odd and resulting in the destruction or appropriation of this promissory note, that the respondent might have utilised the interval between this incident and his complaint to exaggerate the story and add to it a false claim for Rs. 24,400; and in such circumstances it is conceivable that the appellant might have retaliated by putting forward a false story of discharge of the admitted promissory note and have denied the whole occurrence in order to support his false story of discharge. Such a theory would explain the delay in the complaint and its omissions, the hesitations of the respondent in his first statement to the police and the anxiety of the respondent to add to his witnesses a number of persons subject to his control who would support the details of his story. It would also explain the anxiety of the appellant to repudiate the whole occurrence, his unwillingness to produce his own accounts and the not very convincing evidence adduced by him of the discharge of the earlier promissory note. But such a theory can only be entertained in the absence of reliable evidence that this promissory note for Rs. 24,400 was in existence before the 30th of March. If the respondent can prove that this large debt was evidenced by a promissory note which had been in his possession long before this alleged occurrence on the 30th March, 1934, it is incredible that he would have concocted a false story of the loss of this promissory note instead of simply filing a suit upon it. We are unable to accept the theory that there was no occurrence at Pothanur on the 30th of March, 1934 and unless it is possible to show that the respondent's story of what happened that day has been exaggerated probably by the inclusion of a promissory note for Rs. 24,400 which did not exist amongst the documents lost on that day, the only possible inference from the appellant's denials, from the false evidence which he has adduced, from the suppression of his accounts and from the failure to examine his two servants Sitayya and Subbayya who are alleged to have taken part in this occurrence, is that the respondent's story must be substantially true.

The main question in this case therefore becomes the question whether the existence of this promissory note for Rs. 24,400 before 30th March, 1934, has been satisfactorily demonstrated.

Now, the evidence of the earlier existence of this debt, apart from the statements of the plaintiff and witnesses interested in him, on which much reliance cannot be placed, consists of (1) the respondent's own accounts, (2) the evidence of the vakil (P. W. 3) regarding what he saw on 17th February, 1934, and (3) Exs. H and E, certified copies of the profit and loss statement attached to the respondent's income-tax return and the statement on which it was based, which were apparently filed on or before 17th May, 1933, before the income-tax Officer. The accounts show entries corroborating the story of the execution of the promissory note for Rs. 24,400 on 13th February, 1933, with corresponding credits in favour of the plaintiff's brother and wife relating to liabilities originally due from the appellant to them which the respondent had taken over in return for the execution of this note. The ledger entries are not signed and a good deal of attention has been devoted to the question whether the respondent always took in his ledger the signatures of persons executing promissory notes at his house. It seems to have been his usual practice to do so, but not his invariable practice. It has been pointed out that the adjustment entries relating to the credits to respondent's wife and brother are in isolated pages of the ledger and that all these ledger entries might well have been interpolated—an allegation which receives some confirmation from the respondent's own non-committal statement to the police (Ex. XVII). The entry in the day book finds its place in chronological order and is prima facie good evidence of the transaction, more especially as the general truth of the respondent's account does not appear to have been seriously attacked by the lower Court. But it is to be noted that the respondent maintains his day book in a loose leaf system similar to that ordinarily adopted by Marwaries; and any account maintained in loose leaf form must necessarily be less convincing than a similar account maintained in a bound book.

The evidence of the vakil (P. W. 3) was not seriously attacked in cross-examination except to the extent that his memory of the details of what he saw was challenged. He definitely says that he saw two promissory notes, one for more than Rs. 20,000 and the other for Rs. 10,000 and odd executed by some Mokhasadar of Pothanur. His evidence is not very precise or accurate. The vakil in question belongs to the same community as the respondent, but he does not appear to have had any previous connection with the respondent though respondent's debtor, P. W. 2, was his client. There is no apparent reason to conclude that P. W. 3 was not trying to speak the truth. He may, however, have honestly thought that he remembered details about which he had been subsequently told.

The most conclusive piece of evidence on this question of the previous existence of the promissory note for Rs. 24,400 is provided by Exs. E and H which are certified copies of the income statement and profit and loss statement, the latter purporting to have been signed by the plaintiff on 17th May, 1933, the former of which sets forth this debt of Rs. 24,400 as due to the respondent. There is, however, a serious difficulty with reference to the admissibility of this evidence. Objection was taken to it at the time when it was tendered and we deem it necessary to refer to a Full Bench the question of its admissibility in view of the decision of our learned brothers Burn and Stodart, JJ., in the case of *Mythili Ammal v. Janaki Ammal*¹. In our opinion the evidential value of these Income-tax documents is such that if they are admitted, the correctness of the lower Court's conclusion is clear. If they are to be rejected, we shall have to decide hereafter whether the remaining evidence is sufficient to establish the pre-existence of this note for Rs. 24,400 which, if established, seems to us, in view of the defendant's denials and suppressions, to warrant the decree which has been given.

The legal difficulty may be briefly stated. Exs. E and H are both certified copies. If the original is a public document within the meaning of S. 74 of the Evidence Act, then the certified copies are good secondary evidence of that original under S. 65 (e). If these statements are not public documents, we are unable to see how the certified copies can be admitted into evidence under any other clause of S. 65 of the Evidence Act. S. 74 defines public documents as documents forming the acts or records of the acts (1) of the sovereign authority, (2) of official bodies and tribunals, and (3) of public officers, legislative, judicial and executive, and the term includes also public records kept in British India of private documents. The question is whether an income-tax return and the statements accompanying it form part of the record of the act of the Income-tax Officer who makes the assessment. In the case just referred to, the learned judges decided, without quoting any authority other than the statutory provisions, that it was the policy of the law that statements made in income-tax returns should not be used in evidence against the person making them or against any one else, that income-tax returns could not be proved by secondary evidence and that the income-tax return was not part of the record of the act of assessment and not a public document as defined in S. 74 of the Evidence Act. In coming to this conclusion, the learned judges appear to have been greatly influenced by the provisions of S. 54 of the Indian Income-tax Act which prohibits the disclosure by any public servant of particulars contained in an income-tax return or statement. Now quite clearly this section applies only to disclosures and does not prohibit the Income-tax Officer from giving to the person who made the return a copy of that return. In fact, we are informed that the departmental orders expressly provide for the giving of such a copy to the assessee on application. It seems to us that there is no ground of public policy which would prevent such an assessee from using in evidence such a copy when it has been granted to him. Nor are we convinced that the ground of public policy is a sufficient reason for excluding from evidence any document which is legally admissible under the Evidence Act and is not excluded by any statutory prohibition. This view has been adopted in the case of *Venkataramana v. Varahalul*¹, a decision of Varadachariar and Pandrang Row, JJ., anterior to the decision of Burn and Stodart, JJ., but apparently not brought to their notice. Varadachariar and Pandrang Row, JJ., were actually dealing with a copy of a statement recorded by the Income-tax Officer which clearly was a public document and they held that certified copies of such a statement were admissible notwithstanding the provisions of S. 54 of the Indian Income-tax Act. The learned Judges refer to a decision in *Anwar Ali v. Tafosal Ahmed*², wherein a single Judge held that income-tax returns being made confidential by S. 54 of the Income-tax Act, certified copies of such a return could not lawfully be given and if given could not be used in evidence. In *Devidutt v. Shriram Narayandoss*³, a Bench of the Bombay High Court held that certified copies of an income-tax return could not be given in evidence, because the return is not a public document within the meaning of S. 74 of the Evidence Act and that the prohibition in S. 54 of the Indian Income-tax Act was sufficient to warrant the view that a certified copy could not be lawfully obtained and would not be admissible in evidence if obtained. It seems to us that these decisions raise a question of far-reaching importance. With all respect to the learned Judges who have held otherwise, we do not consider that the prohibition against the disclosure of the contents of an income-tax return can have any bearing on the admissibility of the contents of that return filed at the instance of the person who made it. If the income-tax return is a part of the record of the act of the Income-tax Officer making the assessment, a certified copy of the document can lawfully be given, subject to the prohibition against disclosure in S. 54 of the Indian Income-tax Act. If it has been so given, then by the terms of S. 65 of the Evidence Act it is, no matter who produces it, good evidence of the original, provided that the original is a public document; and we do not think that considerations of public policy can warrant its exclusion from evidence. If an income-tax return is not a public document, as being part of the record of the Act of the assessing officer, it is difficult to see how a plaint or written statement in a civil suit or a complaint in a criminal case can be deemed to be public documents such as can be proved by the production of certified copies. It is the almost universal practice of the Courts to grant certified copies of such documents and to admit them in evidence, though the admissibility of a certified copy of a plaint appears to have been successfully challenged in one or two cases, not of this High Court. We are inclined to the view that an income-tax return being the basis of the Income-tax Officer's assessment, must be treated as part of the record of the act of assessment and must therefore be regarded as a public document of which a certified copy can be given in evidence. The matter, however, being the subject of somewhat conflicting rulings of Benches of this High Court, we refer to a Full Bench the following question:

"Whether a profit and loss statement and a statement showing the details of net income, filed by an assessee in support of his return of income furnished under S. 22 of the Indian Income-tax Act are public documents with reference to S. 74 of the Evidence Act of which certified copies would be admissible under S. 65 (e) of the Evidence Act."

This appeal coming on for hearing in pursuance of the aforesaid Order of Reference, the Court (Sir Alfred Henry Lionel Leach, Chief Justice, Mr. Justice King and Mr. Justice Somayya) expressed the following

Leach, C.J.

OPINION.* The Chief Justice.—Before proceeding to examine the provisions of the sections of the Indian Evidence Act mentioned in the question under reference, it is desirable to state the effect of S. 54 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922, as in some cases where certified copies of the income-tax documents have been tendered in evidence its provisions have been misunderstood and misapplied. Sub-S. (1) of S. 54 of the Indian Income-tax Act states that all particulars contained in a statement made, return furnished or accounts or documents produced under the provisions of the Act, or in evidence given in the course of proceedings under the Act other than proceedings under Chapter VIII (which relates to offences and penalties) or in a record of an assessment proceeding, or a proceeding relating to the recovery of a demand shall be treated as confidential, and, notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, no Court shall be entitled to require a public servant to produce a document referred to in the section or to give evidence thereon. Sub-S. (2) provides for the punishment of a public servant who unlawfully discloses particulars of an income-tax matter. Sub-S. (3) sets out the occasions on which disclosure can lawfully be made. It is not necessary to set them out as the provisions of sub-S. (3) have no application here and have no bearing on the reported decisions which have relation to the application of S. 54.

While S. 54 prohibits the disclosure, except on specified occasions, of matters connected with an assessment to income-tax and prohibits a Court from requiring a public servant to produce the documents mentioned in the section or to give evidence in respect of them, it does not follow that the Court may not admit in evidence a document which falls within S. 54 (1). This will depend on whether the document is admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. Paragraph 85 of the notes and instructions compiled by the Income-tax department for the guidance of its officers states that the following persons shall, in practice, be allowed to inspect or to receive copies: (1) In any case the person who actually made the return; (2) any partner (known to be such) in a firm registered or unregistered to whose income the return relates; and (3) the manager of a Hindu undivided family to whose income the return relates, or any other adult member of the family who has been treated as representing it. There is nothing in S. 54 to prohibit this practice and it is only right that a person who is concerned with an assessment should be allowed to obtain copies of the documents relating to his assessment to income-tax should he so desire, and if copies are supplied he may put them in evidence in a suit if the Evidence Act allows it.

I will now turn to the relevant provisions of the Indian Evidence Act. S. 74 says that the following documents are public documents:—

- (1) documents forming the acts or records of the acts,—
 (i) of the sovereign authority,
 (ii) of official bodies and tribunals, and
 (iii) of public officers, legislative, judicial and executive, whether of British India, or of any other part of His Majesty's dominion or of a foreign country;
 (2) public records kept in British India of private documents.

S. 75 states that all other documents are private. S. 76 provides that every public officer having the custody of a public document, which any person has a right to inspect, shall give that person on demand a copy of it on payment of the legal fees therefor, together with a certificate written at the foot of the copy that it is a true copy. S. 77 says that certified copies may be produced in proof of the contents of the public documents or parts of the public documents of which they purport to be copies. Therefore, if a document is a public document, it may be proved by means of the production of a certified copy. Private documents must be proved by primary evidence, except in such cases where secondary evidence is permitted under the provisions of S. 65. Clause (e) of that section allows secondary evidence to be given when the original is a public document within the meaning of S. 74. If an income-tax return or a statement filed in support of it is a public document within the meaning of S. 74, certified copies will be admissible under S. 65 (e). The answer to the question whether a document of this nature is a public document depends on whether it is a document forming an act or the record of an act or acts of an Income-tax Officer. Before stating my opinion on the question I will first refer to certain of the cases which have been quoted in argument.

In *Anwar Ali v. Tafazol Ahmed*¹, a single Judge of the Rangoon High Court held that income-tax returns being made confidential by reason of S. 54 of the Income-tax Act, and the disclosure of their contents being a punishable offence, certified copies cannot be admitted in evidence. The Court did not consider the effect of S. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act and decided against the admissibility of the certified copies submitted on the ground that S. 54 of the Indian Income-tax Act made the issue of copies unlawful and made the disclosure of the particular contents in the return an offence punishable with imprisonment. In my opinion there is here a misconception. S. 54 does not make the issue of a certified copy of an income-tax return to an assessee unlawful. The return is a confidential document and cannot be disclosed to a third party, but there can be no objection to the maker of the return, having a copy for his own purposes if he so desires. So far as the assessee is concerned he is not bound to treat the document as confidential.

A Bench of the Bombay High Court considered the question of the admission of certified copies of income-tax returns in *Devidutt Ramniranjandoss v. Shriram Narayandas*¹ and held that they were not admissible, but the decision was based on a different ground from that given by the Rangoon High Court in *Anwar Ali v. Tafosal Ahmed*². The reason given here was that the assessee had no right to inspect the original documents in the custody of the Income-tax Officer and the latter was not bound to give certified copies to the assessee on demand. It was considered that the words 'right to inspect' in S. 76 of the Evidence Act exclude all such documents as a Government officer has a right to refuse to show "on the ground of state policy or privilege, etc." But an Income-tax Officer would not be fulfilling his duty if he refused to allow an assessee to inspect his own return. If he did so he might be placing an assessee at a disadvantage when the assessee was objecting to an improper assessment. The Bombay High Court, however, considered that there was nothing in the terms of S. 54 of the Income-tax Act and the intention of the Legislature underlying it, prohibiting an assessee from giving secondary evidence of the contents of the return made by him or on his behalf or of the assessment order made upon him or his firm on that return, where such secondary evidence would be admissible under the Indian Evidence Act. Where the original cannot be produced the best secondary evidence must be a true copy.

A Bench of this Court (Varadachariar and Pandrang Rao, JJ.) held in *Venkataramana v. Varahalu*³, that a certified copy granted to an assessee of a statement made by him on oath before an Income-tax Officer is admissible in evidence and there is nothing in S. 54 of the Income-tax Act or any of the provisions of the Evidence Act which precludes its admissibility. The statement was regarded as being a public document because it was a statement recorded by the Income-tax Officer and therefore a document forming a record of his act. Though they did not accept the Bombay interpretation of S. 76 of the Evidence Act the learned Judges concurred in the opinion expressed by the Bombay High Court in *Devidutt Ramniranjan-doss v. Shriram Narayandas*¹, that an income-tax return is not a public document. They did not say so, but it is to be gathered from their judgment that they did not regard an income-tax return as a public document because it is prepared by the assessee.

The question whether an income-tax return is a public document was discussed at some length by a Bench of this Court (Burn and Stodart, JJ.) in *Mythili Ammal v. Janaki Ammal*² and the conclusion arrived at was that it is not a public document within the meaning of S. 74 of the Indian Evidence Act. The learned Judges considered that it was impossible to infer from the wording of the Act that a return made by an assessee is either part of the act of the Income-tax officer or part of the record of the act of that officer. In their opinion to allow a person who comes into possession of a certified copy of a return to produce it in Court and so prove the contents of the return would be defeating the express provisions of S. 54. I have said sufficient to indicate that in my opinion there is nothing in S. 54 which prohibits a party from putting in evidence a certified copy of an income-tax return if that return is a public document and that the learned Judges misunderstood the effect of that section. It only remains to be considered whether the opinion that an income-tax return is outside S. 74 of the Evidence Act is correct.

The judgments in *Venkataramana v. Varahalu*³ and *Mythili Ammal v. Janaki Ammal*² indicate that in the opinion of the learned Judges who decided those cases a document on the record of an assessment proceeding cannot be deemed to be a public document within the meaning of S. 74 of the Evidence Act, unless it be a statement recorded by the Income-tax Officer himself or an order passed by him, and therefore does not include a document drawn up by the assessee or under the assessee's directions. In my opinion this interpretation of S. 74 of the Evidence Act is too limited. S. 22 of the Income-tax Act empowers the Income-tax Officer to call upon a person to submit a return of his income. S. 23 states that if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied that a return made under S. 22 is correct and complete he shall assess the total income of the assessee and shall determine the sum payable by him on the basis of the return. The submission of the return constitutes the fulfilment of a requirement of the Income-tax Officer; in other words, it is a document which he has caused to be prepared. Can it then be dissociated from his action in calling for the return? If the Income-tax Officer is not satisfied with the return he can call upon the assessee to produce evidence in support of it. If the assessee produces evidence the Income-tax Officer must consider it in determining the sum to be paid by the assessee. A profit and loss statement filed by the assessee is evidence in the matter and the Income-tax Officer may draw it up himself, if he thinks it expedient to do so. It is common ground, that an order of assessment is a public document within the meaning of S. 74 and the decision in *Venkataramana v. Varahalu*¹, that a statement recorded by an Income-tax Officer falls in the same category has not been questioned. Now, if a statement recorded by an Income-tax Officer in the course of his examination of the assessee is a public document it is difficult to see why a statement handed in by the assessee disclosing the basis of the return called for should not be similarly regarded. Surely, the test cannot be whether the profit and loss statement is actually drawn up by the Income-tax Officer.

As the learned Judges who have made this reference have pointed out, a plaint or a written statement has always been regarded by this Court as forming part of the record of a case and a public document of which an interested party may obtain a certified copy. If the argument, that an income-tax return is not a public document, but that the order passed thereon is, were carried to its logical conclusion, it would mean that no part of the record of a civil suit could be regarded as constituting a public document except evidence recorded by the Court or summonses or notices or interlocutory orders or the judgment in the case. In *Bhagain Megh Ranee Koer v. Gooroo Pershad Singh*², Garth, C. J. and Birch, J., expressly held that a petition which was the subject-matter of an order passed was part of the record in the suit, and I do not think that this can reasonably be doubted. In my judgment it would be putting an unwarranted restriction on the words "documents forming the acts or records of the acts" to say that they should be confined to those parts of an income-tax record which the Income-tax Officer has himself prepared and to exclude documents which he has himself called for or which have been admitted to the record for the purposes of the assessment. I consider that the record of an Income-tax case must be regarded as the record of the acts of the Income-tax Officer in making his assessment and therefore that any document properly on the record is just as much a public document as the final order of assessment. For these reasons I would answer the question propounded in the affirmative.

I would make the costs of this reference costs in the cause.

[These appeals and these petitions coming on for final hearing after the expression of the opinion of the Full Bench on the question referred to, the Court (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) delivered the following judgment.]

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

*Wadsworth, J.—The Full Bench have decided that the certified copies Exs. E and H are admissible in evidence of the contents of the original statements. These statements are relevant both as corroborating the evidence of the plaintiff himself and as rebutting the contention that the promissory note was fabricated at a date subsequent to that on which the statements were made. They are not being used to impose a liability on the defendant but to rebut a contention of fabrication which is inconsistent with the existence of these statements. The appeals are therefore dismissed with costs, including costs of the reference to the Full Bench—Advocate's fee for the reference Rs. 150. The petitions under Act IV of 1938 are remitted to the trial Court for disposal.

The respondent sold some trees to the petitioner on 29th September, 1931, for Rs. 400 but before the petitioner could cut and carry them away, a third party successfully asserted a paramount claim to them and the sale to the petitioner therefore failed to take effect. The petitioner thereupon sued for the recovery of the amount of Rs. 400 "with interest at 24 per cent. per annum from 29th September, 1931." The Court, however, allowed interest at 12 per cent. only and passed a decree for Rs. 538-5-3 for principal and interest till 20th August, 1934, the date of the suit and Rs. 94-9-4 on account of costs with further interest at 6 per cent. on the aggregate amount from 4th November, 1936, the date of the decree. The respondent applied to the Court below under S. 19 of the Act claiming to be an agriculturist for scaling down the decree debt aforesaid in accordance with the provisions of the Act. There is no dispute that the respondent is an agriculturist as defined by S. 3 (ii) of the Act. But it was contended for the petitioner that there was no relationship of debtor and creditor created between the parties when the sum of Rs. 400 was paid by the petitioner as the price of the trees, that no interest was payable on that sum, and the Court having allowed interest only as damages, it was not 'interest' which could be scaled down under the Act. It was said therefore that the only relief that the respondent would be properly entitled to was, under S. 9 of the Act, in respect of the interest that was payable from the date of the decree, namely, 4th November, 1936. Alternatively, it was also urged that S. 8 was not in any case applicable as the liability in question must be deemed to have been incurred only when the consideration for the sale failed, that is to say, when the third party claiming paramount title to the trees successfully prevented the petitioner from cutting and carrying them away by obtaining an injunction from the Court, which was admittedly some time after the 1st October, 1932; so that, even assuming that the interest awarded under the decree prior to the date of suit was liable to be scaled down under the Act, it should be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of S. 9 and not S. 8. We are of opinion that both these contentions are unsustainable.

Learned counsel urged that no interest would be payable under the law in respect of the plaintiffs' claim for refund of the purchase money and the liability to pay the sum awarded as interest arose only on the date of the decree. It is unnecessary, in our view, to consider whether interest could be awarded on a claim for recovery of purchase money where a contract of purchase fails to take effect, as in this case a decree has been passed awarding interest and it is no longer open to the petitioner to question such award. It must therefore be taken that the petitioner's claim for the purchase money was a claim in respect of which interest was payable. The fact that the Court awarded interest as 'damages' cannot, in our opinion, exclude the operation of the provisions of the Act. The Act nowhere defines 'interest' and it must be remembered that 'interest' is sometimes payable even where there is no agreement to pay it. The Interest Act provides for 'interest' being allowed, subject to certain conditions, as damages for wrongful withholding of payment of sums due, and Illustrations (n) and (r) to S. 73 of the Indian Contract Act contemplate 'interest' being awarded as compensation for loss or damage caused by a breach of contract in certain cases. It seems to us, therefore, clear that whatever be the nature of the liability to pay the principal sum—whether it originates in contract or in tort, the compensation awarded for wrongful withholding of its payment can appropriately be regarded as 'interest' and is thus liable to be scaled down under the Act.

The petitioner's learned Counsel cited *Mottai Meera v. Abdul Kadir*¹, as being contrary to this view. We are however clear that the case has no bearing on the question we are now considering. That was a case where a co-owner in possession of common funds had realised interest by their investment, and, in a suit for partition, he was directed to pay to the other co-owners their shares of such funds including the interest earned. An application having been made for relief under Act IV of 1938, the Court held that the liability enforced by the decree was not a 'debt' within the meaning of the Act. It was pointed out that the interest awarded in such cases could be regarded either as an accretion to the fund liable to be divided or compensation for breach of trust payable under S. 23, read with Ss. 90 and 95, of the Trust Act, the application of Act IV of 1938 being excluded in either case. It is obvious that the position here is entirely different. The petitioner's suit for recovery of the purchase money paid under an abortive sale was one for money had and received to his account. (See *Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur*¹) and it cannot be disputed that the basis of such an action is an implied or imputed contract, at all events in circumstances like those of the present case which plainly exclude any hypothesis of tort or trust. The decision cited has therefore no application here.

As regards the alternative contention that S. 8 does not apply to this case because the liability to refund the price must be held to have arisen only after the 1st October, 1932, when an injunction was obtained against the petitioner, it is to be observed that this is not a case where the petitioner got anything under the sale of which he was subsequently deprived. It is not denied that before the petitioner could cut any of the trees, the person claiming paramount title intervened and successfully prevented the petitioner from doing so by obtaining an injunction from Court. The case is thus one where there never was any consideration and the sale failed ab initio. The liability to refund the purchase money therefore arose when it was received by the respondent, that is, on 29th September, 1931 (see *Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur*¹, already referred to) and falls under S. 8 of the Act.

Husband and wife—Husband found not entitled to restitution of conjugal rights—Right of wife to maintenance—Legal cruelty—If essential.

It is not necessary that a wife should prove actual cruelty in order to entitle her to a decree for separate maintenance. On the other hand it is logical that if the husband is found to be not entitled to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights (because he had virtually abandoned her) the wife should be held entitled to a decree for separate maintenance.

JUDGMENT.—These are cross-appeals. The appellant in S. A. No. 149 of 1937 is the wife of the appellant in S. A. No. 185. In O. S. No. 9 of 1934 on the file of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam the wife sued her husband and his father for separate maintenance alleging abandonment and cruelty. In O. S. No. 26 of 1934 the husband sued the wife for restitution of conjugal rights alleging that she was staying away from him without proper cause. The learned Subordinate Judge tried both the suits together and came to the conclusion that the husband was not entitled to restitution of conjugal rights because he had virtually abandoned his wife and because his offers to maintain her were not genuine or bona fide. The learned Subordinate Judge therefore dismissed the husband's suit and gave the wife a decree for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per mensem with Rs. 130 for arrears of maintenance. The unprofitable character of this litigation is sufficiently shown by the fact that the learned Subordinate Judge felt himself compelled to order the plaintiff who had sued in forma pauperis to pay to the Government Rs. 269-15-0 for Court-fee due on the plaint. On appeal to the District Judge, the husband's appeal against O. S. No. 26 of 1934 was dismissed but his appeal from the decree in O. S. No. 9 of 1934 was allowed and the decree for maintenance in favour of the wife was set aside. The memorandum of cross-objections filed by the wife regarding the rate of maintenance was also dismissed by the learned District Judge.

Mr. Ramachandra Rao for the wife has laid strong emphasis upon the unsatisfactory result of the decision pronounced by the learned District Judge. He contends that the learned District Judge having found in agreement with the

Rao, J.

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff claimed two reliefs in the suit (1) an account of a certain arrack business alleged to have been carried on by the plaintiff in the name of the defendant and (2) a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of certain war bonds and Government promissory notes described in the schedule to the plaint. The case for the plaintiff is that the defendant was his son-in-law and therefore he allowed the arrack business to be carried on in his name and as security for the said business he had the Government promissory notes and war bonds deposited therefor. The learned Subordinate Judge is of opinion that the plaintiff has not made out his case that the defendant was only a benamidar in respect of the arrack business. In regard to the war bonds and Government promissory notes the learned Judge is of opinion that by virtue of S. 5 of the Government Securities Act, the defendant being the holder of the promissory notes and bonds by virtue of the transfer in his favour, he must be deemed to be the owner. The plaintiff preferred this appeal and he claimed both the reliefs again in his memorandum of appeal. He valued the relief as to account at the sum of Rs. 1,000 on the ground that he was entitled to put his own valuation on the strength of the ruling in *In re Venkatanandam*¹, of Ramesam and Mockett, JJ., which has since been overruled by a Full Bench case which is reported in *In re Dhanukodi*². Under the latest ruling *Narayanan v. Periappan*³, the plaintiff is bound to stamp his memorandum of appeal according to the full amount of the valuation in the plaint. the plaintiff ought to have paid the duty on Rs. 10,000 not on Rs. 1,000. When confronted by this ruling Mr. Satyanarayana Rao under instructions from his client is not prepared to pay the deficit court-fee and abandoning the claim in respect thereof. Therefore the appeal so far as the relief for account is concerned must be dismissed with costs.

He has only pressed the claim with regard to the relief relating to war bonds and Government Promissory notes. The war bonds are evidenced by Exs. C, D, E, F and L series and the Government promissory notes by Exs. M series. The documentary evidence in support thereof completely bears out the plaintiff's case. In respect of every one of these war bonds and promissory notes the plaintiff has paid money and become the owner thereof but he deposited them in 1929 as security for the arrack business which was being carried on by the defendant having regard to the relationship with him. Therefore there can be no question that the beneficial ownership in the suit bonds and promissory notes is in the plaintiff and the defendant in his deposition admitted that these bonds and promissory notes belonged to the plaintiff but he set up a claim that he became the owner thereof by virtue of a transfer from the plaintiff in consideration of a sum of Rs. 3,000 paid by the defendant to the plaintiff. As remarked by the learned Subordinate Judge, there is no evidence to prove that the defendant paid the sum of Rs. 3,000. Therefore if this story of transfer is not to be believed, the plaintiff's title to the suit war bonds and Government promissory notes remains. In our opinion S. 5 of the Government Securities Act has no bearing on the case, because that section was enacted only for the protection of the Government who can get a due discharge from the person who is the holder of the note. The question as to the beneficial ownership is not affected by S. 5. The plaintiff's appeal with regard to the suit war bonds and promissory notes has therefore to be allowed. We therefore set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge in regard thereto and give the declaration asked for. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellant so far as this claim is concerned.

A mortgagor brought a suit for permanent injunction restraining the second mortgagee, the first defendant, from bringing the suit properties to sale on the ground that he was an agriculturist entitled to have his debts scaled down and that until it was done the property should not be brought to sale. Owing to failure on his part to comply with certain terms imposed by Court, the property was brought to sale and purchased also by a third person. The mortgagor, plaintiff in the suit, thereupon sought to amend his plaint by impleading the purchaser also and by seeking a relief against him on the ground that he was the nominee of the mortgagor and that the purchase of the property was fraudulent. On refusal of that plea for impleading the purchasers and the amendment of the plaint, Held, (1) that the suits against the mortgagee and the auction purchasers were entirely on different causes of action and they could not form subjects of a joint suit against the mortgagee and the purchasers.

(2) that the doctrine of lis pendens would not apply so as to vitiate the sale because the matter in dispute between the mortgagor and the mortgagee was the amount of mortgage debt remaining due.

No. 127, brought a suit for a permanent injunction restraining the second mortgagee, the first defendant, from bringing the suit property to sale without the intervention of Court in accordance with the terms of the mortgage bond, on the ground that he was an agriculturist, that the debt had to be scaled down, and that until that was done the property could not properly be brought to sale. An application was also put in for a temporary injunction during the pendency of the suit. The first defendant contended that an injunction could not properly be granted and that the remedy of the mortgagor was by way of an application under S. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act. This contention met with approval in the trial Court; but this Court held in appeal that the appellant (petitioner) had a right to have his debt scaled down and to be protected from having his property sold until that was done, and that it was not a sufficient answer to the plaintiff's objection to tell him that he would have some remedy if a wrong by way of sale was done to him. A temporary injunction was granted on terms, but the terms were not fulfilled; and so the first defendant brought the property to sale and the respondents in the Civil Miscellaneous Appeal were the purchasers. The plaintiff thereupon sought to amend his plaint by impleading the purchaser and by seeking a relief against him on the ground that he was the nominee of the first defendant and that the property was purchased collusively and fraudulently. The trial Court rejected this application; and an appeal has been preferred against the order refusing to implead the purchasers and a Civil Revision Petition has been filed against the order refusing an amendment of the plaint.

S. 69, Transfer of Property Act, says that when a sale has been made in the professed exercise of such a power, the title of the purchaser shall not be impeachable on the ground that no case had arisen to authorize the sale or that due notice was not given or that the power was otherwise improperly or irregularly exercised; but any person damnified by an unauthorized or improper or irregular exercise of the power shall have his remedy in damages against the person exercising the power. So that it is clear that unless there was fraud, the only remedy of the appellant (petitioner) is by way of damages against the mortgagee who brought the property improperly to sale. If there was fraud, then there may be a cause of action against the respondents in the appeal to have the sale declared void or to have it set aside on the ground of fraud. But it will be clearly improper to club together a suit against the purchasers on the ground of fraud and a suit against the mortgagee on the question of the amount still due on the mortgage. The suits against the mortgagee and the auction purchasers would have entirely different causes of action and the subject-matter of the two suits would be altogether different; they could not possibly form the subject of one joint suit against the mortgagee and the purchasers.

swami Naicker
v.
Pukhraj
Sowcar.

One additional ground for impleading the purchasers is said to be that they would be bound by the doctrine of lis pendens. I doubt very much whether the doctrine of lis pendens would apply, because the matter in dispute between the mortgagor and the mortgagee is the amount of the mortgage debt remaining due; but even if it be considered that there was some right in immovable property in question, to apply the doctrine of lis pendens would only mean that the auction purchaser would be bound by the finding of the Court with regard to the mortgage amount remaining due. That would not affect his rights; because S. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act would still give the purchasers a right to retain the property.

The lower Court's order refusing to allow an amendment of the plaint and to implead the purchasers was therefore a proper one. The appeal is dismissed with costs and the Civil Revision Petition without costs.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908 and S. 224 of the Government of India Act, 1935, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of Principal City Civil Judge, Madras, dated 23rd February, 1940 and made in C. M. P. No. 606 of 1940 in O. S. No. 155 of 1939.

R. Narasimham for Petitioner.

P. S. Kothandapani for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This petition raises a question under Madras Act XI of 1936. The petitioner was the judgment-debtor under a compromise decree. On 27th October, 1939, a sale was ordered under that decree. At some date in November the petitioner presented an application to the Debt Conciliation Board, which application was not in proper form and was consequently rejected on 2nd December, 1939, under the provisions of S. 7 of the Act. At the time of the rejection an application for stay of execution of proceedings under S. 25 of the Act was pending before the executing Court and on 8th December, 1939, the Court ordered a stay of the sale for two months. It is to be observed that at the time of this order there was in fact no application pending and if there had been an application pending, the limitation of the period of stay to two months seems to be not in accordance with the provisions of S. 25 of the Act which makes it obligatory upon the Court to stay proceedings until the Board has dismissed the application, subject to the limitations imposed under S. 17 of the Act. The Court may, of course, when staying proceedings under S. 25, fix a date on which the matter shall be called in order to prevent it being lost sight of. But as I read S. 25 the Court has no power to go on with the proceeding when the application is still pending, subject to the proviso that the Board is required to deal with the application under S. 17 within one year. This order for stay for two months was questioned by the respondent on 19th December, 1939, when he applied to vacate the stay on the ground that there was no pending application before the Debt Conciliation Board. On 20th December, 1939, the petitioner re-presented his application to the Board, as he is empowered to do under S. 7. He also applied again for a stay to the executing Court. On 21st December, 1939, the learned Judge directed the previous stay order to continue to operate, dismissing both the application of the respondent to vacate the stay and the application of the petitioner for a fresh stay. This stay order in terms provided for only two months' stay which would cease to operate on 8th February, 1940. Consequently on 14th February, 1940, the respondent applied for the issue of the directions to the Commissioner to proceed with the sale and the Judge ordered accordingly; and it is against this order the present revision petition is filed.

Roopchand
Merlacha
v.
Sha Motaji

My attention has been drawn to a decision of Stodart, J., in Ellappa Chettiar, In re¹, where the learned Judge held that when one of several joint defendants had made an application to the Debt Conciliation Board and the other joint defendants had participated in that application though they were not named as applicants and the application had been dismissed, it was not open to one of those other judgment-debtors to file a fresh application and get a fresh stay under Ss. 4 and 25 of the Debt Conciliation Act, the reasoning being that this would permit an almost indefinite series of applications really by the same person for a relief which had already been refused and an indefinite series of stays on the applications which really were not sustainable. It is not necessary for me to go into the merits of that decision, for it seems to me that it has little bearing on the facts of the present case. I am of opinion that the word "dismissed" in S. 25 of the Act must include a rejection under S. 7, for obviously a stay order can have no basis when there is no pending application. At the same time when an application is rejected under S. 7, the Act itself expressly provides for a fresh application after remedying the defects, so that there can be no question of the rejection being a bar to further proceedings and the fresh application cannot be deemed to be an abuse of the process provided by statute such as was the case before Stodart, J. The position is that when a defective application is presented, it cannot provide the basis for a stay after it has been rejected; but there is no reason why it should not provide a basis for a stay when the defect has been remedied and the application has been re-presented in the manner allowed by S. 7. The learned Judge of the Court below has evolved the theory that an application presented under the powers given by S. 7 is not an application under S. 4. This seems to me to be clearly erroneous. All that S. 7 provides is that when an application under S. 4 has been rejected for a formal defect, there is no bar to a fresh application being made. This fresh application when made must be made under the only section which provides for a substantive application to the Debt Conciliation Board, namely, S. 4 and must be made in the form prescribed by S. 4. It seems to me to follow that when an application is rejected for a formal defect under S. 7, the stay will cease to operate, but that when that application is re-presented, it becomes once more a subsisting application under S. 4 and the provisions of S. 25 will come into force and the executing Court will be obliged, when the fact of this re-presented application is brought to its notice, to stay proceedings in execution. That stay will operate until the application is dismissed, subject of course to the legal requirement that the application shall be disposed of within one year. In the view, which I take, it is not competent to the Court to go on with the proceedings in execution while this application is pending and though the Court may fix a date on which the matter shall be called as a matter of convenience, the Court has no power to say "I will order stay for two months and no more". The duration of the stay is fixed by statute and is out of the hands of the Court altogether. In this view I hold that the lower Court's directions to the Commissioner to proceed with the sale while the application before the Debt Conciliation Board is pending are contrary to law and must be set aside.

Roopchand

The petition is therefore allowed with costs here and in the Court below and the lower Court is directed to stay proceedings pending the disposal of the application before the Debt Conciliation Board.

The lower appellate Court admitted some fresh documents in evidence. The admission of those documents was not for the purpose of remedying some inherent lacuna or defect but for the purpose of providing corroboration for oral testimony which had been disbelieved by the trial Judge. The oral evidence was complete and if it had been believed, it would have substantiated the first respondent's case. The additional evidence was not necessary for the Court to appreciate the first respondent's case or to pronounce judgment on it.

Held, that the lower appellate Court was wrong in admitting such evidence and the case must be decided on the evidence tendered in the trial Court.

made by his mother. In order to establish a right to any portion of the property, it was incumbent upon the first respondent to prove his mother's relationship to the mortgagor and that the persons who sold their interests to his mother were also heirs of Sujayat Beg. The appellants, in addition to denying the relationships set out by the first respondent, averred that they had acquired title by adverse possession. The District Munsif held that the first respondent had not proved the relationships with Sujayat Beg which were necessary to support his case and he also found against him on the issue of adverse possession. The District Munsif found that the appellants had perfected their title to the land by adverse possession for the statutory period. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Ellore both these findings were reversed. In deciding that the first respondent had established the relationship with Sujayat Beg he relied on documentary evidence which was not tendered in the trial Court but was produced while the appeal was pending. The first question which has to be decided in this appeal is whether the Subordinate Judge was entitled to have regard to this further evidence. For reasons which will be stated presently it is clear that he adopted a wrong course both in admitting and in acting upon this additional evidence.

O. 41, r. 27 (1) states that the parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the appellate Court; but if (a) the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or (b) the appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witnesses to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, the appellate Court may allow such evidence or document to be produced, or witness to be examined. The Privy Council has in two cases laid down the scope of this rule. In *Kessowji Issur v. G. I. P. Railway Co.*¹, Lord Robertson in delivering the judgment of the Board observed that the legitimate occasion for the application of S. 568 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 (which corresponds to O. 41, r. 27) was when on examining the evidence some inherent lacuna or defect became apparent, not where a discovery was made to import it. The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner claims to be a lessee under the mortgagor the third defendant in the suit and seeks to file an additional written statement raising the plea that the debt due to the plaintiff is liable to be scaled down under the provisions of Act IV of 1938. The Court below has refused to grant leave to file the additional written statement on the ground that the suit by the plaintiff as usufructuary mortgagee to recover possession was not one to enforce the debt and so no question of scaling it down could arise. Mr. Somasundaram for the petitioner however points out that he is entitled to redeem the plaintiff's usufructuary mortgage by virtue of the lease alleged to have been obtained from the mortgagor subsequently to the plaintiff's mortgage and is thus interested in raising the question as to the true amount payable to the plaintiff. This contention is correct and must be upheld. It follows that the petitioner's additional written statement must be admitted and the questions arising thereon must be determined. This Civil Revision Petition is therefore allowed with costs here and below.

v. *Lal Mohar Thakur*¹, the Judicial Committee re-affirmed this statement of law, and went on to observe:

"It may well be that the defect may be pointed out by a party, or that a party may move the Court to supply the defect, but the requirement must be the requirement of the Court upon its appreciation of the evidence as it stands."

Now, what is the position here? In the first place the Subordinate Judge has not recorded his reasons for admitting the evidence which he is required to do by O. 41, r. 27 (2). An application by the first respondent for the admission of these documents was made before the appeal was heard, but it was not considered until the appeal itself was being argued. Having heard the arguments the Subordinate Judge said that he was inclined to admit them for reasons to be mentioned in his judgment. But his judgment contains no reasons for the admission of the documents. This may be an oversight, but it is an oversight which involves failure to comply with mandatory provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. But assuming that the Subordinate Judge had given his reasons, it would not affect the result of this appeal because it is quite clear that the admission of these documents was not for the purpose of remedying some inherent lacuna or defect but for the purpose of providing corroboration for oral testimony which had been disbelieved by the trial Judge. The oral evidence was complete and if it had been believed, it would have substantiated the first respondent's case. Therefore there was no question of any lacuna or inherent defect. The additional evidence admitted in this case was not necessary for the Court to appreciate the first respondent's case or to pronounce judgment on it. As the result of the admission of additional evidence the Subordinate Judge has disposed of the appeal on a wrong basis.

The appeal will be allowed and the case remanded to the Subordinate Judge with direction to examine the evidence which was tendered in the trial Court and to decide the case according to law. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court and will be entitled to a refund of the court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal.

Clearly the object of S. 21 of the Act IV of 1938 is to prevent a double scaling down of the debt of an individual. If that debt has been subjected to the scaling down process of the insolvency law and dividends have been paid on the basis of that scaling down, it should not be subject to a fresh scaling down at the instance of the same person who has already had the benefit of one process of reduction. There is no reason to refuse these benefits to an entirely different person who has not had the benefit of the insolvency law and who is an agriculturist otherwise entitled to have his debts scaled down. Neither under the wording nor under the objects of the section can it be said that the exclusion of the debts of the insolvents should be extended to the same debts when due by another person who is not an insolvent.

Vasanthi Rao Sahib Bhonsle v. Narayanaswami Aiyar, (1939) 2 M. L. J. 745, distinguished.

Held, further, that the lower Court's decision that the petitioners were not competent to apply for the benefits of the Act was in effect a refusal to exercise the jurisdiction which was invoked and hence wrongly refused. Therefore a Civil Revision Petition would lie to the High Court.

was one of 1922. The original mortgagor became an insolvent in 1929 and it is said that a dividend was declared before the commencement of Madras Act IV of 1938. The purchases by the petitioners in C. R. P. No. 1178 of 1939 were long after the adjudication. The purchase by the petitioner in C. R. P. No. 1179 of 1939 was after the presentation of the insolvency petition and before the adjudication. The Court below has held that by reason of the insolvency of the original mortgagor, S. 21 of Madras Act IV of 1938 applies to the decree debt as a whole and none of the judgment-debtors can have the benefit of the Act. It would appear that the original mortgagor was an agriculturist, but now that he has become an insolvent he is clearly disentitled to the benefits of the Act. It has been held by the Bench which decided *Perianna v. Sellappa*¹, that purchasers of the hypotheca in possession are debtors under the mortgage entitled to the benefits of the Act. That was a case in which the mortgagor himself was admittedly an agriculturist; but it seems to me that this does not affect the decision, for by the definition of 'debt' any liability, whether secured or unsecured, due from an agriculturist, is included and surely a debt secured on the land of an alienee will be a debt due from that alienee even though his liability is limited to his interest in the land. In *Vasantha Rao Sahib Bhonsle v. Narayanaswami Aiyar*², Pandrang Row, J., held that the exclusion of the debts of an insolvent from the benefits of the Act under S. 21 was limited to those debts in so far as they were due from the insolvent himself and that the son of the insolvent liable to pay the same debts was, if an agriculturist, entitled to claim that the debts be scaled down. That decision seems to me precisely to apply to the facts of this case; and I respectfully agree with the reasoning upon which the decision is based. Clearly the object of S. 21 is to prevent a double scaling down of the debt of an individual. If that debt has been subjected to the scaling down process of the insolvency law and dividends have been paid on the basis of that scaling down, it should not be subject to a fresh scaling down at the instance of the same person who has already had the benefit of one process of reduction. There is no reason to refuse these benefits to an entirely different person who has not had the benefit of the insolvency law and who is an agriculturist otherwise entitled to have his debts scaled down. Neither under the wording of S. 21 nor under what I conceive to be the object of the section can it be said that the exclusion of the debts of the insolvent should be extended to the same debts when due by another person who is not an insolvent.

It has been contended for the respondent by Mr. Soma-sundaram that this is not a matter for interference in revision, that the Court below had jurisdiction to decide whether or not the petitioners were agriculturists entitled to the benefits of the Act and that having so decided, the decision is a mere decision of law and not a refusal to exercise jurisdiction. It seems to me that this question is covered by authority. Apart from the decision of Pandrang Row, J., just referred to, which was itself a decision in revision, I may cite the decision of the Full Bench in *Sundaram v. Mausamavuthar*¹, where it was held that when the Court below dismissed an application under O. 21, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the person who applied was not entitled to apply, the decision of the lower Court consisted in fact in a refusal to deal with the petition and to exercise its jurisdiction and it was not a mere conclusion of law in which the question of jurisdiction was not involved. The same reasoning seems to me to apply to the present case. The Court below has held that these petitioners are not competent to apply for the benefits of the Act. In effect the lower Court has refused to exercise the jurisdiction which they invoked, and in my opinion has wrongly refused to exercise that jurisdiction.

The petitions are therefore allowed and the matter will be remitted to the trial Court for disposal in the light of this judgment. The petitioners are entitled to their costs (one set).

Uncertified payments towards decree—How far can be proved for purposes of scaling down.

When there is a decree passed before the 1st October, 1932, in terms of a compromise, which is itself demonstrably a renewal of an anterior debt, the Court must scale down the debt under S. 8 of the Madras Act IV of 1938, treating as the principal the amount originally advanced together with the amount of any sums subsequently advanced. Whether a compromise is or is not a renewal of a pre-existing liability must to a large extent be a question of fact in every case. When a judgment-debtor applies under S. 19 of Madras Act IV of 1938, to scale down a decree he can prove payments which have not been certified for the purpose of satisfying the decree regarding costs. For other purposes the debtor would have to establish those payments in the ordinary way under the Civil Procedure Code, by getting them certified in Court if he wants them to be taken into consideration as payments towards the decree.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada dated 6th September, 1939 and made in I.A. No. 1321 of 1938 in O. S. No. 44 of 1931.

V. Viyyanna for Petitioner.

D. Narasaraju for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by Wadsworth, J.

Wadsworth, J.—This Civil Revision Petition raises the question of the power of a Court to scale down a compromise decree under S. 8 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act, IV of 1938.

The relevant facts may be briefly stated. The petitioner is the judgment-debtor. He and the respondent had dealings on account starting in 1922. On 26th March, 1928, the petitioner executed a promissory note in settlement of that account. On 3rd April, 1928, he executed a second promissory note for a fresh advance. On 20th July, 1929, he executed a promissory note for Rs. 4,600 comprising the amounts due on the two previous notes and a small amount in cash advanced at that time. It was alleged that on the 27th September, 1930, there was an arrangement whereby the petitioner undertook to pay the amount due on this promissory note within a given time or to execute a mortgage over certain properties. No payment having been made and no mortgage having been executed, the respondent filed a suit O.S. No. 44 of 1931 on the promissory note of 1929, claiming a charge over the properties covered by the alleged agreement to mortgage. He also obtained an attachment before judgment of the properties in respect of which the charge was claimed. On 8th August, 1932, a decree was passed in terms of a compromise. The compromise recited that the transactions between the parties had been examined by mediators who had decided that the whole of the debt claimed should be recovered from the family properties of the defendants, and that the defendants had agreed that the suit debt, costs and subsequent interest calculated at Rs. 7,150 in all should be a charge on the properties mentioned in the plaint and it was agreed that the defendants were to be given time till 1st October, 1932, to pay the amount so settled. It is to be noted that this compromise does not appear to have dealt with matters extraneous to the suit and that it provided for the payment of the full amount claimed by the plaintiff with interest. The lower court following the decision of Pandrang Row, J., in C.R.P. No. 86 of 1939 held that in scaling down the decree, the starting point must be the decree itself and that it was not open to the Court to go behind the compromise and treat the original debt as the debt which is to be scaled down.

Now, we have held in a very recent decision, *Ramaseshayya v. Kutumba Rao*¹, that in the simple case of a decree on a debt, the Court must with reference to the terms of S. 8 (1) of Act IV of 1938 look to the debt upon which the decree is passed and not regard the decree itself as the debt which has to be scaled down. A decree embodying a compromise is in one respect different from a decree merely directing payment of the debt which forms the subject-matter of the suit. The effect of the compromise is the substitution of a new contract for the contract sued on, which new contract itself forms the basis of the decree. When we come to apply Ss. 8 and 9 to such a decree, we must have regard to the provisions of S. 7 which lays down that "Notwithstanding any contract or decree of Court to the contrary, all debts payable by an agriculturist at the commencement of this Act, shall be scaled down in accordance with the provisions of Chapter II of the Act."

The decree in terms of the compromise is in fact a decree on a contract superseding the original debt upon which the suit is laid. To the extent to which that contract can be proved to be in whole or in part a renewal of the debt upon which the suit was laid, clearly Ss. 8 and 9 of the Act provide that the principal of the debt liable to be scaled down must be the principal sum originally advanced together with any sums subsequently advanced. On the facts of the present case, it is clear that we are concerned with a very simple compromise dealing only with the suit debt and agreeing that the said debt with interest at the contract rate and costs shall be payable by the defendants and shall be charged in a particular way. There can therefore be no doubt that the compromise agreement upon which the decree was based is substantially a renewal of the suit debt together with an agreement to pay the costs and to submit to the charge. It seems to us that clearly this debt is liable to be scaled down under S. 8 having regard to the principal originally advanced by the creditor together with such sums as have been subsequently advanced as principal.

It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to decide what would be the position in a more complicated case when the compromise is the result of mutual concessions and advantages which together make up an agreement from which it would be extremely difficult to disentangle that part which is a renewal of the original debt. We may, however, observe that the question whether the compromise forming the subject of the decree is or is not a renewal of a pre-existing liability must, to a large extent, be a question of fact in every case.

We have been referred to the decision of Horwill, J., in *Narayanaswami Naidu v. Rajamanikkam Pillai*¹, which on the facts of the particular case decided that when there was a decree on a compromise, the date on which the debt was incurred must with reference to S. 8 or S. 9 of the Act be the date of the original debt and not the date of the compromise decree. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to consider the correctness of our learned brother's decision on the facts before him. We confine ourselves to holding that when, as in the present case, there is a decree passed before the 1st October, 1932, in terms of a compromise, which itself is demonstrably a renewal of an anterior debt, the Court must scale down the debt under S. 8 of Madras Act IV of 1938, treating as the principal the amount originally advanced together with the amount of any sums subsequently advanced.

A further question has been raised with reference to the terms of S. 19 of Act IV of 1938, whether the petitioner in applying for the scaling down of the decree can prove uncertified payments made towards that decree, having regard to the terms of O. 21, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. S. 19 lays down that on the application of the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder, the Court which passed the decree shall apply the provisions of the Act to that decree and notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Civil Procedure shall amend the decree accordingly or enter satisfaction as the case may be. Then follows a proviso with which we will deal separately. So far the section is concerned merely with the amendment of the decree in accordance with the terms of Act IV of 1938 and with the addition of a power to the Court to enter satisfaction, presumably when the scaling down process under the Act itself results in the extinction of the decree. So far, the section is not concerned with execution, nor is it concerned with payments made in execution or payments made subsequent to the decree. Then follows the proviso that all payments made or amounts recovered, whether before or after the commencement of the Act, in respect of any such decree shall first be applied in payment of all costs as originally decreed. This proviso expressly contemplates the appropriation of payments made after the decree by the Court which passed the decree. We find it difficult to hold that in making these appropriations, the trial Court is acting as an executing Court. If the Court is not a Court executing the decree, then the provisions of O. 21, r. 2 (iii) would not bar the petitioner from proving payments which have not been certified in the manner necessary for establishing them in an executing Court. If this view is correct, it follows that when a judgment-debtor applies under S. 19 to scale down a decree, he can prove payments which have not been certified, for the purpose of satisfying the decree regarding costs. For any other purpose, there is no express provision allowing the petitioner to prove payments made after the decree and not recorded by the Court and it seems to follow that he would have to establish those payments in the ordinary way by getting them certified in Court, if he wants them to be taken into consideration as payments towards the decree.

In the result, therefore, we hold that this decree is liable to be scaled down under S. 8 treating as the principal of the debt the amount originally advanced and any subsequent sums lent to the extent to which the original debt can be said to have been renewed by the agreement of compromise embodied in the decree and that the petitioner is entitled under the proviso to S. 19 to prove uncertified payments for the purpose of appropriating those payments if established towards costs of the decree. The petition is therefore remitted to the trial Court for disposal in the light of this judgment and the petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Court.

Hindu law—Maintenance—Destitute widowed daughter—Legal right to be maintained out of father's estate in the hands of his heir.

A father is under a moral obligation during his lifetime to maintain out of his properties his widowed indigent daughter, who is unable to get support from her husband's estate. This moral obligation ripens into a legal obligation on the death of the father, when his property is inherited by his heir. The widowed daughter is entitled to a decree for maintenance against such heir, payable out of the properties inherited.

husband's widowed daughter when the daughter is without means and her husband's family is unable to support her. The appellant is the widow of one Sadasiva Rao, who died on the 13th January, 1930. The respondent is the daughter of Sadasiva Rao by his first wife, who pre-deceased him. The respondent married one Rama Rao, who died in the month of May, 1932. Sadasiva Rao was a man of considerable property, but Rama Rao was entirely without means and in consequence Sadasiva Rao was compelled to maintain the respondent and her husband from the time of her marriage up to the time of his death. Rama Rao never acquired property and his family had none. In 1934 the respondent filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Tinnevely for a decree for maintenance against her step-mother on whom had devolved her father's estate. The District Munsif held that the widow was bound to maintain her step-daughter out of Sadasiva Rao's property and gave a decree for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per mensem, but he directed that if the parties lived together the respondent should receive only a sum of Rs. 5 per mensem. This decree was confirmed by the District Judge on appeal. The widow has now appealed to this Court.

The ancient texts of Hindu law do not place upon a father a legal obligation to maintain his married daughter, but they do indicate that he is under a moral obligation to support her if she is in want. The original texts are all collected in the late Golap Chandra Sastri's work on Hindu Law (8th Edition, page 522) but it is not necessary to quote them all. The following are sufficient to show that from the earliest times Hindu Law has recognized that there is a moral obligation on a father to support his offspring:—

(1) "The father, the mother, the Guru (an elderly relation worthy of respect), a wife, an offspring, poor dependents, a guest, and a religious mendicant are declared to be the group of persons who are to be maintained—Manu cited in Srikrishna's commentary on Dayabhaga."

(2) "It is declared by Manu that the aged mother and father, the chaste wife, and an infant child must be maintained even by doing a hundred misdeeds—Manu cited in the Mitakshara while dealing with gifts."

(3) (A widow inheriting her husband's estate) should honour with food and presents (for their benefit) the husband's paternal uncle (and the like) venerable elderly relation, daughter's son, sister's son, and maternal uncle, as well as aged and helpless persons, guests and females (of the family)—Vrihaspathi cited in Dayabhaga, xi, i. 64."

These translations are accepted as being correct. The texts carry the moral obligation far beyond the limit which could be accepted in modern times, but it cannot with reason be said that there is no moral obligation on a father to support a daughter who has no other means of support, even when she has left his family on marriage. A mere moral obligation cannot, of course, be made the basis of a suit, but here the estate of the person on whom there was a moral obligation to support the respondent has passed to the appellant and the Court is called upon to decide whether the principle laid down in *Janki v. Nand Ram*¹, extends to the case of a widowed daughter who has no means of subsistence.

In *Janki v. Nand Ram*¹, a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that a father was under a moral, though not a legal, obligation to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law during his lifetime and to make provision out of his self-acquired property for her maintenance after his death and that the moral obligation became by reason of his self-acquired property having come by inheritance into the hands of his surviving son a legal obligation, enforceable by suit against the son and against the property which he had inherited. The basis of this decision was that the son took the estate, not for his own benefit, but for the spiritual benefit of his father. This principle developed out of the discussions which had taken place in *Rujjomoney Dossee v. Shibchunder Mullick*² and *Khetramani Dasi v. Kashinath Das*³. The principle enunciated by the Allahabad High Court has been accepted by other High Courts of India and was regarded as settled law by the Privy Council in *Rajanikanta Pal v. Sajani Sundaree Dasee*⁴. The doctrine that a moral obligation becomes a legal obligation when the estate of a person on whom the moral obligation lay comes into the possession of his heirs may be open to criticism, but it is too late in the day to indulge in it and the Court must confine itself to the question whether the principle should extend beyond the case of a widowed daughter-in-law.

There are two cases reported in Strange (the Edition published in 1830, pages 83 and 90) and one in Macnaghten which support the respondent in her contention that she has a legal right to maintenance out of her father's estate. In the first of the two cases reported by Strange a Hindu left two widows, a widowed sister who had lived with him after the death of her husband, and his mother. The question was to whom should his estate go. The answer given was that the mother must be maintained and so must the sister, if left destitute by her husband. In the second case the answer was given by the Pundit. There the deceased left two wives, his mother and a sister. The answer of the Pundit was that the mother of the deceased, being otherwise unprovided for, sufficient allowance must be set apart from his estate for her maintenance and that if the deceased's sister derived nothing from her husband, the widows should jointly contribute towards her support. Both these cases were decided in 1803.

The case reported in Macnaghten, Vol. II, pages 117 and 118 was decided some fifteen years later in Bengal. The question there propounded was this:

"A person died, leaving two sons by one wife (who died before him), and a widow and her two daughters, and subsequently to his death one of the sons died. There are now surviving a son of his first wife, and a widow and her two daughters; and supposing the widow to have received no portion of the property from her step-son, in this case, is she entitled to any share of the estate; and if so, what is the extent of her right?"

The answer was in these terms:

"The widow is only entitled to a proper maintenance from her step-son; and if her two daughters have not been disposed of in marriage, they will also have some share of their father's wealth to defray their nuptial expenses. Should they, after marriage, be in want of maintenance, in consequence of their husband's inability to support them, they must be provided with food and raiment by their half-brother. This is conformable to the Dayabhaga and other authorities."

If the sister of a deceased Hindu is entitled to maintenance out of his estate it is impossible to imagine on what principle maintenance can be denied to his daughter, and the case reported in Macnaghten directly supports the proposition that the daughter is entitled to maintenance, though married, when her husband is unable to support her.

In *Venkatarasu v. Kotayya*¹, Sadasiva Aiyar, J., expressed himself strongly in favour of the view that there is a legal obligation on a Hindu father and his family to support his destitute widowed daughter when she has not received sufficient from her deceased husband's family for her maintenance. After expressing his dissent from the decision of the Bombay High Court in *Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukhmini*¹, to which I shall presently refer, Sadasiva Aiyar, J., went on to say:

"I concur in the opinion of J. C. Ghose, West and Buhler, Macnaghten and Strange that there is a legal obligation on the father and his family to support a destitute daughter (though she had been married away) if she could not get sufficient provision from her deceased's husband's family for her maintenance. Bhattacharya also says (page 400) that under the Hindu Law texts, widowed daughters are entitled to maintenance and 'justice requires that their right should be recognized.' The argument that by marriage she becomes a member of another family and becomes so to say, 'dead' to her own family is merely carrying legal fictions to absurd lengths. A wife is half her husband's body but you cannot on that account give double rations to the husband for his meals and give none to his wife; nor does the daughter lose her consanguineness, blood relationship to her father and her right of inheritance to him and other similar rights, simply because she becomes attached by Pinda, Gotra and Sootaka to her husband's family by marriage."

I am not prepared to go to the extent of concurring in the opinion here expressed that there is under Hindu Law a legal obligation on a father to support a daughter who has left his family and gone into another by reason of marriage, but I see no difficulty in extending the principle embodied in *Janki v. Nand Ram*², to such a case, when she is in want.

It will be convenient here to consider the decision of the Bombay High Court in *Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukhmini*¹. There a Bench of the Bombay High Court, consisting of Parsons and Ranade, JJ., held that under Hindu Law only the unmarried daughter had a legal claim for maintenance out of her father's estate and that the married daughter must look to her husband's family for maintenance. If the husband's family is not able to maintain the widowed daughter and she returns to live with her father or brother, there is, it was said, a moral and social obligation on her father or brother, but not a legally enforceable right by which her maintenance can be claimed as a charge on her father's estate in the hands of his heir. The judgment of the Court was delivered by Ranade, J., who did not consider the principle laid down in *Janki v. Nand Ram*². This principle was accepted by Ranade, J., sitting with Parsons, J., in *Yamunabai v. Manubai*³, which is reported in the same volume of the Indian Law Reports as *Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukhmini*¹. The principle in *Janki v. Nand Ram*², has certainly an important bearing on the question.

2. (1888) I.L.R. 11 All. 194 (F.B.).

3. (1899) I.L.R. 23 Bom. 608.

There are two Calcutta cases to which reference should be made. In *Kamini Dassee v. Chandra Pote Mondle*¹, Banerjee, J., having accepted the principle in *Janki v. Nand Ram*², went on to observe:

"Each particular case, no doubt, has to be determined upon its own merits; in each case it will have to be determined whether having regard to the relationship, the means and various other circumstances of the party claiming maintenance, the late proprietor was, according to the principles of the Hindu law and to the usages and practice of the Hindu people, morally bound to maintain that party. It is not necessary for me to lay down any general rule on the point in this case. All that I am called upon to decide is whether the plaintiff in this case is a person whom, having regard to the circumstances of this case, her late father-in-law was morally bound to maintain."

In *Mokhoda Dossee v. Nundo Lal Haldar*³, Amir Ali, J., held that a sonless widowed daughter in indigent circumstances is not entitled to separate maintenance out of the estate of her father in the hands of his heirs, but he added:

"There may be cases, however, where a father maintains the daughter and the daughter's husband in his own house, and does so up to the end of his life. Under those circumstances the fact of his marrying her to a person not possessed of means to maintain his wife would cast upon him the moral obligation of maintaining both her and her husband, and in the case of a widowed daughter of maintaining her and her children. If that moral obligation rested upon him in his life time, upon his death the moral obligation would, in my opinion, become a legal obligation on the part of those taking his property."

This case certainly falls within the exception which Amir Ali, J., had in mind. His decision was approved of on appeal—*Mokhoda Dassee v. Nundo Lal Haldar*⁴, but his reservation was not discussed.

The Lahore High Court has held that a sister is bound to be maintained out of her deceased brother's estate in the hands of his heirs; *Musammat Bholi Bai v. Dwarka Das*⁵. The Court accepted a statement in Mulla which I shall quote in a moment as correctly representing the law.

The text books on Hindu Law with two exceptions support the respondent. In addition to quoting the two cases in the second volume of his work Strange expressly states that widowed sisters, not otherwise provided for, are entitled to be maintained. (Sir T. Strange's Hindu Law, Vol. I, p. 173.) Macnaghten's view is to be gathered from the case which I have already quoted. Mulla says:

"An heir is legally bound to provide, out of the estate which descends to him, maintenance for those persons whom the late proprietor was legally or morally bound to maintain. The reason is that the estate is inherited subject to the obligation to provide for such maintenance." (Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 9th Edition, p. 582).

Mulla also says:

"A father is bound to maintain his unmarried daughters. On the death of the father they are entitled to be maintained out of his estate. A daughter on marriage ceases to be a member of her father's family, and becomes a member of her husband's family If she is unable to obtain maintenance from her husband, or after his death from his family, her father, if he has got separate property of his own, is under a moral, though not a legal obligation to maintain her." (Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 9th Edition, p. 584).

Ghose states that a female is entitled to be maintained by her father's family, if her husband's family is extinct, or incapable on account of extreme poverty, to support her. (Ghose's Principles of Hindu Law, 10th Edition, p. 305.) He also points out that the sonless widowed daughter and grand daughter and sister come back to the family of the father according to Medhatithi. (Ghose's Principles of Hindu Law, 10th Edition, p. 310.) As Mayne observes Medhatithi's work is the earliest commentary extant on Manu and is frequently referred to as of high authority and mentioned in the Mitakshara and Smriti-chandrika. (Mayne on Hindu Law and Usage, 10th Edition, p. 43.) Sircar expresses the opinion that a married daughter is ordinarily to be maintained in her husband's family, but if they are unable to maintain her, she is entitled to be maintained in her father's family. (Sircar's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, p. 534). West and Buhler quote with approval the decisions in the two cases reported by Strange. (West and Buhler's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, p. 241). Before the decision in *Bai Mangal v. Bai Rukhmini*¹, Mayne was of the same opinion but the learned author of the next edition accepted that decision as being correct and altered his opinion accordingly. This view has been maintained in the latest edition. (Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, 10th Edition, p. 825.) Gour's Hindu Code also accepts the Bombay case as deciding the point (4th edition, page 322).

The decision in *Janki v. Nand Ram*² must now be accepted as embodying a rule of Hindu Law and as there is a moral obligation on a father to support his daughter, whether married or unmarried, I can see no valid reason for refusing to apply the rule to a widowed daughter who is penniless. The only distinction between a widowed daughter-in-law and a widowed daughter is that on her marriage the daughter passes into another family, but the moral obligation of the father to support her when in want still remains and the same reasoning which led to the rule in *Janki v. Nand Ram*¹, being laid down applies. The decisions reported in Strange and Macnaghten provide additional reasons for applying it and most of the learned authors of works on Hindu Law have accepted it. The right to maintenance which was claimed in the cases reported in Strange and Macnaghten was not based on the reasoning to be found in *Janki v. Nand Ram*¹, but the right was clearly recognised. It is not necessary to consider how far the rule extends, but obviously it could not be extended to the Guru, guest, religious mendicant, or an aged and helpless person who is in no sense a member of the family and could only be the object of charity. There is, however, ample authority for applying the rule in this case. Consequently I hold that a widowed daughter in the position of the respondent in this case is entitled to maintenance out of her father's estate in the hands of his widow and I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

2. (1888) I.L.R. 11 All. 194 (F.B.).

In a mortgage suit, X the respondent was impleaded as a subsequent purchaser of one of the items mortgaged. The sale of the hypotheca did not realise the full amount of the mortgage decree, and an application for a personal decree was made to which the respondent was not a party. When the mortgagor attached part of the personal property of the mortgagors, there was a claim preferred by X the respondent on the ground that the property attached was his property by virtue of a sale executed after the passing of the personal decree. The claim was drafted as a claim by a stranger under O. 21, r. 58 and was dismissed as respondent was found not to have been in possession.

Held, the personal decree arising out of a mortgage suit is a decree passed in the mortgage suit and though the respondent was not given notice of the application for a personal decree, he was a party to the suit in which the decree was passed and the question is one relating to the execution of that decree and S. 47, Civil Procedure Code, governs the investigation of the claim and the question of title of the claimant must be gone into.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of remand in a matter arising out of a claim in execution of a personal decree passed in a mortgage suit. The appellant is a mortgage decree-holder; the respondent is the eighth defendant impleaded in the mortgage suit as a subsequent purchaser of one of the items mortgaged. After the sale of the hypotheca had not realised the full amount of the mortgage decree, an application was made for a personal decree against the mortgagors and to this application the present respondent (eighth defendant) was not made a party. When the decree-holder came to attach part of the personal property of the mortgagors, there was a claim preferred by the present respondent on the ground that the property attached was his property by virtue of a sale executed after the passing of the personal decree. Now, the claim preferred by the respondent was drafted as a claim by a stranger to the decree under O. 21, r. 58 and it was investigated on that basis and though the learned District Munsif does go to some extent into the validity of the title claimed by the respondent, he expressly says that the only point for determination is, who was in possession of the attached land at the time of the attachment. He found that the respondent herein was not in possession and he dismissed the petition. Thereupon, the respondent instead of filing a suit to contest the correctness of this order, discovered that the order was one under S. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code he having been a party to the suit; and he filed an appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge hearing the appeal agreed with the contention that the matter was one falling under S. 47 and remanded the suit for a fresh hearing on the ground that the lower Court erred in disposing of the claim summarily.

v.
Paruvada
Mali Naidu.

It seems to me quite clear that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in holding that S. 47 covers the dispute between the parties. It is contended on the strength of certain observations in *Palaniappa Chettiar v. Narayanan Chettiar*¹ that the proceeding for obtaining a personal decree is a separate proceeding from the trial of the suit and that the decree is a distinct decree and that therefore any person who is not a party to the personal decree proceedings but claims property attached under the personal decree is a stranger claimant to whose claim O. 21, r. 58 will apply. This contention seems to overlook the wording of S. 47 with reference to which the governing factor is not whether the disputants were parties to the decree, but whether the disputants were parties to the suit in which the decree was passed. There can, I think, be no question that the personal decree arising out of a mortgage suit is a decree passed in the mortgage suit; and though the respondent was not given notice of the application for a personal decree, he was a party to the suit in which the decree was passed and the question is one relating to the execution of that decree. S. 47 therefore governs the investigation of the claim.

Now, the learned Subordinate Judge ordered a remand on the ground that the trial Court was wrong in disposing of the claim summarily. It seems to me that this statement does not quite indicate the difference between proceedings under O. 21, r. 58 and those under S. 47. For the purpose of deciding a claim under O. 21, r. 58, the Court is bound to find who was in possession at time of the attachment. It is not bound to find who had the title to the land attached and can refer parties to a suit for determining title. For the purpose of deciding a claim under S. 47, it is necessary to go into all the contentions of the parties including the contention as to title. The scope of the enquiry cannot be restricted merely to the question of possession at the time of the attachment. The difference between the two enquiries is, therefore, not a difference in procedure so much as a difference in the scope of the enquiry. It is suggested that the trial Court in this case has taken all the evidence that was available and has really gone into the question of the title of the claimant. It seems to me probable that the evidence was recorded as fully as was necessary. But undoubtedly the learned District Munsif has considered himself bound only to decide the question of possession. It follows therefore that the remand for an enquiry under S. 47 into the claim of the respondent was necessary. But it seems to me that the learned Subordinate Judge was quite wrong in ordering costs up to the date of his order to abide by the result. The respondent himself was entirely to blame for the way in which the matter proceeded in the trial Court and it was owing to his own error that the appeal and the remand became necessary. He took the position of a stranger claimant and asked the Court to investigate his claim under O. 21, r. 58 which was done without any question as to the propriety of the provision of law under which investigation was sought. Then when an adverse decision was given, respondent took advantage of his own error in order to claim a right of appeal and get that decision set aside. The result is that all the time and money spent both in the original enquiry and the lower appellate Court have been wasted owing to the error of the respondent.

The proper order is therefore that the respondent here (eighth defendant) do pay all the costs of the appellant up to and including the stage of the order of remand by the lower appellate Court. In other respects, the appeal is dismissed and I think it proper that the appellant should pay the respondent's costs in second appeal since she has failed on the substantial grounds.

The power given to the liquidator under S. 179 (f) of the Companies Act to indorse a promissory note is a statutory power and it cannot be delegated in the absence of a statutory provision permitting such delegation.

Held, that the indorsements of certain promissory notes by the agents appointed by the liquidators conveyed no title in law to the assignees.

Held further, that no subsequent ratification of such indorsements by the liquidator could make them valid as they were void ab initio.

Petitions under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Canara, dated 24th June, 1936 and passed in S. C. S. Nos. 98 and 149 of 1933.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—These connected Revision Petitions arise out of two connected Small Cause Suits instituted by two different persons claiming to be assignees or indorsees of two different promissory notes under indorsements purporting to have been made by Rao Saheb P. U. Narayana Aiyar and P. Ramayya Alva as joint holders of a power-of-attorney granted to them by the liquidators of the National Livestock Registration Bank, Ltd., Madras. The suits were dismissed mainly on the ground that the indorsements were not valid and conveyed no interest to the assignees. In one of these revision petitions, namely, C. R. P. No. 1041 of 1936, the only question that arises is whether the indorsement by the agents of the Liquidators is valid in law. This very point arose in connection with a similar case in C. R. P. No. 22 of 1934 in which it was held by Sir

Owen Beasley, C.J., that the liquidators had no power whatever to delegate their powers to any one else. The power of the liquidators themselves is derived from S. 179 of the Indian Companies Act and so far as indorsements of promissory notes are concerned, from clause (f) of that section. In other words, the power given to the liquidator to indorse promissory notes is a power given by the statute, and it is a well-established principle that a statutory power cannot be delegated in the absence of a statutory provision for such delegation. It is not pretended that there is any such statutory provision for delegation in a case of this kind, and it is clear, as was held in C. R. P. No. 22 of 1934, that the indorsement by the agents appointed by the liquidators conveys no title in law to the assignees. It follows from this that C. R. P. No. 1041 must fail as no question of ratification, such as is raised in the other revision petition, arises in this case.

The question of ratification also can be disposed of briefly. It is said that on the 15th May, 1932, all the previous indorsements made by the power-of-attorney agents were ratified by the sole liquidator, the other liquidator having resigned his office. Mr. Sitarama Rao relied on *Irvine v. Union Bank of Australia*¹ and particularly on the observations at page 375. I am however of opinion that those observations really do not bear on the present case. They show that though the original act would have required the sanction of a majority of the entire body of shareholders, nevertheless, an act done by a Director in excess of his authority may be ratified by a majority vote of the shareholders actually present at an extraordinary meeting conveyed with the express object of ratifying the act that was done in excess of authority, due notice of which having been given. In other words, that case is an authority for the proposition that in every case it is not necessary that the very authority which could have validly authorised the act at its inception could alone ratify such act. It does not in any way take away the force of the general rule which is embodied in Art. 25 in Bowstead on Agency at page 47, eighth edition, to the effect that it is only an act which is capable of being done by means of an agent that can be ratified by the person in whose name or on whose behalf it was done. In other words, if, as in this case, the liquidator could not validly in law appoint an agent to assign promissory notes by means of a general authority, no subsequent ratification of what was ab initio void could make that act valid. It has been argued that a distinction must be drawn between this case and a case where the principal himself has decided the matter or in other words, decided to make the particular assignment on indorsement, and merely leaves it to his power-of-attorney holder to sign the indorsement on his behalf. But in this case there is nothing to show that at the very inception the liquidator had decided to assign the promissory note in question and merely employed his power-of-attorney agents to sign on his behalf. If that was the case, there would have been no necessity to plead ratification at all because the original act itself would have been valid, the mere affixing of signature on behalf of the principal being a mere ministerial act the validity of which does not rest on any statutory provision. No such case was set forth by the petitioner in the lower Court, and there is certainly no material available which would justify a finding to the effect that before the assignment by the agents the liquidators themselves had applied their minds to the question and had decided to make the assignment. It follows therefore that this revision petition (1042 of 1936) also must fail. Both the revision petitions are accordingly dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is preferred by the decree-holder against the dismissal of his petition for the execution of a compromise decree. The decree is dated 10th December, 1931 and it arose out of a suit for the eviction of a tenant under a Malabar Marupat. The terms of the compromise decree may be summarised as follows: The amount due from the defendant for arrears of rent was fixed at Rs. 89-3-5, the plaintiff agreeing to relinquish the balance of his claim. The amount settled as due from the plaintiff for the value of improvements was Rs. 325-11-5. It was agreed that on the plaintiff depositing in Court before the 31st August, 1932, the sum of Rs. 236-8-0 (that is, Rs. 325-11-5—Rs. 89-3-5) the defendant should surrender the property and should thereafter up to the date of surrender pay rent at a stipulated rate; any arrears of rent to be adjusted against the amount due for improvements. There was also a term regarding the settlement of a promissory note dispute between the parties.

Instead of making the deposit within the nine months allowed by the terms of the compromise decree the plaintiff did nothing until just before the date on which the decree would become barred under the ordinary law of limitation, the deposit being actually made in December, 1934. Without any explanation for the delay or any application to extend the time he sought to execute the decree just as if it were an ordinary decree in an eviction suit passed after a full trial. The executing Court held that this was permissible. The lower appellate Court has dismissed the petition.

It seems to me a self-evident proposition that when there is a decree based on an agreement between the parties, an essential term of that agreement embodied in the decree cannot be changed by an act of the Court on the application of one only of the parties, but the consent of both parties to the original agreement would be necessary for its modification. The Court, after all, is doing nothing more than give judicial force to a contract and there is no basis for the decree other than the contract. It follows that the decree cannot be varied except by the consent of the contracting parties. It seems to me that this principle must apply to the terms of contract which fixes a definite period for the performance of an obligation as an essential part of the contract. So much has been recognised in an English case, *Australasian Automatic Weighing Machine Co. v. Walter*¹. But two Indian cases have been quoted under the impression that they embody a different principle. The earlier case *Venkataramanna v. Gurappa*², related to a compromise according to the terms of which a sum of money was to be deposited in Court, promissory notes which were then in Court were to be cancelled and both these things were to be done within a certain time. The deposit was made within time but there was some delay in cancelling the promissory notes. The Court held that the provision for the cancellation of the promissory notes was intended merely as a safeguard against fraudulent negotiation. This was in fact prevented by their being in the custody of the Court and therefore the time fixed for the cancellation of the promissory notes must not be regarded as being part of the essence of the contract but a mere penal clause and the Court could relieve against the penalty. The later case *Jogamma v. Ramalakshmi*³, was also a case in which it was held that the Court could relieve against the enforcement of a penal clause in a contract which had been embodied in a decree of Court. Neither of these decisions purports to lay down any general rule that when under a compromise decree a certain time is fixed for the performance of an obligation under the decree the Court has by virtue of S. 148 of the Code of Civil Procedure power to vary the terms of the decree by granting an extension of time. I am of opinion that the Court has no such power and that if the time stipulated is an essential part of the terms of the contract embodied in the decree and not a mere threat of a penal nature, there is no power in the Court to make a new contract for the parties fixing some other time than that which has been stipulated.

Looking at the actual contract embodied in this decree we find that a very generous time is given to the landlord for the deposit of the value of improvements, that value being fixed at a definite figure without any provision made for it being varied in case the value of the improvements increases before the actual eviction. Any delay on the part of the tenant in surrendering possession is met by the provision that the landlord can adjust the arrears of rent subsequently accruing due towards the amount of his deposit. But there is no corresponding provision for adjustment in case of delay on the part of the landlord resulting in an alteration in the amount due for improvements. It is suggested that the tenant has the right under S. 6 of the Malabar Compensation for Tenants' Improvements Act to demand a revaluation as on the date of actual eviction and to recover the excess value. But that amounts to importing into this contract which contemplates a fixed valuation of improvements, a statutory provision which really operates only when the value of improvements is left to be finally determined as on the date of eviction. Moreover under the prevailing view of this Court any claim of revaluation by the tenant would not bar the immediate eviction of the tenant when compensation at the rate fixed in the decree has been deposited. The position would therefore be that the plaintiff could utilise this compromise for his own purposes, that is to say, he might deposit only the amount originally fixed for improvements less the amount originally fixed as due for arrears of rent less subsequent rents accrued due, the tenant being left to take proceedings through Court to recover any additional improvements the value of which would be payable owing to the delay on the part of the plaintiff. That is to say, the whole idea underlying the compromise whereby the plaintiff should pay a fixed sum and the defendant should forthwith surrender possession is thrown overboard and the plaintiff seeks to execute the compromise so far as it is favourable to himself and to throw the defendant back upon the statutory remedy in order to recover anything additionally due owing to plaintiff's own laches. It seems to me that having regard to the terms of the compromise fixing the value of improvements at a certain figure and allowing the plaintiff nine months to deposit the value, it must be inferred that the parties contemplated that the deposit must be made within the time fixed and that the defendant is entitled not to be prejudiced by a prolonged delay on the part of the plaintiff. To hold otherwise would amount to making out a fresh agreement between the parties the terms of which would be very largely inconsistent with the original basis upon which the suit was decreed. I find therefore that the date fixed for the plaintiff's deposit was an essential term of the compromise, that the Court has no power to vary it and that the plaintiff not having made the deposit within the time allowed cannot execute the decree.

The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT:—The appellant is a dancing girl and she was charged with the murder of her paramour Murugesu Mudali.

Pattammal,
In re.

She was acquitted of that offence and has been convicted under S. 201 (1), Indian Penal Code, for giving false information with intent to screen the offender from legal punishment and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment to three years.

Murugesu Mudali went to the house of the appellant about 3 P.M. on 15th July last and P. W. 5, the sweeper woman, found him and the appellant lying and chatting on a cot when she left the house about 4-30 P.M. There was none else in the house and the appellant came out some time later and shouted "Akka, Akka, see the aniyayam". The mother and sisters of the appellant who were near their house close by rushed into the house and P. Ws. 13 and 14 who were near P. W. 13's house next door ran up. The appellant requested them not to crowd and closed the door against them and P. Ws. 13 and 14 returned. But P. Ws. 15 and 16 who were near the opposite house went and knocked the door and the sister of the appellant opened it. P. Ws. 15 and 16 then went in and they found Murugesu Mudali partially reclining on the chest of the appellant in the room which was almost closed. He was unconscious and breathing heavily and P. Ws. 15 and 16 enquired what the matter was. The appellant stated that Murugesu Mudali complained of stomach ache, had a motion and was reduced to that condition and P. Ws. 15 and 16 suggested that he should be brought to the verandah. This was done and one of the sisters of the appellant asked P. W. 15 to fetch her paramour Sundaresa Pillai. He was brought and P. W. 8 was sent for. He was absent from his house and his son P. W. 6 was informed. P. W. 6 informed his brother P. W. 4 who was in the house of Murugesu Mudali and P. Ws. 4, 6 and 7 rushed to the spot. Murugesu Mudali was lying unconscious and P. W. 2 the Mission Doctor was sent for. P. W. 4 asked the appellant what the matter was and she stated:

"We were chatting and lying. Mudaliar suddenly complained of stomach ache. He went to the latrine. He passed no stools. He returned. He had a hic-cup. He passed stools in his bed and then he became unconscious."

But Murugesu Mudali was in fact reduced to that condition by throttling and he died on 18th July of pneumonia due to throttling. The information given by the appellant was therefore false and on her own statement to P. W. 4 there was none else in the house and she and Murugesu Mudali were lying and chatting. There is also the evidence of P. W. 5 the sweeper woman, to the same effect and whether or not the appellant had any hand in the matter Murugesu Mudali could not have been throttled without her knowledge. The information was thus false to her knowledge and it is obvious that it was given with intent to screen the offender from legal punishment. The information need not be given to the police or the Magistrate under S. 201, Indian Penal Code (vide *The Queen v. Subramania Pillai*¹) and it is immaterial whether that information is volunteered or given in reply to enquiries (vide *Queen-Empress v. Ramji Sajabarao*² and *The Acting Public Prosecutor v. Chinnappa Reddi*³). The conviction under S. 201, Indian Penal Code, is therefore correct and in the circumstances of the case the sentence is not excessive.

The conviction and sentence are therefore confirmed and the appeal is dismissed.

K. Srinivasa Rao for Petitioner.

G. A. Pais for Respondents.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The first respondent obtained a mortgage decree, and the petitioner purchased the equity of redemption from the receiver in the insolvency of the judgment-debtor. The petitioner applied in R. I. A. No. 470 of 1938 on the file of the District Munsif of Karkal under S. 19 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act to have the decree debt scaled down as against him. The lower Court held that he was not a judgment-debtor and that therefore S. 19 did not apply to his debt.

S. 19 says:

"Where before the commencement of this Act a Court has passed a decree for the repayment of a debt, it shall, on the application of any judgment-debtor who is an agriculturist apply the provisions of this Act to such decree and amend the decree accordingly."

It is thus seen that the petitioner cannot have the advantage of this section unless he is a judgment-debtor. The Agriculturists' Relief Act does not define the word 'judgment-debtor' and so we must take it that the ordinary meaning is assigned to that expression. "Judgment-debtor" is defined in the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) in S. 2 (10) as meaning "any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made". Clearly, the petitioner is not a judgment-debtor in that sense. The learned Advocate for the petitioner has referred to an old ruling of this Court in *Panduranga Mudaliar v. Vythilinga Reddi*¹, in which it was held that the provisions of S. 258, Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882 applied not only to judgment-debtors but to those claiming through them or in their right. But even there it was not said that persons claiming through judgment-debtors were also judgment-debtors. It only says that S. 258 applied to those claiming through them and in their right as well as to judgment-debtors. We are however not concerned with the Code as it stood then, but with the present Code. It cannot be said that there is anything in the present Code which suggests that 'judgment-debtor' may sometimes mean more than it is defined to mean. No example has been cited to me in which a wider meaning has been given to the word 'judgment-debtor' than is found in the definition itself. It was expressly held in *Thiruvengadam Pillai by agent V. Latchmiah v. B. Venkatasubbiah*¹ that in O. 21, r. 58 'judgment-debtor' does not include the assignee of a judgment-debtor. Reliance has been placed on a decision of this Court in *Perianna Goundan v. Sellappa Goundan*², which is a decision under this very Act. The learned Judges there were not concerned with the definition of judgment-debtor, but with the definitions of "debt" and "debtor". There, the purchaser of the equity of redemption was made a party to the suit and a decree was passed against him; and so he was undoubtedly a judgment-debtor; but it was argued in that case that as he was not liable personally, his property only being liable, he was not a debtor. That argument was repelled; and it was held that there was nothing in the Madras Agriculturists' Debt Relief Act which distinguished between a personal obligation to pay a debt and an obligation under which only a man's property is liable.

The application was therefore rightly decided; for the petitioner was not entitled to the benefit of S. 19. The petition is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—The appellant was the plaintiff in a suit filed on the Original Side of this Court against her husband, her two sons, and her grandson for possession of a house known as No. 9, Dewan Ramiengar Road, Vepery, Madras. She claimed that the house was her absolute property. The defence was that the house was built in part by monies belonging to the defendants and that they had an interest in it. During the pendency of the suit the husband died and subsequently the parties agreed to a compromise decree being passed. The agreement which was entered into comprised disputes relating to other matters. The terms agreed upon were embodied in a document and the sons filed an application asking for formal leave to compromise the suit and for a decree in the terms of the compromise so far as it related to the suit property. It was necessary for the Court to give formal leave as the grandson was a minor. Notice of this application was served upon the appellant, who resisted it. Before the filing of this suit the appellant was living in the house with the defendants. The filing of the suit led to great bitterness and the appellant went to reside elsewhere. She asked the Court to refuse to record the compromise on the ground that it was a condition precedent to the agreement that she should be taken back into the family. Holding that there was no such condition and that the suit had been compromised on the terms set out in the document filed in Court, Wadsworth, J., passed a decree in accordance with the agreement. The appellant asks that the compromise decree be set aside for the reason she advanced before the learned Judge.

It is conceded by the appellant's learned advocate that on the evidence as it stands on the record the learned Judge's finding cannot be questioned. He says, however, that the admission of the agreement was wrong because it required registration and not having been registered the document cannot be put in evidence. S. 17 (1) (b) of the Indian Registration Act requires registration of a non-testamentary instrument which purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish whether in present or in future any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, in immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards. The contention is that the agreement on which the respondents moved for a decree is in law a document which falls within S. 17 (1) (b) and therefore cannot be received in evidence as the provisions of S. 49 stand in the way.

Ranga-

Sampath-

Leach, C.J.

The document must be read as a whole and in the light of the surrounding circumstances and when this is done it is manifest that it does not fall within the purview of S. 17 (1) (b). As I have indicated, there were other disputes besides the dispute which led to the filing of the suit. These disputes related inter alia to two other houses and the parties met to settle all their differences. The terms of settlement having been agreed upon they were put in writing in order that there should be no dispute with regard to them. The document is headed with the cause title of the suit and the document says that it was the intention of the parties that the terms of the compromise should be embodied in a decree of the Court. Clause (k) reads as follows:—

"This compromise shall be filed in this High Court, each party shall bear his or their own costs a report shall be made to the effect that the matter of this suit has been settled (out of Court) and a compromise decree shall be obtained in terms of this compromise."

There can be no doubt that the document in question was not intended to declare the rights of the parties in the immovable properties, but those rights were to be declared in a decree of the Court. Clause (k) leaves no other conclusion open. A memorandum of agreement, which this document is, requires registration if the parties intend it to be a declaration of rights and it is so worded, but a memorandum drawn up for the purpose of obtaining another document to declare rights—in this case the decree—does not require registration. S. 17 (2) (b) of the Registration Act expressly exempts from registration a document not itself creating, declaring, assigning, limiting or extinguishing any right, title or interest of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards to or in immovable property, but merely creating a right to obtain another document which will, when executed, create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any such right, title or interest. And a decree or order of a Court does not require to be registered except a decree or order expressed to be made on a compromise and comprising immovable property other than that which is the subject-matter of the suit or proceeding. In this case the compromise decree was registered and the Registration Act was therefore complied with. The learned Judge rightly admitted this document in evidence and it shows conclusively that there is no substance in the appellant's case.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936), S. 25—Duty of Court to grant unconditional stay.

In staying proceedings under S. 25 of the Debt Conciliation Act, imposition of a condition is ultra vires. The Court has no discretion in the matter but to stay all proceedings in connection with the debt which is being considered by the Debt Conciliation Board.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam dated 14th November, 1939 and made in E. A. No. 913 of 1939 in E. P. Nos. 83 and 84 of 1939 in O. S. No. 101 of 1934.

P. Somasundaram for Petitioner.

V. Venkataramanayya for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner brought an application before the Subordinate Judge of Vizagapatam, purporting to be under S. 25 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act and S. 151, Civil Procedure Code, asking for a stay of the execution of a money decree pending proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board under S. 4 of the Act. When the application was filed, a copy of the petition was filed before the Debt Conciliation Board. A counter was filed making the usual allegations of frivolity and so on against the petitioner; and the Court passed an order staying the disposal of the execution application on condition of the petitioner's paying up the costs of the suit or of depositing them into Court on or before a certain date. The petitioner contends that this condition imposed by the order of the Subordinate Judge was ultra vires.

v.
Venkata-
ramanayya.

Under S. 25 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act, the Court is bound to stop all proceedings in connection with the debt which is being considered by the Debt Conciliation Board. The wording of the section is most peremptory:

"When an application has been made to a Board under S. 4, any suit or other proceeding in respect of any debt for the settlement of which application has been made shall not be proceeded with until the Court has dismissed the application."

So that the Court, upon its attention being drawn to the fact that proceedings are pending before the Debt Conciliation Board, is bound to stay whatever proceedings are before it in connection with that debt. It does not matter whether or no the Court is of opinion that the proceedings before the Debt Conciliation Board are frivolous or intended to delay justice; and no petition for stay is necessary. It is not necessary even to call upon the other side for a counter. The Court may require the petitioner to produce proof that he has filed the petition before the Debt Conciliation Board and that it has not been dismissed; and if the petitioner can satisfy him on those points, the Court has no discretion but to stay.

The petitioner added S. 151, Civil Procedure Code, as one of the sections under which he asked the Court to exercise its powers; and there can be no doubt that the Court has power, when it orders stay by virtue of its inherent power to do so, to impose such terms as it thinks fit. It was however unnecessary in this case to invoke the inherent powers of the Court under S. 151. What in effect the petitioner did was to draw the attention of the Court to the fact that an application before the Debt Conciliation Board was pending.

In staying proceedings under S. 25 the Court cannot impose any condition; for the power to impose a condition implies a corresponding power to dismiss the application if the condition is not fulfilled. If a conditional order is made under S. 25 staying the suit or other proceeding, the Court cannot dismiss the application upon the nonfulfilment of the condition. From this it follows that the imposition of a condition is ultra vires.

This petition is therefore allowed and the condition attached to the order of stay cancelled. The petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Court from the respondent.

Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936), Ss. 4 and 25—Applicability to execution proceedings—Decree on basis of mortgage—If falls within purview of the Act—Execution—Stay of.

When an application has been made to a Board under S. 4, any suit or other proceeding including a proceeding in execution of a decree pending before a Civil Court in respect of any debt, secured or otherwise, for the settlement of which application has been made, cannot be proceeded with until the Board has dismissed the application.

Hirannayya v. Thippeswami, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 1032, relied on.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order dated 17th August, 1939 and made in E. A. No. 223 of 1939 in E. P. No. 41 of 1939 in O. S. No. 59 of 1937 on the file of the Sub-Court of Chittoor.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision from an order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Chittoor dismissing an application made by a judgment-debtor under the Debt Conciliation Act with the object of securing a stay of execution of a mortgage decree passed against him. The two grounds on which the execution Court refused to accede to the petitioner's request were

swami Chetti
v.
Venkata
Reddi.

(1) that S. 25 of the Act did not apply to execution proceedings,

(2) that a decree passed on the basis of a mortgage-deed does not fall within the purview of the Debt Conciliation Act.

As to the first ground of the learned Subordinate Judge's decision, I find the words in S. 25 to be quite general and apparently intended to cover every proceeding, whether in the nature of an execution or otherwise. An application for execution, although arising out of a suit after a decree is passed therein is none the less a proceeding and there seems to be no justification for restricting the words only to miscellaneous proceedings other than those in execution. The words of the section leave no scope for the argument that the proceedings must necessarily be independent of the suit in which the decree was passed. As to the second ground, the learned Subordinate Judge's attention does not seem to have been drawn to the definition of the word 'debt' which has been given in S. 2 (f) of the Debt Conciliation Act. A debt has been defined to cover a secured debt as well and whether it is payable under a decree of a Civil Court or otherwise. A secured debt has been defined in sub-cl. (1) of the same section to include a mortgage-debt or any debt for which there is security, lien or charge on immovable property. The result of these definitions would be that "when an application has been made to a Board under S. 4, any suit or other proceeding, including a proceeding in execution of a decree, pending before a Civil Court in respect of any debt, secured or otherwise, for the settlement of which application has been made" cannot be proceeded with until the Board has dismissed the application. A reference to S. 18 (3) and S. 19 (4) (b) appears to be beside the point. S. 18 (3) only provides that certain decrees would not be executable after the registration of an agreement under S. 14 (2) against the assets set apart in the agreement until all amounts recorded as payable under such agreements have been paid. S. 19 (4) (b) makes an application for execution of a decree suspended under S. 18 (3) to be unexecutable by a Civil Court. Neither of these sections have any relevancy to the consideration of the question to be decided in this case; or suggest an inference that a secured creditor stands in any position different from that of a simple creditor so far as S. 25 is concerned.

A Division Bench of this Court took the same view in *Hirannayya v. Thippeswami*¹. This is binding on me. It is true that it does not consider the points raised in this revision specifically; but unless that was the opinion of the learned Judges, they could not have arrived at the decision to which they did.

For the above reasons, the revision must be accepted and is allowed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Ss. 19 and 20—Joint debtors—Payment towards debt by one debtor after the death of the other within limitation—If saves limitation against the heirs of the deceased debtor.

A promissory note was executed by two persons, one of whom subsequently died. The other made a payment within the period of limitation and in a suit filed within three years of that payment the heirs of the deceased debtor were sought to be made liable.

father of defendants 3 to 5, and the first defendant executed a promissory note in favour of the plaintiff-petitioner. Within the period of limitation, after the death of the second defendant's husband, first defendant made a payment. This suit was brought within three years of that payment but more than three years from the execution of the note. The first defendant was clearly liable; but the more difficult question was whether defendants 2 to 5 were liable also or whether the suit was barred as against them. That point was decided in favour of the defendants 2 to 5 by the Subordinate Judge of Palghat.

There can be no doubt that it is well established in this High Court that any acknowledgment made under S. 19 by one person does not save limitation against any other persons liable under the note, whereas a payment made under S. 20 saves limitation as against all those liable under the note. I am unable to see any great difference in the wording of Ss. 19 and 20 which would account for this difference in the law applying to acknowledgments and payments. The earlier Indian decisions on the subject seem to have been based largely on the English law; and the decisions to which I have been referred assume the difference between Ss. 19 and 20 and follow earlier cases.

S. 21 (2) of the Limitation Act says:

"Nothing in the said sections (Ss. 19 and 20) renders one of several joint contractors, ... chargeable by reason only of a written payment made by any other or others of them."

Reading Ss. 20 and 21 together, it would follow that a payment saves limitation against all the debtors unless the debtors are co-contractors. It has been laid down in a number of cases, *Narasimha Rama Aiyar v. Ibrahim*¹, *Lokandha Naiko v. Lokhono Naiko*² and *Pangudaya Pillai v. Uthandiya Pillai*³, that a payment by an heir saves limitation against other heirs.

The position in this case is rather peculiar. There is no payment by one heir; but there was a payment by a joint contractor. At the time when this payment was made, the other joint contractor was dead and, strictly speaking, there was no other joint contractor to whom S. 21 (2) could directly apply; but defendants 2 to 5 are sought to be made liable because they are the heirs of the other joint contractor. Their liability depends upon the liability of the person whose heirs they are. That other person was a joint contractor and defendants 2 to 5 represent his estate. I am therefore of opinion that this payment made by the first defendant does not save limitation against defendants 2 to 5.

Libel—Damages—Criminal prosecution and conviction of defendant before civil suit—If ground for reducing amount of damages—Costs—If to be proportionate to damages awarded.

The law allows both a criminal and civil remedy for defamation and the fact that there had been a criminal prosecution and conviction obtained before the civil suit for damages was launched is no reason for reducing the amount of damages which the plaintiff would otherwise get.

Ma Sein Tin v. U Kyaw Maung, A.I.R. 1936 Rang. 332 at 334, dissented from.

It is not possible for the Court to assess the damages for a libel at an exact figure and parties cannot be expected to assess the damages in an exact manner. Though the amount of damages decreed is very much less than the amount claimed the Courts can give full costs to the plaintiff.

The defamation having been established beyond doubt it only remains to consider whether the amount of damages awarded by the Court below is reasonable. It may be mentioned in this connection that before the suit was filed there was a criminal prosecution at the instance of the father of the plaintiff which resulted in the conviction of all the defendants which was upheld in the High Court on revision. It is argued that the very fact that there had been a criminal prosecution and a conviction obtained before the civil suit was launched is itself a reason for reducing the amount of damages, and reliance has been placed on the decision in *Ma Sein Tin v. U Kyaw Maung*¹. At page 334 there are certain observations which show that the learned Judge disapproved conduct of this kind, that is, the filing of a civil suit for damages after a criminal prosecution, though the law grants both remedies to the wronged person. We are not prepared to accept this view, namely, that where the law permits two remedies a party who avails himself of one remedy after another should not get, so to say, as much compensation as he would otherwise get. What the law allows must be awarded by the Courts which administer the law. The remedies are moreover different. The law gives a party both remedies and it is not right in our opinion to take away so to speak by a judicial decision what the law gives in cases of this kind. The amount awarded by the Court below is Rs. 1,500 whereas the amount claimed is Rs. 5,250. The learned Judge who tried the case has given reasons for assessing the damages at Rs. 1,500 and no attempt has been made to show that these reasons are not well founded beyond relying on the decision in *Ma Sein Tin v. U Kyaw Maung*¹. In a case of this kind it is not possible for the Court to assess the damages at an exact figure giving absolutely convincing reasons for so doing. This observation is made necessary by the fact that an attempt was made to argue that the lower Court should have allowed only proportionate costs in view of the fact that only Rs. 1,500 was decreed in respect of a claim of Rs. 5,250. Parties cannot be expected to assess the damages in an exact manner. Especially in a case of this kind where loss of reputation is suffered in respect of the virginity or purity of an unmarried girl like the plaintiff it is impossible to say that a claim for Rs. 5,250 is unreasonable. It is enough to refer to the case reported in *Rahim Bakhsh v. Bachcha Lal*², where in appeal full costs were given though the amount decreed was only Rs. 200 in respect of a claim for Rs. 5,100. Another reason is that we ourselves should have been prepared to enhance the amount of damages but for the fact that the memoranda of cross-objections in which an extra amount of Rs. 1,000 was claimed by the plaintiff-respondent was not pressed before us by her advocate. We therefore see no reason to interfere with the order regarding costs made by the lower Court.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs of the plaintiff-respondent. The memorandum of objections not being pressed is also dismissed but without costs.

Societies Registration Act (XXI of 1860)—Reading room—Original name—Gift by a donor of a hall—Hall to be named after him—Members suing management—Civil Court's jurisdiction, when does lie.

It is a well-established principle that, provided that the acts of the management are within the powers of the Society itself, any dispute between individual members of a Society registered under the Societies Registration Act and those responsible for its management must be decided by the machinery provided by the rules and not in a Court of Law. If the Society as a whole does not approve of the acts of its management, it has every power by summoning a general meeting and passing a resolution to correct and control the acts of the management. It is only when an act is ultra vires the Society that a member is entitled to come to a Civil Court and have the act of management which is ultra vires declared to be void.

Where the plaintiff members of a Free Reading Room, registered under the Societies Registration Act and named after a patriotic son of India, sued the managing committee and the tenth defendant, who was the donor of a hall to the Reading Room premises which he wished to be named after him and the managing committee permitted his name to be perpetuated in that form,

Held, that the suit should be dismissed, as the matter in dispute had to be decided by the Association itself, and not by a Court of Law.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are five members of an Association called the Ram Mohan Roy Free Library and Reading Room Association, which was registered in 1914 under the Societies Registration Act, XXI of 1860. Defendants 1 to 9 are the members of the managing committee of that Association and the tenth defendant is a person who, according to the findings of the lower appellate Court, has given an unconditional gift of an upstairs room erected above the original premises of the Association. The managing committee has permitted the tenth defendant to have embedded in three wall-plates with the name "Kowtha Suryanarayana Rao Public Hall" engraved. The plaintiffs have brought this suit to restrain the defendants from affixing plates of cast letters of this description or any other letters either cast or written or of any kind except those bearing the words Ram Mohan Roy.

It is argued not only that the managing committee acted ultra vires in permitting the tenth defendant to place plates with this inscription on the walls of the upstairs room; but that the grant of such permission was ultra vires of the association itself. This last contention seems so ludicrous as not to need any argument to refute it. There is certainly nothing in the rules which prevents the association from naming any hall or room in any manner it pleases; and the giving of a particular name cannot be in contravention of any rules of the association relating to the aims and objects of the Society. If, as the tenth defendant alleged in his written statement, his gift had been subject to conditions, it might well be argued that those conditions were not in consonance with the objects of the association; but with that case of the tenth defendant we are not concerned, in view of the findings of the lower appellate Court that the gift was unconditional. It is a well-established principle that, provided that the acts of the management are within the powers of the Society itself, any dispute between individual members of the Society and those responsible for its management must be decided by the machinery provided by the rules and not in a Court of Law. If disgruntled members were allowed to air their domestic grievances in Court, orderly management of the affairs of societies and corporations would be impossible. If the Society as a whole does not approve of the acts of its management, it has every power by summoning a general meeting and passing a resolution to correct and control the acts of the management. In the suit Society the acts of the managing committee are subject to the control of the general committee, of which every member of the Society is a member. It is only when an act is ultra vires the Society that a member is entitled to come to a Civil Court and have the act of the management which is ultra vires declared to be void.

The Courts below seem to have come to their conclusions on the assumption that this Ram Mohan Roy Free Library and Reading Room Association was a members' club; but it is clear that the Association is maintained not by mere subscriptions from its members but by donations; and it is therefore difficult to see how it can be a club. However, for the purposes of this appeal it is immaterial whether the society is a club or not; for even a member of a club cannot sue the management because it does some act of which he disapproved, provided of course that he is not personally damnified by expulsion or punishment or by loss to property of which he may be a joint owner.

The decisions of the Courts below are therefore wrong; and the matter in dispute being one that should be decided by the Association itself, the suit has to be dismissed. In order that the gift of this room and the inscriptions on it should not cause further disharmony between the members of the association, the tenth defendant is willing to delete the word "Public" from the inscriptions. He undertakes through his advocate to do this within three months of this date. As the tenth defendant has given this undertaking, this appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed. The plaintiffs will pay the costs of the tenth defendant in this Court only.

When a sale has been held in execution of a decree for the payment of a debt, the decree is not satisfied until the sale is confirmed and the decree-holder is permitted to draw out of Court the money in deposit. When there is an application pending under O. 21, r. 90 the Court has no power to confirm the sale till that application has been decided. Accordingly the application to set aside a sale in execution must come within the very wide terms of the phrase "proceedings in respect of a debt" used in S. 25 of Madras Act XI of 1936.

JUDGMENT.—This petition canvasses the correctness of a decision to the effect that when there has been a decree on a mortgage-debt and the hypotheca has been sold and an application is filed under O. 21, r. 90 by the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity, etc., that proceeding is not a proceeding in respect of a debt within the purview of S. 25 of the Madras Debt Conciliation Act (XI of 1936.) S. 25 runs as follows:—

"When an application has been made to a Board under S. 4 any suit or other proceedings then pending before a Civil Court in respect of any debt for the settlement of which application has been made shall not be proceeded with until the Board has dismissed the application."

The decree in this case was passed in a suit of 1934. The petition under O. 21, r. 90 was E. A. No. 756 of 1937 and it was actually pending when the petitioner applied under E. A.

No. 776 of 1939 for a stay of the earlier application on the ground that he had on 31st August, 1939, filed an application before the Debt Conciliation Board for the settlement of all his outstanding debts including the debt embodied in the decree. The learned District Munsif holds that a proceeding under O. 21, r. 90 is not a proceeding in respect of a debt and dismisses the petition. He gives no reasons in support of his conclusion.

When a sale has been held in execution of a decree for the payment of a debt, the decree is not satisfied until the sale is confirmed and the decree-holder is permitted to draw out of Court the money in deposit. When there is an application pending under O. 21, r. 90, the Court has no power to confirm the sale till that application has been decided (vide r. 92). So long as the purchase price remains in Court deposit and the sale is unconfirmed, the decree is not satisfied and the essential nature of the enquiry under r. 90 is an adjudication of the question whether the sale held is valid and whether the money in deposit can be withdrawn by the decree-holder in satisfaction of his decree. That is to say, the effect of proceedings under O. 21, r. 90 is to decide whether a particular property has been validly sold in discharge of the decree debt and whether the purchase price deposited as a result of that sale shall go in liquidation of this debt. It seems to me that such proceedings must come within the very wide terms of the phrase "proceedings in respect of a debt" used in S. 25 of the Madras Act XI of 1936.

I therefore allow the revision petition and direct the trial Court to restore the application to file and dispose of it according to law. The petitioner will be entitled to his costs in revision.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was the defendant in a Small Cause suit for a sum of Rs. 232-2-2 due on account of dealings had by defendant with plaintiff from 6th March, 1933, to 1st March, 1934. The plaint was certainly based on a settlement of account on 1st March, 1934. The defendant raised pleas of discharge and also alleged that the suit was barred by limitation. The trial Court found against the pleas of discharge, there being no oral evidence adduced for the defendant. That decision of fact cannot be canvassed here.

The learned District Munsif also held that the suit was in time having regard to Art. 64 of the Limitation Act. Now, the actual page of the account bearing this alleged settlement entry is proved to be all in the handwriting of the defendant who was employed by the plaintiff. The heading shows that it is the account of Kandasami Reddiar the defendant in the plaintiff's cotton shop. That also was in the handwriting of the defendant. The first entry in that page is dated 6th March, 1933, and the account closes with a small credit for cotton supplied by the defendant to the plaintiff on 1st March, 1934. Then the credit and debit entries are totalled in pencil and there is another pencil entry striking the balance at Rs. 230-2-2. These pencil entries are also in the handwriting of the defendant. The learned District Munsif has held that, having regard to the fact that the defendant has written his own name at the top of the account and that the final balance is in the handwriting of the defendant, the decisions in *Sadasook Agarwalla v. Baikanta Nath Basunia*¹ and *Andarji Kalyanji v. Dulabh Ieevan*², warrant the conclusion that there is a statement of account signed by the defendant sufficient for the purpose of Art. 64 of the Limitation Act. Now, it is difficult to support this conclusion. The cases referred to deal with accounts bearing the name of the debtor at the head and at the foot an authentication in the manner customary amongst the class of people to which the writer belongs indicating that he is the writer of the balance and accepts it as correct, he being also the writer of the name at the head. The Courts, having regard to the commercial practice of authenticating accounts in this way, have held that the authentication at the foot of the account and the name at the head may be taken together to spell out a signature of the settled account. There are no such facts in the present case. All we have is an account starting approximately one year before the settlement with the writing of the heading by the defendant. This must have been written at the time when the account was blank. Then follow a series of entries all in the handwriting of the defendant and a mere pencilled totalling and striking of the balance. There is nothing in the way of an authentication of this balance or an express indication that the writer accepts it as binding upon himself and authenticates it as accepted by the person whose name appears at the head of the account and the writing of the name at the head of the accounts cannot possibly be regarded as an authentication of the balance finally struck approximately one year later. It seems to me clear that Art. 64 of the Limitation Act does not apply.

There is no reference in the judgment to any other article of the Limitation Act. But the learned District Munsif gives findings of fact which clearly brings the suit within Art. 85 of the Limitation Act. He finds that there are a number of credit entries showing sales of cotton by the defendant to the plaintiff which constitute counter-claims for the defendant and that in the same account the balance shifts at times against the plaintiff. There was no necessity for the learned District Munsif to record these findings unless he had in mind the considerations governing the disposal of a case falling under Art. 85. It is not at all likely that any further evidence of value would be forthcoming if the suit were sent back for an express finding whether Art. 85 does apply. On the accounts before me, the findings recorded by the learned District Munsif appear to be correct and the suit appears to be clearly within time having regard to Art. 85 of the Limitation Act. This being a revision petition, it does not seem to me in the circumstances of the case necessary to interfere with the decision of the trial Court though the finding that the case is within time having regard to Art. 64 of the Limitation Act seems to me to be erroneous. To my mind, the suit is within time, though the wrong article has been quoted.

In the result therefore this petition is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—The appellant financed an appeal filed by one Avudayappa Pillai in a suit which Avudayappa Pillai had instituted to recover a half share in certain immovable properties situated in Tinnevely which he claimed formed part of the joint family estate. It was held that the properties in suit were the separate properties of Baliah Pillai, the deceased brother of Avudayappa Pillai. The suit was dismissed by the trial Judge, the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely, and an appeal was filed to the District Court. During its pendency Avudayappa Pillai died and the appellant in this Letters Patent Appeal applied to be brought on the record in his place under the provisions of O. 22, r. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He claimed that he had acquired a half of Avudayappa Pillai's interest in the suit properties by virtue of a deed dated the 12th of February, 1934. The District Judge allowed the application, but on an appeal to this Court his decision was overruled by Abdur Rahman, J., from whose judgment this Letters Patent Appeal has been filed. The learned Judge held that the document on which the appellant relied did not operate to give him a present interest in Avudayappa Pillai's share in the suit properties. He considered that the case fell within the decision of the Privy Council in *Basant Singh v. Mahabir Prasad*¹. The decision of the appeal turns on the effect to be given to cl. 5 of the deed. The clause reads as follows:—

"You should render help to me pecuniarily and prefer an appeal, etc., in the Tinnevely District Court against O. S. No. 22 of 1936 of Tinnevely Sub-Court on my behalf, and conduct necessary proceedings in the High Court thereon if necessary. In connection therewith you might engage vakils you like, give vakalat and pay them fees, etc., appoint agents and conduct all proceedings. In respect of other properties in this District which are not included in the above suit and wherein I should get a share, that is, in respect of shops and lands purchased by Eswaran Pillai in the name of his wife, Sitalakshmi Ammal out of a portion of the money brought from Colombo and belonging to us, you should get my share by conducting proceedings or by a suit according to your discretion. Similarly, you should, on my behalf conduct all necessary proceedings for getting my share in the pangus, in the soda mill, cash shop, license shop, outstandings, cash amounts pertaining to the immovable properties and shops at Colombo, and get a share peacefully or by conducting proceedings as you like. You should spend money as you like in respect of all that, and keep accounts yourself. I should, without raising any objection, accept the accounts which may be given by you in respect thereof. The said amounts would bear interest at one per cent. per mensem. You should adjust and take the said principal amounts with interest at one per cent. per mensem out of the properties which I may get for my share. The remaining properties should be divided in equal halves and one half should be taken by you as compensation for your trouble. The remaining one half should be delivered to my possession. You are entitled to join as party and conduct proceedings in the above suits."

On the same day on which this agreement was executed Avudayappa Pillai executed a power of attorney in favour of the appellant in order to enable the appellant to conduct the appeal on his behalf and collect the properties awarded to him in the event of the appeal being successful.

I am unable to read into cl. 5, a transfer of a half share in Avudayappa Pillai's interest. There are no words there implying transfer, and when the document is read as a whole, what it amounts to is that in the event of the appeal being successful and the appellant being able to collect the properties belonging to Avudayappa Pillai, he was to divide them and give one moiety to Avudayappa Pillai and retain the other moiety for himself. The words "on my behalf", which are used twice in the clause, indicate that the appellant was merely acting on behalf of Avudayappa Pillai and not in his own behalf. The words "one half should be taken by you as compensation for your trouble", are definitely opposed to any idea of a present interest. Therefore I am of the opinion that the reading of Abdur Rahman, J., of this clause is correct. The statement "you are entitled to join as party and conduct proceedings in the above suits" amounts to nothing if the document does not confer upon the appellant an absolute transfer of a half share, and I hold that it does not.

In *Basant Singh v. Mahabir Prasad*¹, the agreement said that the financier "will be a co-sharer of one half share" and "that in case of success he will be entitled to proprietary possession of the share entered in paragraph 1 of this document." The Judicial Committee said that these provisions did not confer upon the financier a then present right to possession of a share in the property which was the subject-matter of the suit. By the agreement it was contracted that till the suit was successful the financier should be merely a partner or co-owner in a certain undivided fraction of the property. There was no personal grant or assignment to him of any separate share or fraction of the property divided or undivided. At best the contract only amounted to this that in a certain future event he should become entitled to the proprietary possession of a certain undivided fraction of it, and then have the right to have that fraction partitioned. That seems to me to be the position here and I agree with Abdur Rahman, J., that Basant Singh v. Mahabir Prasad has direct application.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Krishna-

Aiyangar, J.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—The language of the agreement is by no means as clear as one might wish. I was at first impressed with the argument of the learned advocate for the appellant that a definite right to have the property divided was conferred by this document and there remained nothing further to be done by Avudayappa Pillai for the appellant getting that right. But at the same time I find that there are no words of transfer capable of conferring an immediate right on the appellant. Though the sentence "you are entitled to join as party and conduct proceedings in the above suits" might be regarded as indicating the creation of a present right in the appellant, effect cannot be given to it when the entire document is read as we must read it in the circumstances in which the parties were placed. I therefore agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

JUDGMENT.—This petition raises a question under Act IV of 1938. The petitioner was the judgment-debtor under a decree which was executed on 20th September, 1937, by the sale of five acres of his property. For some reason apparently connected with proceedings under the Debt Conciliation Act, the sale was not confirmed until February, 1939. Meanwhile, Madras Act IV of 1938 having come into force, the debtor applied on 20th June, 1938, to scale down the decree. He does not, however, appear to have filed any application under S. 20 to stay proceedings in execution of the decree. The result was that, before the application under Madras Act IV of 1938 was heard, in the ordinary course a confirmation order was passed with reference to the sale held in September, 1937. In March, 1939, the learned District Munsif dismissed this application as incompetent, the sale having been held before the date 1st October, 1937, stipulated in S. 23 of the Act and the decree having been satisfied.

It seems to me that the decision of the learned District Munsif is correct. S. 23 empowers the Court to reopen sales held under a decree on or after 1st October, 1937, notwithstanding the fact that the sales have been confirmed. There is no provision in the Act empowering the Court to reopen a sale held before the 1st October, 1937. Assuming but not deciding that the petition at the date on which it was filed was competent, on the theory that the proceeds of the sale had not yet been applied to the satisfaction of the decree, by the time when the order of the District Munsif was passed, there was no decree outstanding and nothing left which could be scaled down and certainly the District Munsif had no power merely because this application was filed before the confirmation of the sale to treat the sale as null and void by reason of that application. This view is in accordance with that expressed by the Bench which decided O. S. A. No. 21 of 1939.*

In the result the petition is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition raises the question of the effect of S. 4 (h) of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act upon the liabilities of the parties when the debt sought to be scaled down is a debt owned in common by two women. I have found considerable difficulty in dealing with the questions of law raised by this petition owing to the absence of any clear findings of fact in the lower Court's judgment. So far as the evidence goes the position seems to me to be as follows:—

The petitioners are the judgment-debtors under a decree for Rs. 625, the decree-holders being two sisters. These two sisters had been given a sum of money by their father and this sum of money was originally invested in a mortgage executed by the present petitioners which was discharged in 1936 by payments amounting in all to a sum variously estimated at Rs. 4,000 and Rs. 4,500. According to the evidence of the respondents' father, the whole of the payments in discharge of this mortgage went towards three documents Exs. I, II and IV. Ex. I is a mortgage in favour of the two sisters, the respondents, for the sum of Rs. 408 dated 23rd October, 1936. Ex. II is a similar mortgage for a sum of Rs. 1,475 in favour of the same two sisters dated 24th February, 1936; and Ex. IV is a sale-deed for Rs. 1,000 executed by the present petitioners, mortgagors, in favour of the respondents' father. It provides that the sale price having been adjusted against the mortgage-debt due to the vendee's daughters, the vendee is to pay the sale price of his daughters. The father of the respondents has given evidence to the effect that this sum of Rs. 1,000 was used to discharge debts incurred for the marriage of one of the daughters which took place in 1935 and also to purchase jewels for the daughters. So according to his evidence this sum of Rs. 1,000 has to be left out of account for the purpose of S. 4 (h) of the Act. The learned Subordinate Judge does not say whether he accepts or rejects this evidence. But his whole judgment seems to proceed on the basis that the two daughters are together possessed of assets worth more than Rs. 4,000. He does not find what those assets are. Exs. I and II cannot account for much more than Rs. 2,000 allowing for interest. If on the other hand the balance is made up of jewels and the money spent on the marriages of the two daughters, whether the two daughters are treated as one unit or as two units for the purpose of S. 4 (h) of the Act, they are not shown to be possessed of unexempted property other than the suit debt and the two mortgage-debts. If, on the other hand, the evidence of the father is not believed, it would seem to follow that they must be possessed either of an interest in the land sold under Ex. IV, the purchase price for which really came out of their money, or of other assets which have not been disclosed. It seems to me impossible to dispose of this petition without first recording a finding on the question whether either or both of these ladies did own any other property excluding those classes of property covered by the explanation. The learned Subordinate Judge has gone at length into the question whether the mortgages Exs. I and II are immovable properties or not. This question seems scarcely to arise. For, if these two mortgages are debts due from agriculturists, seeing that they together do not exceed Rs. 3,000 they would clearly not bar the respondents from getting the benefit of cl. (h), provided that cl. (h) has any application to a case of joint creditors or co-owners. If, on the other hand, Exs. I and II are not debts due from agriculturists, they do not come within the definition of debts.

under the Agriculturists' Relief Act and must therefore be regarded as other property, whether they be regarded as movable property or immovable property, and the existence of any other property not covered by the explanation will take the ladies out of the exemption in sub-S. (h) of S. 4, having regard to the decision to which I was a party in Ramasami Reddi v. Alagayammal.

The question whether cl. (h) of S. 4 applies to a debt owed by an agriculturist to two women is not without difficulty and the working out of the effects of the dual ownership of the debt under this clause is also clothed with difficulty. Ordinarily speaking unless there is anything repugnant in the context the singular includes the plural [vide S. 3 (35) of the Madras General Clauses Act]. Both sides here, in fact, contend that the words in cl. (h) 'any debt or debts due to a woman' would apply to a debt or debts to two women and I can see no reason for rejecting this view, unless it be that the clause does not make any clear provision for the consequences of a plurality of female creditors. Assuming that cl. (h) does apply to a debt due to two women and having regard to the fact that it imposes a limit of wealth below which a woman may claim to be exempted from the purview of the Act, it would to my mind follow that the same financial limit, cannot have been intended to apply to a number of joint creditors as to a single creditor and that the limit must have been imposed with reference to the debt owed to each one of those joint creditors and the property owned by that creditor and not to the debt due to all of them jointly and their joint property. This is substantially the view taken by the lower Court. A reasonable interpretation of this clause seems to me to be that when a debt is due to two women jointly or as co-owners and relief is claimed by the debtor under the Act, in order to determine whether either of the creditors is entitled to resist that relief, the Court must look to the amount of the debt due to that particular creditor, the amount of other debts due from agriculturists to that particular creditor and the possession of other property by that creditor not covered by the explanation, that is to say, when the Court has to adjudicate under the Act on a debt due to two women jointly or as co-owners, the interest of each woman in the debt and the assets of each woman apart from the debt must be taken into consideration in order to determine whether each woman is entitled to claim the exemption under S. 4 (h).

As the facts have not been found so as to enable me to apply the provisions of the Act to these facts, the petition will be remanded to the lower Court for disposal in the light of this judgment. Costs throughout to abide by the result.

marriage to pay the appellant the sum of Rs. 725 as mahar, but it was contended in the trial Court that the appellant was only entitled to half the amount as the marriage was never consummated. The District Munsif gave a decree for the full amount, but this decree was set aside by the Subordinate Judge of Ellore on appeal. The Subordinate Judge held that the defence was well founded and gave the appellant a decree for Rs. 362-8-0 only. The appellant has appealed to this Court.

It is quite clear that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was correct. Hedaya, Book II, Chapter 3, page 124, expressly states that if the husband divorces his wife before consummation she receives half her specified dower. The authority of this statement cannot be questioned. In fact it is unreservedly accepted by the learned authors of text books on Mahomedan law. The learned Advocate for the appellant has contended that inasmuch as the mahar in this case was prompt and not deferred, she was entitled to the full amount as soon as the marriage contract was completed irrespective of the consummation of the marriage. This statement runs contrary to direct authority and cannot be accepted. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Mortgage—Contract that mortgagors should sell some lands to mortgagee—How far discharge of mortgage—Suit on mortgage—Maintainability

An executory contract can amount to a discharge of a mortgage debt, but there is no presumption in law that it does so. The mere recital in the plaint that the plaintiff had entered into a contract with the mortgagors (the defendants) that the defendants should sell their property to the mortgagee is not tantamount to an admission that the mortgage is no longer in existence. The suit on the mortgage is maintainable and a decree can be passed on the mortgage.

v.

B. Sitarama Rao and N. Vasudeva Rao for Respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Horwill, J.—This was a suit on a mortgage. Defendants 1 to 9 are mortgagors or their descendants and defendants 10 and 11 are purchasers of the equity of redemption in execution of a small cause decree held by themselves. The suit was allowed and defendants 10 and 11 have appealed.

Horwill, J.

The principal contention in the lower Court—as well as in this Court—is that the suit mortgage was discharged by the execution of a contract of sale on the 8th October, 1933. The tenth defendant obtained his decree on 23rd June, 1933; but before he could attach the property in execution of his decree, the contract relied on by defendants 10 and 11 had been executed. It is not now denied that the plaintiff enjoyed the crop raised in fasli 1344. The attachment was on 17th February, 1934, and the tenth defendant took delivery of the land on 3rd November, 1935, while the crop presumably raised by the plaintiff's tenants was still on the ground. That crop was the subject of criminal litigation and, finally, the plaintiff succeeded in obtaining that also. The tenth defendant then filed proceedings under S. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code and was maintained in his possession pending the result of civil litigation. That led the plaintiff to file the present suit, in which he says that he had intended to realise his mortgage debt by getting the defendants to sell the land to him and then executing a contract to that effect; but that as that contract had been made impossible of performance he had been compelled to bring this suit on his mortgage.

Defendants 10 and 11 cannot succeed on the issues raised. The case of defendants 10 and 11, as argued in this Court and in the Court below, is that the suit mortgage was discharged by the execution of the contract of 8th October, 1933. That case, however, was never definitely put forward in the written statement. The defendants obviously desired to defeat the plaintiff without committing themselves to the definite case that the contract was true. Defendants 10 and 11 began paragraph 3 of their written statement by saying:

murthy
v.
Krishna-
moorthy.

Horwill, J.

"Whatever be the truth or falsity in respect of the sale contract referred to in paragraph 6 of the plaint as the plaintiff believes it to be true according to his contentions, he may take further steps according to law on the strength of that contract; but to file a suit on the deed of mortgage is opposed to law."

The rest of the paragraph then sets out particulars of the various admissions made by the plaintiff from time to time in the criminal proceedings above referred to. It is thus seen that the plea of the defendants in this paragraph is not so much a plea of discharge as a plea that the suit, as framed, is not maintainable.

Turning to the plaint itself, it is clear that the contention of defendants 10 and 11 that the suit, even as framed, is not maintainable is not correct. It is true the plaintiff in paragraph 6 of the plaint says that the plaintiff, with the object of purchasing lands as a discharge of the mortgage debt, obtained a contract of sale from defendants 1, 2, 3 and 7 and the other mortgagors and that the plaintiff took possession of the lands mentioned in the contract. In paragraph 7 he says:

"The said petition under S. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, was decided in favour of the tenth defendant. Thus the said contract became infructuous and impossible of performance. By its terms and according to law the said contract became useless."

It is undoubtedly true, as has been pointed out in *Krishnaswami Rao v. Srinivasa Desikan*¹ and *Sura Reddi v. Rama Narasu*², an executory contract can amount to a discharge of a mortgage debt; but there is no presumption in law that it does so. Ordinarily, one would not expect a person to give up his rights under a mortgage until he had got something concrete in its place. However, the circumstances may be such as to show that the mortgagee intended even from the day of the execution of the contract to give up his rights under the mortgage. The mere recital in the plaint that the plaintiff had entered into a contract with the mortgagors and their descendants that the defendants should sell their property to the mortgagees is not tantamount to an admission that the mortgage is no longer in existence. We cannot therefore agree that on the plaint, as it stands, the suit is not maintainable.

On this question, therefore, the appellants have to fail; for the suit is maintainable as framed and these defendants have not set up a definite plea of discharge. The plaintiff is therefore entitled to a mortgage decree.

1. (1936) 71 M.L.J. 850.

2. (1937) 2 M.L.J. 922.

A minor question has been raised as to whether credit should be given to the appellants for certain crops that were enjoyed by the plaintiff. This plea was not raised in the written statement and we are not prepared to entertain it here.

Our attention has been drawn to a small mistake in the drafting of the decree by which the plaintiff is given liberty to proceed against defendants 10 and 11 not only for the costs of the suit, but for the balance of the mortgage amount which may remain after the property has been sold. This was clearly wrong and is not in accordance with the judgment. In so far as this is concerned, therefore, the appeal has to be allowed.

A petition (C. M. P. No. 201 of 1940) has been filed by the fourth respondent to have the decree debt scaled down. This petition will be sent for disposal to the lower Court and the decree here passed will be subject to the result of that application.

Except as above mentioned the appeal is dismissed with the costs of the plaintiff.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 22, rr. 10 and 11 and Ss. 146 and 151—Lessor's suit against sub-tenant for recovery of suit property on expiry of main lease—Decree in trial Court—Discovery during appeal that by a partition decree during pendency of suit the property was allotted to lessor's sons—Objection raised in appeal to lessor's right to sue—Son whether entitled to be impleaded in appeal as rightful owner.

A lessor filed a suit against his sub-tenant for the recovery of the leased property on the ground that the main lease had terminated. The suit was decreed on 26th September, 1933, and the sub-tenant preferred an appeal. The sub-tenant then discovered that a final partition decree dated 25th August, 1927, which was affirmed on second appeal on 15th September, 1933, had allotted the suit property to the lessor's sons. Held, the son was not entitled to come on record under S. 146, Civil Procedure Code, as there was no assignment or devolution from his father. (2) The son acquired the property as his separate and absolute property by the partition decree during the pendency of the suit and before the appeal was filed and he did not acquire any title during the pendency of the appeal as contemplated in O. 22, r. 10 read with r. 11, Civil Procedure Code, and so that provision would not entitle the son to be impleaded in the appeal. K. S. Sankara Aiyar for Appellant.

C. A. Seshagiri Sastri for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts giving rise to the Civil Miscellaneous Appeal and the connected Second Appeal No. 508 of 1936 are briefly these. One Sambasivan Pillai, the third respondent herein, brought the suit O. S. No. 268 of 1932 for recovery of the plaint mentioned property from the first respondent herein on the ground that it had been leased by him to one Vyasachariar who let the first respondent into possession as a sub-tenant and that the latter was bound to surrender possession as the lease to Vyasachariar had been terminated.

The trial Court decreed the suit on 26th September, 1933, and the first respondent preferred an appeal, A. S. No. 7 of 1935, on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court of Mayavaram. By that time, the first respondent had discovered that there had been a partition suit between the third respondent and his two sons and that a final decree had been passed therein on the 25th August, 1927, under which the suit property had been allotted to the sons of the third respondent. That partition suit culminated in a second appeal (S. A. No. 630 of 1933) to this Court which was dismissed on 15th September, 1933. On these facts, the first respondent contended in his appeal to the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram that the third respondent had no right to sue for recovery of the property as he had lost the right to such property by reason of the final decree passed in August, 1927, under which the suit property as already stated had been allotted to the third respondent's sons. In view of this contention, the appellant herein, who is one of the sons of the third respondent who got the property under the partition decree, filed I. A. No. 13 of 1935 in A. S. No. 7 of 1935 in the lower appellate Court under O. 22, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, to implead himself as a supplemental respondent in the appeal so as to enable him to resist the first respondent's appeal as the rightful owner of the property and thus safeguard his interests therein. The Court below dismissed this application and allowed the appeal and this Civil Miscellaneous Appeal and the connected second appeal have been preferred against the said order and decree respectively.

sabapathi
Pillai
v.
Gopala
Aiyar.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged three contentions before me in the C. M. A. First he argued that the appellant was entitled to come on record under S. 146, Civil Procedure Code, and that the lower Court was wrong in dismissing the petition without considering the applicability of that section. I do not however see how that provision is applicable to the appellant in the circumstances of the case. That section would apply only if the appellant could be properly regarded as claiming under the third respondent who originally brought the action and was the sole respondent in the appeal in the Court below. But it is clear that the appellant cannot be so regarded as he got the suit property by virtue of the partition decree referred to already and not by reason of any assignment or devolution from his father, the third respondent. I must therefore reject this contention.

The appellant's Counsel next urged that O. 22, r. 10 applied to the case and the appellant is entitled to be impleaded in the appeal under that provision. But, as pointed out by the Court below, reading that provision in the light of r. 11 of the same order, it is clear that unless the assignment, creation or devolution referred to in the provision occurred during the pendency of the appeal that provision would not entitle the appellant to be impleaded in the appeal, and from the material dates already given, it will be seen that the appellant acquired the suit property as his separate and absolute property by virtue of the partition decree passed during the pendency of

sabapathi
Pillai
v.
Gopala

the suit and before the appeal was filed, even taking the date of the dismissal of the second appeal as the date when the partition became final between the parties. It cannot therefore be said that the appellant acquired any title during the pendency of the appeal as contemplated in O. 22, r. 10 read with r. 11—see *Phul Chand v. Khwaja Tahir Husain*¹ and *Kanti Chander Mukerji v. Pirbhu Daya*².

Lastly it is urged that if neither S. 146 nor O. 22, r. 10 was applicable to the facts of this case, the Court had inherent powers under S. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to implead the respondent as otherwise the appellant would be deprived of all opportunity of resisting the appeal and might run the risk of even losing the property to which the first respondent was found to have no manner of right or title. I should be disposed to consider this argument with more favour if I could see my way to hold that the appellant's case was altogether outside the purview of O. 22, r. 10. But I am of opinion that the accrual of exclusive title to the appellant in respect of the suit property under the partition decree could properly be regarded as the 'creation' of an interest within the meaning of O. 22, r. 10, so that if the appellant had only applied under that provision to be impleaded during the pendency of the suit, his application would have been in order and the present difficulty would have been avoided. He, however, failed to do so and made this application only during the pendency of the appeal when it was no longer maintainable under that provision for the reasons already indicated. The appellant had thus an appropriate remedy under a specific provision of the Code of which, however, he failed to avail himself and he cannot therefore be allowed to invoke the inherent powers of the Court. It has often been held that there is no room for the exercise of such powers in a case coming within any specific provision of the Code. (See *Joshi Shib Prakash v. Jhinguria*³, *Ghusnavi v. The Allahabad Bank, Ltd.*⁴ and *Vallabhbhai Naranji v. Chhotatal Purshottamdas & Co.*⁵). This contention also must therefore be rejected.

In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. It is conceded that if the Civil Miscellaneous Appeal is dismissed,

1. A.I.R. 1934 All. 442.

2. A.I.R. 1935 Lah. 119.

3. (1923) I.L.R. 46 All. 144.

4. (1917) I.L.R. 44 Cal. 929 (F.B.)

the Second Appeal cannot be sustained. It is accordingly dismissed but I make no order as to costs therein.

Where a decree was passed against the appellant whereunder he was required to pay a sum of money towards his share of the marriage expenses of his sister which was celebrated in a Native State to avoid the prohibition of the Child Marriage Restraint Act, on the question whether the decree was enforceable as being against public policy,

Held, that it is well established that the power of the Court to decline to enforce contracts and other instruments on grounds of public policy is a power which should be confined within the limits laid down by the authority. The Court should not refuse to enforce a payment under a decree because the object for which a payment is made is contrary to the law of British India, when that object was actually performed in a state where it was perfectly legal.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of Gunfur dated 29th September, 1936, in A. S. No. 48 of 1936 preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Tenali dated 16th November, 1935 and made in E. A. No. 958 of 1935 in O. S. No. 754 of 1922.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the execution of a decree in a partition suit whereunder the appellant was required to pay a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,000 towards his share of the marriage expenses of each of his sisters. The youngest sister was married on 7th March, 1935, and it was admitted by the father (the respondent) that he had the marriage celebrated within the Hyderabad State because it would have been illegal under the Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929) had it been performed in British India. There is no suggestion that any of the parties belonged to or was domiciled in Hyderabad. The appellant objects to pay the amount due under the decree towards this marriage firstly because the marriage was one opposed to public policy and secondly because he was not given notice of the marriage.

As to the second point the trial Court rejects the respondent's assertion that he sent an invitation to the appellant for the wedding. It is, of course, not unlikely that the appellant knew all about the marriage as the parties were living in the same village. But whether this be so or not though the judgment of the Full Bench which eventually decided the litigation contemplates previous notice to the appellant, the decree is silent on the point. The utmost therefore that could be said is in my opinion that to the extent to which the details of the claim were contested, the fact that there was no notice might be taken into consideration in admitting or rejecting items of expenditure.

I turn next to the more substantial question whether a marriage performed outside British India in order to evade the provisions of what is popularly known as the Sarda Act is one opposed to public policy, towards which no contribution can be recovered in execution of a decree. My attention has been drawn to a decision of Panckridge, J., reported in *Pan Mal Lodha v. Gad Mal Lodha*¹. The learned Judge declined to sanction payment of money by a Court's receiver for the purpose of solemnization of a marriage outside British India which would have been illegal if celebrated in British India where the parties were domiciled. I see no reason to differ from the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge in that case. But it seems to me very evident that a refusal of the Court to make a discretionary payment towards a marriage the object of which was clearly to avoid the law of British India is quite a different matter from the refusal of the Court to direct a payment unconditionally required under the Court's decree, on the ground that the object for which the payment was to be made was one which would have been illegal if performed in British India. It is well established that the power of the Court to decline to enforce contracts and other instruments on grounds of public policy is a power which should be confined within the limits laid down by authority. Clearly the Court would not enforce a contract and presumably would not enforce a decree if the enforcement implied the approbation by the Court of an act which was contrary to law. But I see no reason why the Court should refuse to enforce a payment under a decree because the object for which a payment is made is contrary to the law of British India when that object was actually performed in a state where it was perfectly legal. If it had been the policy of the Legislature to prevent British Indian subjects from going into another state to celebrate marriages which would be prohibited under Act XIX of 1929 in British India, then surely the Legislature would have made provision in the statute itself to restrain such migrations for matrimonial purposes. The Act as passed originally was very restricted in its scope and was surrounded by many safeguards to prevent it from being operated in an oppressive manner. One is not justified in importing into the Act an intention which the Act itself does not declare to regulate the conduct of British Indian subjects when outside the territories to which the Act applies. I must therefore hold that the learned District Judge was right in declining to accept the contention that the amount payable under the decree towards this marriage should be refused on grounds of public policy. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Leave to appeal is refused.

Arbitration—Examination of party—If should be in the presence of all other parties.

It is clearly necessary for an arbitrator to enquire of the parties what their case is and on what basis they found their claims. But there is no principle of equity or justice which requires the examination of a party in the presence of all the other parties. It is otherwise of course with regard to the examination of other persons whose testimony might be impugned for some reason or other.

V. Viyanna for Petitioner.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—During the trial of O.S. No. 462 of 1937 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Ellore, the matter in dispute was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator was given full power to examine or not to examine witnesses and after he had given his decision largely in favour of the respondents, the matter came before the District Munsif for hearing objections. A number of points were raised which were all decided against the petitioner. The two objections that are reasserted in this revision petition are (1) that the award was void because the first respondent was a minor (an award not binding a minor) and (2) that the arbitrator acted improperly in examining the plaintiff's next friend in the absence of the first defendant.

* C. R. P. No. 1149 of 1939.

There is nothing in the first point; because an arbitration to which a minor is a party, is not in itself void; but is voidable at the instance of the minor. The minor in the present case (or rather his next friend), far from attempting to set aside the award, supports it. It is not open to the first defendant, who is a major, to have an award which was made at his instance set aside, merely on the ground that the first respondent was a minor.

The main complaint in this petition is that the respondents—the next friend of the plaintiff and the second defendant—were examined in the absence of the first defendant. These persons are parties to the suit; and I can see no principle of equity or justice which requires the examination of a party in the presence of all the other parties. It is clearly necessary for an arbitrator to enquire of the parties what their case is and on what basis they found their claims. I can see no reason why, in making these enquiries, it is necessary for the other parties to be present. It is otherwise of course with regard to the examination of other persons, whose testimony might be impugned for some reason or other.

The learned advocate for the petitioner relies on the decision of Madhavan Nair, J., in *Venkatasubbayya v. Venkataramanayya*¹, in which the binding nature of an award was discussed. He seems to have been of opinion, following *Sanyasi Rao v. Venkata Rao*², without giving any reasons of his own, that the examination of a party in the absence of another party amounted to improper conduct which would vitiate an award. He did not however find that there was any such improper conduct as alleged and he did not find it necessary to remand the suit for a finding on that point; because he had already found that the award on some other ground was void and not binding on the parties. *Sanyasi Rao v. Venkata Rao*¹, which was followed by Madhavan Nair, J., without discussion, was a case in which a minor sought to set aside an award, in which case it might be argued that special care should be taken to protect the minor's interests. Both these cases may however be distinguished from the present case; for it was impossible to examine the second defendant and the next friend of the plaintiff in the presence of the first defendant because the first defendant was in jail. The arbitrator visited the first defendant in jail and there is no reason to think that he did not ask the first defendant about his case and the grounds on which he supported it. The plaintiff's next friend and the second defendant could not have been present at the examination of the first defendant and the first defendant therefore knew that if the plaintiff's next friend and the second defendant were examined, he could not be present there. It might perhaps be argued in a case where these special circumstances did not exist that the parties would take it for granted that the arbitrator would not examine the opposite party in their absence and that if the arbitrator did so, it would amount to misconduct; but there can be no such ground for setting aside the award in the present case, where the incarceration of the first defendant was an obstacle known to all the parties concerned to the examination of one party in the presence of the other parties.

I therefore find no ground for disagreeing with the lower Court. The petition is accordingly dismissed with the costs of the first respondent.

The right of a coparcener to be maintained out of a joint family property is merely one of the modes in which the coparcenary right finds expression. That being so, it is not possible to agree with the view that that right is not to be exercised if there is a right to partition. There is no warrant for holding that an excluded member must either sue for partition or be content to remain without being maintained at the expense of the joint family property.

An unmarried daughter is entitled to maintain a suit for her maintenance against all the members of the family. The contention that the liability of the joint family during the life of the father was only based on the father's personal obligation to maintain and bear the marriage expenses of his daughter and that the obligation fell upon the joint family through him only, is not correct.

Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Wadsworth, dated 24th October, 1938 and passed in S. A. No. 968 of 1934 (reported in *Cherutty v. Nangamparambil Ravu*¹) preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar at Calicut in A. S. No. 176 of 1931 (A. S. No. 398 of 1931, District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Vayitri at Calicut in O. S. No. 77 of 1930 (O. S. No. 600 of 1929, District Munsif's Court).

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—This Letters Patent Appeal arises out of a suit filed in the Court of the District Munsif of Vayitri by the appellants and their parents for a decree for maintenance. The first appellant is the son and the second appellant is the daughter of one Nangamparambil Imbichutty and his wife Kalyani. Both the appellants are minors. The parents and their two children constitute one of two branches of an undivided Hindu family of which the first respondent is the manager. The respondents represent the other branch and were all made defendants. The District

Munsif held that the parents of the appellants were not entitled under the Hindu law to maintain a suit for maintenance, but that the appellants were, and granted them a decree. The respondents appealed to the Subordinate Judge of South Malabar, who gave judgment in their favour. The appellants then appealed to this Court. The appeal was heard by Wadsworth, J., who concurred in the decision of the Subordinate Judge. The appellants' parents accepted the decision of the District Munsif and therefore are not parties to this appeal.

The parties are Tiyyas of South Malabar and it is common ground that the questions arising in the appeal have to be decided according to the ordinary rules of Hindu law. Wadsworth, J., was of the opinion that a major coparcener can never sue for maintenance. When maintenance is denied him his only remedy, he said, is to sue for partition. With regard to a minor coparcener the learned Judge was of the opinion that a suit for maintenance might be filed, provided that he asked in the alternative for a decree for partition. It was for the Court to decide whether the appropriate relief was a decree for maintenance or a decree for partition. The learned Judge considered that the daughter of a coparcener, like her father, can never maintain a suit for maintenance against the manager of the family. He said that her only remedy is to bring a suit against her father and claim maintenance out of his properties, joint and separate. Having obtained a decree she would be in a position to sell her father's share in the joint family estate in execution proceedings.

I find myself unable to concur in any of the conclusions of the learned Judge. It is true that there are statements in the latest edition of Mayne's "Hindu Law and Usage", 10th Edition, page 825, and in Mulla's "Principles of Hindu Law", 8th Edition, page 582, which support the learned Judge in his opinion that a major coparcener cannot sue for partition, but they are based on certain observations of the Bombay High Court which appear to me to run contrary to decisions of the Privy Council. In passing I may mention that Varadachariar and Mockett, JJ., in *Subbayya Thevar v. Sivagnana Maruthappa Pandian*¹, observed it was doubtful whether an adult son could maintain a suit for maintenance against his father when he could sue for partition, but they gave no reasons for the expression of doubt and presumably it was based on the Bombay cases.

Every member of an undivided Hindu family is entitled to be maintained out of the family estate. In *Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pithapur*¹ (known as the second Pithapur case), Lord Dunedin in delivering the judgment of the Board, dealt with the question of the right of a coparcener to be maintained out of the common property. After pointing out that it was admitted on both sides of the Bar, 'that in an ordinary joint family ruled by the Mitakshara law the junior members, down to three generations from the head of the family, have a coparcenary interest accruing by birth in the ancestral property, that this coparcenary interest carries with it the inchoate right to raise an action of partition, and that until partition is de facto accomplished these same persons have a right to maintenance, Lord Dunedin went on to say:

"It seems clear that this right is an inherent quality of the right of coparcenary—that is, of common property. The individual enjoyment of the common property being ousted by the management of the head of the family, they have a right till they exercise their right to divide, to be maintained out of the property which is common to them, who are excluded from the management, and to the head of the family, who is invested with the management."

The right to maintenance out of joint family property was dealt with again by the Privy Council in *Vellayappa Chetti v. Natarajan*². The question there was whether an illegitimate son of a Sudra was entitled as a member of the family to maintenance out of the joint family property in the hands of the collaterals with whom his father was joint. Sir Dinshaw Mullah in delivering the judgment of the Board, pointed out:

"That the illegitimate son of a Sudra by a continuous concubine is a member of the family; that the share of inheritance given to him is not merely in lieu of maintenance, but in recognition of his status as a son; and that where the father has left no separate property and no legitimate son, but was joint with his collaterals, the illegitimate son is not entitled to demand a partition of the joint family property in their hands, but he is entitled as a member of the family to maintenance out of that property."

It is here emphasised that the share of inheritance is not given in substitution of a right to maintenance. As there is a right to maintenance there must be an appropriate remedy when that right is denied. To say that the member of a joint family to whom maintenance has been denied shall cause the family to be divided and the family estate partitioned, or go without anything, is not providing an appropriate remedy for the injustice done to him. He may not want to have the family divided and it may be against his interest to have the family estate partitioned.

In view of the fact that Wadsworth, J., relied on the statements in Mayne and Mullah based on the Bombay decisions it is necessary that I should refer to them. The cases are *Himmatsingh Becharsingh v. Ganpat Singh*¹, *Ramchandra Sakharam Vagh v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh*² and *Bhupal v. Tavanappa*³. In *Himmatsingh Becharsingh v. Ganpat Singh*¹, Westropp, C.J. and Kembell, J., held that a suit for maintenance out of the ancestral estate by a Hindu son lies against his father when the estate is impartible. The Court did not decide the question of the right of a son to maintenance when he was in a position to sue for partition. The footnote to the report, however, shows that in an earlier case Westropp, C.J. and Melvill, J., had decided that a suit by one coparcener against the other coparceners for maintenance when the estate was impartible was unsustainable, "unless indeed he were illegitimate, deformed, or idiotic, or suffering from other disability to inherit, in which case he would not be a parcener entitled to an equal share with the other members of the family, but only a person entitled to a maintenance". It is quite clear from this observation that the opinion of the Bombay High Court was that the right to maintenance was in lieu of a right to share in the estate, but I am not aware that this opinion has been accepted by any other High Court and it appears to me that it is opposed to the principle which the judgments of the Privy Council in the *Second Pithapur case*⁴ and in *Vellayappa Chetti v. Natarajan*⁵ have established. In *Ramchandra Sakharam Vagh v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh*², Pinhey, J., regretted that the judgment in *Himmatsingh Becharsingh v. Ganpat Singh*¹ allowed a member of a family owning an impartible estate to sue for maintenance, but the decision in that case was eventually accepted. The case of *Bhupal v. Tavanappa*¹ had reference to a family owning a partible estate. The plaintiff was a minor member of the family, but his father was alive and therefore under the Hindu law as administered in the Bombay Presidency he could not file a suit for partition without the consent of his father. It was held that in such circumstances he was entitled to sue for maintenance because he was in the same position as if the estate were impartible. As the Bombay decisions proceed on the basis that the right to maintenance is given in lieu of a right to share a position which has never been accepted in this Presidency they cannot be accepted as correctly stating the law in Madras.

If a major coparcener is entitled to sue for maintenance, and I hold that he is, the right cannot be denied to a minor coparcener and there appears to me to be no support at all for the view that if he does happen to sue for maintenance he must couple with the prayer for that relief a prayer for partition.

The statement that a daughter cannot sue the manager of the family, but must proceed against her own father is also unsupported by authority. On the contrary there is the Full Bench decision of this Court in *Subbayya v. Anantaramayya*², which shows that she is entitled to maintain a suit for her maintenance. It was there held that the right of a daughter to her marriage expenses and maintenance was based on her right to or interest in the joint family property, and not based on the natural obligation of a father to maintain his children. The contention that the liability of the joint family during the father's lifetime was only based on the father's obligation to maintain and bear the marriage expenses of his daughters, and the obligation fell upon the joint family through him, was rejected. Ramesam, J., said:

"So far as the joint family property is concerned, the obligation is that of all the members of the family, that is, the father and the brothers, and it is not that it was originally the obligation of the father only and through him it has extended to the whole joint family."

I agree with the following observations of Chandavarkar, J., in *Naranbhai Vaghjibhai v. Ranchod Premchand*³:

"Apart from authority, there is no reason, founded on sound principle, why a Hindu coparcener, who is excluded from the enjoyment of his joint rights, should be compelled at the instance of the other coparceners or strangers claiming under them and against his will to break up the joint family and forced to a suit for partition."

That would be the position if the judgment now under appeal were to stand. I have said sufficient to indicate that I consider the judgment to be against principle and authority and the appeal must be allowed. The result is that the case will be remanded to the Court of the Subordinate Judge. His decision was based merely on the issue relating to the maintainability of the suit. There are other issues and these will have to be decided. On the record reaching him the Subordinate Judge will hear and dispose of according to law the appellants' appeal from the judgment of the District Munsif, but as their parents did not appeal from the judgment of the District Munsif the suit will stand dismissed so far as they are concerned. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this appeal and in the second appeal. They will also be entitled to the refund of the court-fees paid in the Second Appeal and in the Letters Patent Appeal.

Krishnaswami Aiyangar, J.—I am of the same opinion but shall add a few words on certain aspects of the question argued before us. The judgment of Wadsworth, J., when analysed seems to be based upon two propositions: (i) that the right of a member to maintenance out of the joint family assets is only to be recognised where he has no right to enforce partition, and (ii) that the right of an unmarried minor daughter in a joint family to be maintained till marriage is enforceable only against the father and not against the joint family as a whole. The soundness of these propositions is open to question, as there seems to be nothing either in the texts or in the principles of Hindu law to lend support to either of them.

The learned Judge has referred in support of his decision to the statement of law contained in Mayne and in Mullah (see Mayne's Hindu Law, 10th Edition, page 820; Mullah's 8th Edition, page 582). While recognizing that these statements reflect the view taken in Bombay he accepted them as equally applicable to Madras, as the proposition is found stated in general terms and no Madras authority to the contrary was cited before him. He did not notice the decision of the Privy Council in the second Pithapur case, *Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pithapur*¹, which unambiguously recognized the right of a coparcener to be maintained out of the joint family property, but held however that it is the ordinary rule that a coparcener cannot claim maintenance if he is entitled to claim partition.

Of the three Bombay cases cited in support of the proposition, the first two *Himmatsingh Becharsingh v. Ganpat Singh*¹ and *Ramchandra Sakharam Vagh v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh*² related to a claim for maintenance by an adult son against the father. The family possessed property which was however not liable to partition, being by nature impartible. The claim was upheld. The right of a son to be maintained out of impartible joint family estate is beyond question, and does not appear to have ever been doubted. Decisions of the highest tribunal and of this Court in *Maharajah of Venkatagiri v. Raja Rajeswara Rao*³, have since authoritatively settled the point. It is plain, therefore, that no exception can be taken to the correctness of the actual decision of the Bombay High Court so far as it went.

The ratio of the decision in the first of these cases *Himmatsingh Becharsingh v. Ganpat Singh*¹ is to be found in the observation of Westropp, C.J., that "no authority was cited . . . to show that where a son could not enforce a partition with his father, he was prevented from suing the latter for maintenance."

To recognize a right, namely, the right of coparcenary, but at the same time to deny a remedy for its infringement is an impossible position and this is what seems to have weighed with the Court. The learned Chief Justice expressly refrained from expressing any opinion as to the right of a son to sue for maintenance, where he might if he chose sue for partition. This he did in spite of the fact that an earlier decision to which he had himself been a party had laid it down that a member of an undivided family could not sue for maintenance, unless by reason of a personal disqualification he was not entitled to sue for partition. The opinion here expressed does seem to support the view which has found favour with Wadsworth, J., but, as I shall presently show, is no longer tenable. Ramchandra

Aiyangar, J.

*Sakharam Vagh v. Sakharam Gopal Vagh*¹ was a case in which the father was found to be in possession of impartible property, but not of any property in which the son could claim a share. Melvill, J., observed that as a general rule perhaps, a Hindu is not bound to support a grown up son, but held that the liability existed when the family estate is impartible. Pinhey, J., agreed, but doubted whether it is good Hindu law to say that an adult son in an undivided Hindu family, who is suffering from no disability recognised by that law, can claim a separate maintenance from his father. In the later decision of the Bombay High Court, *Bhupal v. Tavanappa*², the son sued for separate maintenance, as a coparcener in a family consisting of the father, uncle, cousin and step-brother, and owning joint family property which was partible. He could not however on the view of the law as accepted in that Presidency, enforce a partition against a father when the father was joint in estate with his own ancestor or his collaterals and against his consent. Right to partition not existing, the son was held, on the principle of the earlier decisions, entitled to sue for maintenance. In all these cases, the right of the son to sue for maintenance was expressly stated to arise on account of the absence of the right to partition. The larger remedy being available, the lesser relief was denied on the footing that the primary and the only true remedy for the excluded parcener was to enforce his right to partition by suit. When this remedy is cut out by reason of a personal disqualification or otherwise, the coparcenary right ordinarily inherent in every member of the family suffers a diminution and it then finds expression in the inferior remedy of maintenance. The right to maintenance is thus to be regarded as a substitute for the lost right to a share and is in the nature of a secondary remedy to be granted in lieu of the primary one, where it is not available. This I think is the rationale which underlies the decisions of the Bombay High Court. With all respect, I regret to say that such a view of a coparcener's right cannot be sustained either in principle or on authority.

It is well to remember in this connection that a right to maintenance may arise in one of three ways. First, the existence of certain specified personal relationships, independently of the possession of joint property in the person liable, may give rise to the claim. The right in this class of cases is enforceable personally against the person on whom the law casts the burden, and is based on the well-known text of Manu, that

1. (1877) I.L.R. 2 Bom. 346.

2. (1921) I.L.R. 46 Bom. 435.

"the aged parents, a virtuous wife, and an infant child must be maintained even by the doing of a hundred prohibited acts."

The right does not extend to remoter relations. The second and the more important ground of claim is that based not on pure relationship, but on membership in a joint family possessed of joint family property. The Privy Council has in the second Pithapur case, *Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pithapur*¹, examined the jural basis of the right in this class of cases, and declared that it is an inherent quality of the coparcenary property that it should afford the means of sustenance to all the members of the coparcenary while the family remained joint. This is clear from the following observations of their Lordships:

"This coparcenary interest carries with it the inchoate right to raise an action for partition, and until partition is de facto accomplished these same persons (junior members) have a right to maintenance."

The meaning of this statement is sufficiently explicit. The junior members are entitled to maintenance until partition out of the common property where that property is ordinary partible property. The right will cease the moment a partition takes place, for thereafter there is no common property. It will continue to subsist so long as partition does not take place, and in the case of impartible property it is incapable of being terminated. The effect of the texts on the subject is correctly stated in Mayne's Hindu Law, page 821, in the following passage:

"The head of the undivided family is bound to maintain its members, their wives and their children; to perform their ceremonies and defray the expenses of their marriages."

Membership in the family, and the existence of joint property are the only conditions to which the right is subject. The third head of claim is based on the text of Yagnavalkya, which imposes a personal disqualification by reason of some defect, such as blindness, impotency, etc. (Yagnavalkya, II, 140-142.) The defect operates to exclude the sufferer from a share in the inheritance, but, in lieu of it, he is recognised as being entitled to maintenance. This, in my opinion, is the only class of cases in which the right to maintenance can be said to be recognised as a substitute for the right to partition with some justification, though even here, the right springs from the existence of joint property subject to the burden of supporting all the members of the family whether entitled to partition or not. But even if there is no impediment to the exercise of the right to partition, there can be no logical reason for compelling a member to sue for partition, when the head of the family neglects to maintain him. The right of an excluded member to sue for joint possession, without being obliged to sue for partition is recognised by Art. 127 of the Indian Limitation Act. From this it is to my mind clear, that partition is not to be regarded as the sole remedy. Joint possession which he can seek, is in most cases indistinguishable from maintenance out of the family assets, and it is therefore difficult to maintain a distinction in principle between the two. The logic of the observations of Chandavarkar, J., in *Naranbhai Vaghjibhai v. Ranchod Premchand*¹ referred to in the judgment of my Lord, appears to my mind to be indisputable.

That the true origin of the right in the second and third classes of cases is the existence of joint property, partible or impartible, scarcely admits of doubt at the present day. It seems to me to be absolutely impossible to get away from the principle laid down by the Privy Council which is that the right of a junior member in a joint family where the family possesses property is a right which springs from the joint property itself. When the question came to be examined by the Board in a case, *Vellayappa Chetti v. Natarajan*², in which the claim to maintenance was advanced by an illegitimate son of a deceased member of a joint family possessing joint family property, their Lordships used language which removes all further doubt on the point. Referring to the view taken in a decision of this Court in Ranoji v. Kandoji,³ that the share of inheritance given to the illegitimate son was merely in lieu of maintenance in the case of Sudras, their Lordships made the following observations:

"On the consideration of the texts and the cases on the subject their Lordships are of opinion that the illegitimate son of a Sudra by a continuous concubine has the status of a son, and that he is a member of the family; that the share of inheritance given to him is not merely in lieu of maintenance, but in recognition of his status as a son; that where the father has left no separate property and no legitimate son, but was joint with his collaterals, as in the present case, the illegitimate son is not entitled to demand a partition of the joint family property in their hands, but he is entitled as a member of the family to maintenance out of that property." (The italics are mine.)

3. (1885) I.L.R. 8 Mad. 557.

In the Full Bench decision of this Court in *Subbayya v. Anantaramayya*¹, the basis of the right of a daughter to maintenance out of the family property was examined, and it was again clearly laid down that the obligation was not personal to the father who was along with others a member of the family but that the obligation lay upon the family as a whole, that is to say, against the family property. The texts and the decisions were gone into and the learned Judges expressed the opinion that the right of the daughter was the surviving remnant of a larger right she once enjoyed in the joint family property.

These authorities seem to take the question beyond the region of controversy. The right of a coparcener to be maintained out of joint property is merely one of the modes in which the coparcenary right finds expression. That being so, it is not possible to agree with the view that that right is not to be exercised if there is a right to partition. There is no warrant for holding that an excluded member must either sue for partition or be content to remain without being maintained at the expense of the joint family property.

Wadsworth, J., has held that the daughter must institute a suit against the father in the first instance and pursue her remedies against his share in the joint family property. This view can be understood only on the theory that the daughter's right to maintenance is based solely on the personal obligation of the father. As I have already indicated, this theory is opposed to the decision in the Full Bench case already referred to. The personal liability of the father furnishes an additional ground of claim over and above the liability of the family property. The former alone can be said to be enforceable against the father and his separate property. The latter gives rise to a right enforceable against the joint family as a whole.

A member of a Hindu joint family cannot, simply because he is a member of that family without specific authority, pay a debt on behalf of the other member so as to enlarge the period of limitation.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Agency Subordinate Judge of Jaypore in O. S. No. 13 of 1937.

C. Rama Rao for Appellant.

Y. Suryanarayana for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Abdur Rahman, J.

Abdur Rahman, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought on the basis of a promissory note executed by one R. Appala Naidu in favour of the plaintiff on the 8th August, 1930 (Ex. A) for Rs. 680-2-9. Several defences were raised to this suit. But the main defence, with which we are now concerned, is that of limitation. The lower Court held the suit to be barred by time and dismissed it. The plaintiff appeals.

Since the suit was instituted more than three years after the execution of the promissory note it would ordinarily be barred by limitation. But it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that a payment of Rs. 145 which was made on the 23rd July, 1933, on behalf of the executant of the promissory note by his father brings the suit within time. As there is an endorsement of payment of Rs. 145 on the back of the promissory note signed by the defendant's father on the 23rd July, 1933, it has to be conceded that this payment was made by him in respect of the promissory note in suit. But the real question to decide is if the father was, as required by S. 20 of the Limitation Act, duly authorised on behalf of his son to pay this amount. So far as the endorsement is concerned, there is nothing in it which would show that the father was authorised to pay the money on behalf of his son. There is a reference in it to his (i.e., the father's) being a member of an undivided family with his son; but this is a different matter and we shall advert to it later. The father was not examined by the plaintiff although we are conscious of the reasons why the appellant did not summon him to give evidence. That does not, however, solve the plaintiff's difficulty. The onus of establishing that the payment by the father was made under the authority of the son has to be discharged by the plaintiff and unless we find it to have been discharged, he must fail. There is a reference in the statement of P.W. 2 that the plaintiff's brother was sent by the plaintiff to make a demand and the defendant when approached said in reply that he would send the money through his father. The plaintiff failed to produce his brother and the defendant's statement remained unproved. We have thus been left to depend on the oral testimony of the plaintiff and that of P. W. 2. Having regard to the fact that there is nothing in the endorsement which corroborates the statements of these witnesses, we are not inclined to place any credit, like the lower Court on their testimony.

The next question is, if there is anything in the endorsement itself which would show that the father was authorised to pay the money on behalf of his son. Mr. Rama Rao naturally laid a great deal of emphasis on the word 'undivided' appearing in the endorsement. His contention was that since the father and the son were members of a joint family, the father must be presumed to have been authorised on behalf of the son to make the payment. We are afraid it would be impossible for us to do so, unless there was something else to show that authority was, in fact, given to the father by the son to pay the debt on his behalf. A member of the joint Hindu family cannot, simply because he is a member of that family, without specific authority, pay a debt on behalf of another member of the family or make an endorsement on behalf of the other member so as to enlarge the period of limitation. In the absence of any other facts from which an authority may be inferred our decision must be that the plaintiff has failed to establish that the suit was within time. The dismissal of the suit by the lower Court was thus correct and its decision must be upheld. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

appellant claimed that, by reason of certain proceedings taken by the respondent, he was entitled to count time as beginning to run at a much later date, that is, from 1933 as the respondents' application in 1931 to record satisfaction of the decree had been dismissed as well as an appeal against that in 1933,

Held, that the present case did not fall within the principle laid down in Sriramachandra v. Venkateswara, (1938) 2 M.L.J. 1048: I.L.R. (1939) Mad. 252, because to accept the appellant's contention, the word 'appeal' in Art. 182 would have to mean any appeal the result of which may affect not the decree itself, but only the decree-holder's right to execute it at a particular time and in particular circumstances, which is just one of those equitable considerations against which the warning of the Privy Council in Nagendranath De v. Sureshchandra De, (1932) 63 M.L.J. 329: L.R. 59 I.A. 283: I.L.R. 60 Cal. 1 (P.C.), is directed. Hence the application was rightly barred as out of time.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an application filed on 21st August, 1935, to execute a decree passed on 9th November, 1929, and the question is whether it is barred by limitation. Prima facie it is so barred, but the appellant claims that by reason of certain proceedings taken by the respondent he is entitled to count time as beginning to run at a much later date. In November, 1931, respondent applied to the executing Court to record satisfaction of the decree. The Court dismissed his application. He appealed. His appeal was dismissed on 20th March, 1933. Appellant contends that under Art. 182 (2) of the Limitation Act time began to run only from that date.

The point for determination is whether the appeal by the respondent is an appeal within the meaning of that article. I have been referred by appellant's learned Advocate to a judgment of a Bench of which I was myself a member, reported in *Sriramachandra v. Venkateswara*¹ and have been asked to extend the principles of that judgment to the facts of this case. To some degree that is a very plausible argument. In the judgment prominence is given to the rule formulated by the Privy Council in *Nagendranath De v. Sureshchandra De*², that:

"So long as there is any question subjudice between any of the parties, those affected shall not be compelled to pursue the so often thorny path of execution, which, if the final result is against them, may lead to no advantage."

That rule certainly applies to the facts in this case; for, if respondent's appeal had been allowed appellant would have had no right to execute his decree. And, from a practical point of view, there is no difference between a decree-holder whose decree may be set aside, and a decree-holder who may be told by the Court that his decree has already been satisfied. But I cannot think that the rule so formulated by the Privy Council is intended to be the sole guide for the interpretation of the article. On p. 255 of *Sriramachandra v. Venkateswara*¹, the meaning of the word 'appeal' is discussed; and it is held that an appeal in this context means any appeal which 'affects' the decree sought to be executed. It cannot be successfully argued that respondent's appeal in the present case 'affects' the decree in any way. However it may have been decided the decree remains valid and without modification. There is here in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in *Nagendra-nath De v. Sureshchandra De*², no application "to set aside or revise the decision of a Subordinate Court" which is embodied in the decree; and on page 7 of the same judgment their Lordships emphasise the principle that in construing the provisions of the Limitation Act "equitable considerations are out of place, and the strict grammatical meaning of the words is the only safe guide." To accept the contention of the appellant's learned advocate that 'appeal' in Art. 182 means any appeal the result of which may affect not the decree itself, but only the decree-holder's right to execute it, at a particular time and in particular circumstances is to apply just one of those equitable considerations against which the warning of the Privy Council is directed.

I am accordingly of opinion that the present case does not fall within the principles of *Sriramachandra v. Venkateswara*¹ and that if I am bound by that decision I am bound by it to dismiss and not to allow this appeal. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Leave granted.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 9, rr. 9 and 13, and O. 43, r. 1
—Ex parte decree—Application to set aside—Conditional order passed— Condition not fulfilled—Dismissal of petition—Fresh application to restore earlier petition—Maintainability—Order of trial Court—Appealability.

The petitioner's suit was decreed ex parte and the respondent put in an application under O. 9, r. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set aside the ex parte decree. A conditional order was passed setting aside the ex parte decree if the respondent deposited a certain sum of money within a prescribed time. The condition, however, was not fulfilled and the petition was dismissed. No appeal was preferred against that order but a petition was filed purporting to be one under S. 151 and O. 9, r. 9 of the Code to restore the earlier petition which had been dismissed for non-fulfilment of the condition. The District Munsif after considering the application on its merits dismissed it on the ground that the respondent did not show sufficient cause for reopening the earlier application. An appeal having been preferred to the District Judge he came to the conclusion that the respondent had substantially complied with the condition and allowed the petition.

Held, in revision, that since the petition under O. 9, r. 9 had not been dismissed for default no petition would lie to reopen the previous order. If a petition lies at all, it would presumably be a review petition and the Court would in that case have to confine itself to the situation as it was at the time it considered the first application.

Held, further, that the appeal to set aside the order of the District Munsif dismissing the second petition was not competent as O. 43, r. 1 of the Code makes no provision for an appeal under such circumstances. And the mere fact that the petitioner did not object to the maintainability of the appeal did not make the order in the appeal valid, although that was a circumstance which could be taken into account in deciding whether the High Court should interfere with the order in revision.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner's suit was decreed ex parte and the respondent put in an application under O. 9, r. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the ex parte decree. A conditional order was passed setting aside the ex parte decree if the respondent deposited a certain sum of money within a prescribed time. The condition was not fulfilled and so the petition was dismissed. No appeal was preferred against that order; but a petition was filed purporting to be under O. 9, r. 9 and S. 151, Civil Procedure Code, to restore the earlier petition which had been dismissed for non-fulfilment of the condition. The District Munsif considered the application on its merits and came to the conclusion that the respondent did not show sufficient cause for re-opening the earlier application. He accordingly dismissed it. An appeal against this later order was preferred to the District Court, Chittoor. No question as to the maintainability of the appeal seems to have been raised and the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the respondent had substantially complied with the condition and that the petition should have been granted.

It has been held in *Salar Beg v. Kotayya*¹, and *Venkatanarasimha Rao v. Suryanarayana*², that when an application under O. 9, r. 9 is dismissed for default, another application to set aside that order would also be an application under O. 9, r. 9 and would therefore lie. In the present case, however, the petition under O. 9, r. 9 was not dismissed for default and I cannot see how any petition would lie to re-open the previous order. If a petition lies at all, it would presumably be a review petition and the Court would in that case have to confine itself to the situation as it was at the time it considered the first application. The appeal to set aside the order of the District Munsif dismissing the second petition was not competent as O. 43, r. 1, makes no provision for an appeal under such circumstances.

It is next argued that the petitioner must be deemed to have waived the above objection by not raising it in the lower Court. The respondent filed a revision petition against the order of the District Munsif and that petition was withdrawn and dismissed when the District Judge allowed the appeal and restored the suit to file. The petitioner was not however responsible for the withdrawal of that petition and there can be no waiver with regard to jurisdiction. The mere fact that the petitioner did not object to the maintainability of the appeal does not make the order in the appeal valid, but the petitioner's failure to raise the objection below is a circumstance that can be taken into account in considering whether this Court should interfere in revision. Any inconvenience caused by the default of a party during the hearing of a suit is generally a matter for which the other side can be compensated by the awarding of costs; and as in the present case no substantial injustice was done to the petitioner, I do not feel called upon to interfere with the order restoring the suit.

In the result, the Civil Revision Petition is dismissed, but there will be no order as to costs.

Will—Construction of—Word 'or' — Whether substitution of 'and' possible—Appeal filed by the mortgagee during pendency of trial—S. 146, Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), applicable—O. 22—Indian Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), S. 96.

One S, the maternal great-grandfather of the respondents, died leaving a will by which he directed that the balance of income from his estate after allowing for certain charitable bequest, should be paid yearly by the trustees named in the will to his daughter P during her lifetime. The material portion of the will ran as follows:

"After her death all my properties should go in equal shares to such of my aforesaid daughter P's sons or the sons' children as are alive. . . ."

P died and was survived by her son the fourth respondent whose sons were 1, 2 and 3 respondents. On the contention that on the death of P the entire estate became divisible in equal shares among the sons of the fourth respondent and the fourth respondent himself, as would be supported by the construction of 'and' put upon 'or' appearing in the will,

Held, that the construction of 'and' could not be put upon the word 'or'; what the will said was that after P's death the estate should go to her sons or if there were no sons, to the son's children. Such a construction alone is possible would be clear by reading S. 96 of the Indian Succession Act.

Held, further, that the appeal filed by a mortgagee from the fourth respondent during the pendency of the trial was not wrong. The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—This appeal raises the question of the construction of a will. One Shanmugam Pillai, the maternal great-grandfather of the first, second and third respondents and the grandfather of the fourth respondent, died in November, 1917, and by his will directed that the balance of the income of his estate, after allowing for a charitable bequest, should be paid yearly by the trustees appointed by the will to his daughter Ponnammal during her lifetime. Then follow these provisions:

"After her death all my properties should go in equal shares to such of my aforesaid daughter Ponnammal's sons or sons' children as are alive. The said trustees should put them in possession of the properties as aforesaid at the appointed time according to their respective shares. At the time of such delivery of possession, if those who take the property are minors they (trustees) should manage only their share of properties and deliver possession thereof as soon as the minor becomes a major."

Ponnammal died in or about the month of July, 1935. She was survived by her son the fourth respondent, who was married to one Sarathambal, the mother of the first, second and third respondents. Sarathambal and her children filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, to recover three-fourths of the estate of Shanmugam Pillai. Their contention was that on the death of Ponnammal the entire estate became divisible in equal shares between the fourth respondent and his children. They urged that the word 'or' in the passage "after her death all my properties should go in equal shares to such of my aforesaid daughter Ponnammal's sons or sons' children" should be read as "and". The Subordinate Judge accepted this construction of the will and decreed the suit. Hence this appeal.

The appellant is a mortgagee of a part of the estate, the mortgage having been created by the fourth respondent during the pendency of the proceedings in the trial Court. The first respondent having challenged the right of the appellant to file this appeal it is necessary to deal with this point first. S. 146 of the Code of Civil Procedure says that save as otherwise provided by the Code or by any law for the time being in force where a proceeding may be taken or an application made by or against a person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against a person claiming under him. O. 22, r. 10 makes provision for the continuance of a suit when there has been a death or marriage or insolvency during its pendency and when there has been an assignment or devolution of interest before the hearing has been completed. There is nothing in O. 22 which prevents the application of S. 146 in this case and a decision to this effect was given by this Court in *Sitaramaswami v. Lakshmi Narasimha*¹. For the respondents it has been suggested that the decision of the Privy Council in *Maharaja Sir Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Ram Kumar Bhagat*² has in effect overruled *Sitaramaswami v. Lakshmi Narasimha*¹. A perusal of the judgment of the Privy Council shows that this is not the case and it was so held by this Court in *Sreeramamurthi v. Jayaraja Lakshmi Ammal*³. We consider that the appellant had the right to file this appeal and the objection must be overruled.

The appellant's contention that the decision of the trial Judge is erroneous is well founded. The word "or" in this will cannot be read as "and". What the will says is that after Ponnammal's death the estate shall go to her sons or if there are no sons living to the sons' children. That the will must be construed in this way is indicated by S. 96 of the Indian Succession Act. That section says:

"Where property is bequeathed to a person with a bequest in the alternative to another person or to a class of persons, then, if a contrary intention does not appear by the will, the legatee first named shall be entitled to the legacy if he is alive at the time when it takes effect; but if he is then dead, the person or class of persons named in the second branch of the alternative shall take the legacy."

Illustration (iv) to the section runs as follows:

"Property is bequeathed to A or his heirs. A survives the testator. A takes the property absolutely."

The legal position is stated in Jarman on Wills (7th Edition, page 452) in these words:

"The question whether 'or' imports substitution arises most frequently in cases where the latter part of the gift is in favour of a class of persons related to the original devisee or legatee, such as 'issue', 'children', 'heirs', as for example, where the gift is to A or his issue or to A or in case of his death to his issue. The tendency of the modern cases is to construe such a gift as intended to substitute the issue for the original devisee or legatee in the event of the latter dying in the testator's lifetime."

In *Penley v. Penley*¹, there was a bequest to "my son William or his children." It was held that the son who survived was absolutely entitled and that the children could only take by substitution in the case of the death of their parent. In *Sparks v. Resta*², there was a bequest to A for life and after her death to B and C or their children. B and C survived. It was held that their children took nothing. It is unnecessary to pursue the investigation into the authorities further. Sufficient has been said to make it clear that the Subordinate Judge erred in construing the will in the way he did.

The appeal will be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs against the first, second and third respondents in this Court and in the Court below.

Held, that S. 44 (1) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act would apply to a case like this. Hence the discharge granted by the lower court was wrong as the insolvent's procedure was within the prohibition contained in S. 42 (1) (a) of the Act.

S. Panchapakesa Sastri and K. R. Krishnaswami Aiyar for Respondent.

The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was a close relative and a creditor of the respondent. The suit debt was incurred in 1928 in Devakottah, where both the petitioner and the respondent were living. The respondent has a son-in-law in the South Arcot District and while on a visit to him, filed an insolvency application under the summary procedure and omitted to mention the petitioner as his creditor. During the course of the insolvency proceedings, he made an endorsement on the pronote of the petitioner which saved limitation; but he failed to draw the attention of the Insolvency Court to the existence of this debt. The lower Court has found that he played a fraud upon the petitioner and deliberately concealed the existence of this debt in order that the insolvency proceedings might be decided to his advantage. The procedure being on the summary side, many formalities were dispensed with and very little publication was given to the insolvency. Nothing was, of course, known about the insolvent's life at Devakottah and neighbourhood and whether he had any property there. It is the petitioner's case that the respondent has property and that if she had been a party to the insolvency proceedings, she would have been able to prove so. Although no dividend was presumably declared, yet the Insolvency Court (that of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore) granted an absolute discharge without any hesitation, in spite of the prohibition contained in S. 42 (1) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The position on the findings given by the learned Subordinate Judge—with which I agree—is therefore that the insolvent by his fraud prevented the petitioner from appearing in the Insolvency Court and obtaining a share of the assets, if there were any, and now, when a suit is filed, he pleads the bar of these very insolvency proceedings in which he would not allow the petitioner to participate. S. 44 (1) (c) of the Provincial Insolvency Act would, I think, apply to a case like this. This was a debt in respect of which the respondent obtained forbearance by a fraud; for it was on account of his fraud that the petitioner was unable to appear in the insolvency proceedings and proceed against his assets.

The petition is therefore allowed and the suit decreed in favour of the plaintiff. The petitioner is entitled to her costs in this Court as well as in the lower Court.

her windows and the quantity of light and air that has been coming through them undiminished and for a permanent injunction restraining them from erecting any construction so as to interfere with plaintiff's use of her windows.

The plaintiff is the owner of a storied house No. 420 situated on the western row of the Triplicane High Road facing the east. The defendants are owners of house No. 419 situated next south of the plaintiff's house. The plaintiff alleges that the southern wall on the first floor of her house facing the defendants' house, contains three windows which have been in existence for over 50 years, that she had been enjoying free light and air through those windows for over 50 years, that the defendants began, about a month or two prior to suit, to construct a first floor on their house which consisted uptill then of only a ground-floor, that the defendants in so doing put up a wall by the side of the plaintiff's southern wall and as a result completely blocked the easternmost of the three windows, that the defendants' obstruction causes serious danger to the inmates of the plaintiff's house and that the value of her property is thereby diminished. The defendants deny the existence of the windows for over the statutory period and contend that the plaintiff suffers no substantial privation of light and air and that their act does not amount to an actionable nuisance.

The trial Judge found that the three windows were in existence for over the statutory period. It may here be noted that the learned Judge made a personal inspection of the premises on several occasions. He held on the evidence adduced, that there is no such diminution of light and air as to amount to a nuisance. As regards the westernmost window there is admittedly no obstruction. With respect to the middle window the Judge found that by reason of the roof of the defendants hanging over a portion of it there is no such diminution as to cause serious discomfort or to render the plaintiff's house uninhabitable. As for the easternmost window it is not disputed that it is completely blocked up. But the learned Judge found that the plaintiff receives sufficient light and air from other sources and holds that even if the easternmost window is closed up, the plaintiff cannot succeed as there is no substantial damage.

I agree with the findings of the lower Court. But the real question to be decided is whether under these circumstances the plaintiff has any cause of action against the defendants. S. 33 of the Indian Easements Act (V of 1882) which deals with disturbance of easements, runs as follows:

Sofia Bi Bi
v.
Vasudeva
Chetty.

"33. The owner of any interest in the dominant heritage, or the occupier of such heritage may institute a suit for compensation for the disturbance of the easement or of any right accessory thereto: provided that the disturbance has actually caused substantial damage to the plaintiff."

Explanation I.—The doing of any act likely to injure the plaintiff by affecting the evidence of the easement, or by. . . . is substantial damage within the meaning of this section.

Explanation II.—Where the easement disturbed is a right to the free passage of light no damage is substantial within the meaning of this section, unless it falls within the first explanation or Explanation II above says that in respect of an easement of light, damage is substantial if it falls within Explanation I which provides that the doing of any act likely to injure by affecting the evidence of easement is substantial damage. The principle underlying Explanation I is that any act of the defendant which affects the evidence of easement is enough to sustain an action though the plaintiff does not suffer actual damage. In other words there is a wrongful act for which an action lies. In *Esa Abbas Sait v. Jacob Haroon Sait*¹, a bench of this Court laid down at p. 332:

"There can be no doubt that in the present case, the act done by the defendants is likely to injure the plaintiff by affecting the evidence of the easements."

Goddard in the Law of Easements (8th Edition) at page 410 says:

"Generally the law will allow presumption of damage to be made in the case of alleged disturbance of easements as distinguished from natural rights, although no actual damage has resulted to the dominant owner, because any disturbance of an easement must be an injury to the right of the owner, as it tends to call his right in question and afford evidence thereafter in derogation of his title."

The learned author notes the case of *Bomer v. Hill*², where the plaintiff's right of way along a stream was obstructed by the defendant who put up a tunnel and it was held that:

2. 1 Scott. 526.

Sofia Bi Bi
Saheba
v.
Vasudeva
Chetty.

" Though the plaintiff received no damage, his right to the way is injured and if acquiesced in for over 20 years it would become evidence of renunciation and abandonment of the right."

Jones in Law of Easements at page 701 observes as follows:

" Damages are presumed to have resulted from the violation of the right. The disturbance of the easement is in derogation of the title of the dominant owner; and although he has suffered no actual injury he may maintain action to vindicate his title and have a judgment for nominal damages."

In the present case though the defendant's action did not cause actual damage to the plaintiff yet the closing of the eastern window constitutes an invasion of the plaintiff's easement; and on the principles stated above, the plaintiff has a right of action against the defendant.

The next question is as to the relief which the plaintiff is entitled. S. 35 of the Act provides that an injunction may be granted subject to the provisions of the Specific Relief Act. Having regard to the facts of this case I am inclined to award Rs. 150 as damages to the plaintiff. This sum will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the plaint until payment. In other respects the appeal is dismissed. Each party will bear his or her own costs throughout.

Negotiable Instruments—Joint promissory note—Absence of execution by one of the makers—Effect—Actual executant, when liable—Claim by actual executant for relief against liability under the note—Burden of proof.

An instrument written as a joint promissory note by A and B (in renewal of an earlier one by both and a promissory note by B alone) was executed by A but though the scribe had written at the foot of the note the description of B as the person who affixed his mark, no mark or thumb impression was taken from B who went away while the note was being written. In a suit on the promissory note A did not defend the suit.

Held, as there was no execution either by B or by a person authorised to execute on his behalf, B was not liable on the promote. The Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The petitioners were plaintiffs in a small cause suit based on a promissory note, Ex. A, dated 25th March, 1933, for a sum of Rs. 167-12-9. The promissory note reads as if it were a joint promissory note by the first and the second defendants. But it is found that it was not executed by the second defendant though it was executed by the first defendant. What happened was that the two defendants went to the plaintiffs and asked them to write a promissory note in renewal of two earlier promissory notes, the major note being Ex. C, a joint bond executed by both the first and second defendants, the lesser one being Ex. B a promissory note by the first defendant alone. While the suit note was being written the second defendant went away. The scribe wrote at the foot of the note the description of the second defendant as the person who affixed his mark, but no mark or thumb print was in fact taken from the second defendant. The first defendant executed the promissory note and he did not defend the suit nor has he appeared to oppose this revision petition. The lower Court found that as the note was intended to be a joint note and was not executed by one of the joint promisors, there was no completed contract and the suit had to be dismissed as against both the defendants. In revision, it is contended that both the defendants are liable.

The case with reference to the second defendant is simple. It is based on the decision of a bench of this Court in *Balayya v. Subbayya*¹, which held that when a party to a promissory note authorised the scribe to affix his mark and under that authority the scribe wrote words indicating that the promisor was the person who affixed the mark, but did not actually put any mark, there was a sufficient execution by the agent of the promisor to bind him. It seems to me that there are no such facts in the present case. There is no evidence that the second defendant authorised any one to affix his mark; all that we have is evidence that he promised to execute the note and went away without doing so. There was no execution either by him or by a person authorised to execute on his behalf. Clearly, therefore, the decision of the lower Court so far as the second defendant is concerned is correct.

The position with reference to the first defendant is not so clear and there is a good deal of rather conflicting case-law on the subject. Most of the cases decided by the Indian Courts have references to S. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and are cases in which when one person has signed a bond, the signature of the other person is forged on that bond either with or without the connivance of the actual executant. We are not here concerned with any alteration of the instrument or any forgery of the signature of the second defendant. The simple position is this: When there is a promissory note purporting to be a joint promissory note of A and B and A alone executes and delivers that note and B fails to execute it, is the note binding on A, when there is no evidence one way or the other whether or not A executed only on the faith that B would also execute. It is, I think, well established that when A executes a bond on the faith that B will also execute it and that B fails to do so, B has an equity in his favour relieving him from a liability which he never intended to undertake. But it seems also to be settled that if A signed the bond without any regard to the question whether B signed it or not and if he delivered it as his bond, he is liable thereon, even though B did not sign. The English cases do to some extent distinguish between a deed and a simple contract. Seeing that under S. 46 of the Negotiable Instruments Act the making of a promissory note is completed by delivery, it is difficult to see how a person who signs and delivers a negotiable instrument is in any better position than a person who signs, seals and delivers a deed. The instrument is in law the instrument of the maker, unless he can establish any equity whereby it should not be enforced against him. It seems to be settled that the question whether a particular instrument was signed by one of the parties on the faith, that the other would also sign is a question of fact. (*Vide Latch v. Wedlake and Lewis Thomas*¹.) Is this question of fact one which must be proved by the plaintiff who seeks to impose liability upon the actual executant or is it a ground of defence which must be established by the person who has signed the instrument. The latter view seems to be a correct view. It is true that Jessel, M.R., has stated in the case of *Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co.*¹, that:

Sundaram
v.
Venkatappadaan.

"It is well settled that if two persons execute a deed on the faith that a third will do so, and that is known to the other parties to the deed, the deed does not bind in equity if the third refuses to execute."

This dictum has, however, been criticised by the House of Lords as going too far. In the case of *Nass v. Westminster Bank, Ltd.*², where their Lordships discuss the cases on this subject and point out that they are mainly cases where it was sought to impose on a man a greater liability than he had ever intended to bear, where his intention was not in doubt, and where, if he were not able to get equitable relief, he would suffer substantial loss. Their Lordships further on quote with approval the case of *Ex parte Harding: re Smith, Fleming & Co.*³, where it is expressly decided that the person who asserts such an equity in his favour to relieve him from the obligations of the contract which he has signed must affirm and prove the grounds upon which that equity is based. Their Lordships state that:

"Two propositions as regards the equity in question may safely be asserted, namely, (i) that the intention of the person who is setting it up is not a matter of mere conjecture, and (ii) that the equity comes into play only when, in its absence, the legal effect of the unconditional execution of the deed will lead to substantial injustice."

I may observe that the case just referred to of *Ex parte Harding*³ was not a case of a deed but of a simple letter of guarantee. And it was clearly laid down that the burden of proof lay upon the person who, having signed that guarantee, sought equitable relief against the obligation which it imposed. It is true that in that case the letter of guarantee did not in its actual recitals indicate an intention that other parties should also sign it. But the previous letter leading up to that letter of guarantee made this point clear.

Turning to the facts of the present case, there was no doubt an intention to execute a joint promissory note. But the first defendant was personally liable under both of the promissory notes which the suit note superseded. There was no question therefore of his being a mere surety or guarantee and the plaintiffs could have recovered the whole amount of the two earlier promissory notes from him personally. It is true that the failure of the second defendant to execute the suit promissory note might make it difficult for the first defendant to establish a right of contribution as against him. But so far as the plaintiffs were concerned, the liability with which they propose to charge the first defendant under this note is not different from the liability which he proposed to undertake; and there is no evidence that he would have been unwilling to sign this promissory note, had it not been for the belief that the second defendant was also going to sign it. The first defendant has not denied his liability and has not put forward any plea that his liability was incurred conditionally upon the second defendant undertaking a similar liability. On these facts and on the authorities cited, it seems to me that the first defendant having signed and delivered this promissory note and having established no grounds to relieve him from the liability incurred thereunder must be held liable for the suit claim.

In the result, therefore, I allow the petition to the extent that the plaintiffs will have a decree for the suit claim with interest at the contract rate until to-day and subsequent interest at 6 per cent. till realisation and costs against the first defendant only. As against the second defendant, the revision petition is dismissed with costs.

*Madras Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1932)—Award of Registrar—

A sale in execution of an award of the Registrar or the Arbitrator under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act gives a good title to the purchaser who in good faith purchased it as against the Receiver in insolvency.

If the award under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act is not a decree, then the whole of S. 51 (1) of Provincial Insolvency Act becomes inapplicable. But S. 51 (1) of the Act should be held to apply to all execution sales and should not be confined to assets realised in execution of 'decrees' as restricted by the decision of the Full Bench in *Rajagopala Chettiar v. The Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Balabharathi Co-operative Credit Society of Govada had to get some money from one Ramatulasamma. The society proceeded under S. 51 of the Madras Co-operative Societies Act of 1932 to recover the dues and an award was passed directing payment of the sum due. The award was being executed against the property of the debtor. At that stage, another creditor of the debtor who is the first respondent in this Civil Revision Petition filed I. P. No. 105 of 1934 to adjudicate Ramatulasamma as an insolvent and applied for the appointment of a receiver under S. 20 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The Subordinate Judge before whom the application was made rejected the application holding that the Co-operative Credit Society had a first charge upon the entire estate of the debtor. The matter was taken up on appeal, and the District Judge held that the Co-operative Society had no prior charge over the general estate of the debtor and that the prior charge refers only to the interest of the member in the share capital of the Society. By the time the appeal was decided by the District Judge, the properties of Ramatulasamma had been sold by the Sale Officer under r. 22 of the Rules made under the Act, and hence, there was no scope for the appointment of a receiver of the properties. The District Judge, therefore, dismissed the appeal with a direction that the appellant before him might take necessary steps as regards the sale proceeds in the hands of the society. •

The application out of which the present revision arises, was filed in the Subordinate Judge's Court under S. 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act and S. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, requesting the Court to call for the entire sale proceeds of about Rs. 2,100 or at least the balance due after deducting the amount due to the society. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application holding that neither S. 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act nor S. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code applied to this case. On appeal, the District Judge came to the conclusion that S. 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act applies and that the Co-operative Society was bound to remit the sale proceeds to the Insolvency Court. The Appellate Court held that the Co-operative Society is not entitled to the benefit of the execution against the receiver in the insolvency because the assets were realised after the date of the admission of the Insolvency Petition.

This revision petition is filed in this Court by the Co-operative Credit Society. It is argued that S. 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act applies only where execution of a decree has issued against the properties of the judgment-debtor. It is said that in this case the property was sold not in execution of a decree but that it was sold in execution of an award under the Co-operative Societies Act (Madras Act VI of 1932).

The expression 'decree' is not defined in the Provincial Insolvency Act and under S. 2, cl. 2, of the Act:

"Words and expressions used in this Act and defined in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 and not hereinbefore defined shall have the same meanings as those respectively attributed to them by the said Code."

Under S. 2 (2) of Civil Procedure Code decree means:

"The formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit."

What is urged is that the Registrar or Arbitrator is not deciding a suit. The Registrar or the Arbitrator in passing the award under the Act is certainly acting as a Court.

So, the real question is whether a proceeding under the Act is a "suit". The procedure laid down under the Co-operative Societies Act is a substitute for an ordinary suit in a Civil Court and the requirements of a suit are, I think, satisfied in a proceeding under the Co-operative Societies Act.

Under r. 15, cl. (1) of the Rules made under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act the reference under S. 51 of the Act is required to be in writing. This corresponds to the plaint in an ordinary suit; the other clauses of r. 15 show that the subsequent procedure is substantially the same as that followed in an ordinary suit. But Mr. V. Subramaniam, the learned Counsel for the petitioner, relies upon the decision of the Full Bench in *Rajagopala Chettiar v. The Hindu Religious Endowments Board*¹. The decision was rendered under the Hindu Religious Endowments Act and it was held that a proceeding under S. 84 (2) of the Act was not a suit. There are various provisions in that Act where the proceedings are referred to as suits, but the proceeding under S. 84 (2) is referred to as a petition and the decision of the Full Bench may be distinguishable on this ground. But the decision lays down that an adjudication in a proceeding will be a decree only where the proceeding starts with a plaint. I do not, therefore, wish to base my judgment on the question whether a proceeding under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act is or is not a decree within the meaning of S. 2 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code and therefore covered by S. 51 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, though my own view is that an award under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act is a decree as used in S. 51 (1) of Provincial Insolvency Act.

Under S. 28 (7) of the Provincial Insolvency Act the order of adjudication relates back to and takes effect from the date of the presentation of the petition. Under S. 28 (2) on the making of an order of adjudication the whole property of the insolvent vests in the Court or in the Receiver and shall be divisible among the creditors. Reading S. 28 (2) and S. 28 (7) together, the result is that on an adjudication the properties of the insolvent vest in the Receiver with effect from the date of the presentation of the petition. There are similar provisions in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and in the English Bankruptcy Act. If matters stood there all dealings with the property after the date of the insolvency petition would be null and void but certain provisions are enacted to protect persons who deal bona fide with the insolvent before the date of actual adjudication. A payment by the insolvent to any of his creditors, a payment or delivery to the insolvent, any transfer by the insolvent for valuable consideration and any contract or dealing by or with the insolvent for valuable consideration, are protected provided that the transaction took place before the date of the order of adjudication and the person with whom such transaction takes place had not at that time notice of the presentation of any insolvency petition by or against the debtor. (See S. 55 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.) Then we have S. 51 of the Act which provides for sales in execution of the property of the insolvent. Under S. 51 (3):

"A person who in good faith purchases the property of the debtor under a sale in execution shall in all cases acquire a good title to it against the receiver."

This does not restrict the sales to those held in execution of a decree but applies to sales in execution in general. Therefore, the sale in execution of an award of the Registrar or the Arbitrator under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act gives a good title to the purchaser who in good faith purchased it as against the Receiver, in insolvency. S. 51 (1) deals with the assets realised in execution. The clause itself begins with the expression "where execution of a decree has issued against the property of the debtor" and provides that in such a case no person shall be entitled to the benefit of the execution against the Receiver except in respect of assets realised in course of the execution by sale or otherwise before the date of the admission of the petition. It appears to me that both Ss. 55 (1) and 55 (3) refer to the same classes of cases; under cl. (3) the sale itself is good and under cl. (1) the sale proceeds go to the receiver if realised after the date of the admission of the petition and to the creditor if realised before that date. There is no reason to suppose that a decree-holder under an award under the Act is intended to be placed on any higher footing than an ordinary decree-holder.

If the contention advanced by Mr. Subramanian is correct, then the protection given under S. 51 (1) will not apply. If the award under the Madras Co-operative Societies Act is not a decree, then the whole of S. 51 (1) becomes inapplicable. In such a case there is no other provision in the Act which will give the society any immunity even to the extent to which such immunity is provided in the case of executions of decrees by S. 51 (1). The acceptance of the argument far from benefiting the petitioner, is against him.

I think, therefore, that S. 51 (1) should be held to apply to all execution sales and should not be confined to assets realised in execution of "decrees" as restricted by the decision of the Full Bench in *Rajagopala Chettiar v. The Hindu Religious Endowments Board*¹.

In either view therefore whether the word "decree" as used in S. 51 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is to be understood in a general sense or in the restricted sense, I think the same result follows so far as this revision is concerned.

This Civil Revision Petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

Court. The question is apparently not covered by authority and is not without difficulty. Unfortunately, very few of the relevant documents are before the Court and there is a certain obscurity regarding the facts.

So far as I have been able to gather them, the admitted facts are as follows: The suit was originally filed by one plaintiff alone for partition of his share in properties owned in common by members of a Muhammadan family. This plaintiff was entitled to a $\frac{7}{24}$ th share. By a clerical error the plaint was so drafted as to make it appear that instead of claiming $\frac{7}{24}$ of the whole of the properties, he was claiming only $\frac{7}{24}$ of $\frac{7}{24}$ of the family properties. This error was not noticed till after the preliminary decree had been passed and an appeal had been filed by certain of the defendants. There was a large array of respondents, but the principal respondent was the original plaintiff. He died during the pendency of the appeal and no legal representative having been brought on record within the time allowed, the appellate Court ordered that the appeal so far as he was concerned, abated. Apparently, the appellant made out no case against the other respondents, and the appeal as against them was dismissed with costs. There was no order as to costs in respect of the deceased respondent. After this decision the present petitioners, legal representatives of the deceased first plaintiff were impleaded in the final decree proceedings as the second and third plaintiffs and it was at this stage that the error in the plaint which had been incorporated in the preliminary decree was discovered and an application was filed before the District Munsiff to rectify this error both in the plaint and in the preliminary decree. It was rejected by the District Munsiff on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to modify the decree of the appellate Court. This is the order against which the present revision petition has been filed, but the judgment contains no reference to the fact that the appeal, so far as it related to the first plaintiff under whom the petitioners claim, had abated before the dismissal of the appeal as against the other respondents. A review application was filed calling the attention of the District Munsif to this abatement. The District Munsif declined to modify the previous order and there is no petition to revise the review order.

The contention of the petitioners is that when an appeal abates, the position of the deceased respondent is just the same as it would have been had no appeal been filed and his legal representatives are entitled to treat, as the only decree affecting them, the decree of the trial Court. Therefore, it is contended, if a clerical error is discovered in this decree, they must look to the trial Court to amend that decree and they have no locus standi to approach the appellate Court for the same relief. This being a matter of first impression and one which is not free from difficulty, it is, in my opinion, necessary to dispose of it with reference to the special facts of the case and it is not desirable to attempt to adjudicate on the hypothetical case in which an amendment is sought of a decree in a case when the appeal has abated as against the sole respondent. In many respects, the abatement of an appeal has the same effect as the dismissal of an appeal. Under O. 22, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code, the abatement of a suit or appeal prevents the filing of a fresh suit or appeal raising the same contentions and it is established that when an appeal has abated, limitation runs from the date of the order of abatement and not from the date of the preliminary decree. It is obviously necessary that one Court or other should have the power to rectify clerical errors affecting the process of execution in which the legal representatives of the deceased respondent are interested. There is a decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported in *Deoki v. Jwala Prasad*¹ to the effect that when the appellate Court merely allows an appeal to be withdrawn, this order has not the effect of a decree superseding the trial Court's decree and any amendment is to be carried out by the trial Court. It is of course arguable that when an appellant allows the appeal against the deceased respondent to abate, the effect is very much the same as if the appeal had been withdrawn as against that deceased respondent. But even assuming this to be so if the appeal is withdrawn as against one respondent but prosecuted as against other respondents until it results in a decree on the merits in the appellate Court, in such circumstances should the respondent in respect of whom the appeal has been withdrawn be required to go to the trial Court for his amendment or to the appellate Court. My attention has been drawn to two decisions of the Madras High Court which have some slight bearing on the question before me. One is the decision of a single Judge reported in *Muthu Bhatlar v. Mrithunjaya Bhatlar*².

Minni
Zuleka Bi
v.
Kulsum Bi.

The actual decision was to the effect that when there is a second appeal pending, it is the lower appellate Court which has jurisdiction to amend the decree. The correctness of that proposition is not disputed, but it is contended that a consequential order of the learned Judge on a Civil Miscellaneous Petition, filed contemporaneously with the Civil Revision Petition against the District Judge's refusal to amend by implication recognises the power of the High Court to carry out an amendment in the case of an appeal which has been withdrawn. It does appear that the second appeal in that case was eventually withdrawn; but it does not appear that the second appeal had been withdrawn at the time when this Civil Miscellaneous Petition was filed. If as seems likely, the second appeal was still pending, the order on the Civil Miscellaneous Petition, consequential upon the order in the Civil Revision Petition, that the amendment was to be carried out by the District Judge, would have no more effect than to implement the decision that the pendency of an appeal did not affect the power of the lower Court to amend. The other case is one reported in *Pankajammal v. Seshadri Aiyangar*¹. That was a revision against an order of amendment carried out by the lower appellate Court when there had been a second appeal which had been dismissed. One of the learned Judges held that the lower appellate Court had the power of amendment because the second appeal had been dismissed merely on the ground that no appeal lay and therefore there was no decree of the second appellate Court confirming the decree of the lower appellate Court. The other learned Judge does not appear to have adopted this view, for he agrees with the decision on another ground and refrains from commenting on the theory that the dismissal of a second appeal on the ground that no appeal lies is not tantamount to a decree. There is also a decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court reported in *Pitamb Lal v. Balwant Singh*², in which it was held that when an appeal was dismissed for default, there is, properly speaking, no superseding decree of the appellate Court and an amendment application lies to the lower Court. This decision, like that in *Deoki v. Jwala Prasad*³, already referred to, does not deal with the difficult question which arises when the appellate Court actually gives a decision on the merits so far as some of the parties are concerned though the appeal fails for want of prosecution or some similar cause as regards another party.

v.
Kulsum Bi.

Whatever the position may be when an appeal abates in its entirety and there is no possibility, in consequence, of conflicting decrees, it seems to me that there are obvious grounds for limiting the power of amendment to the appellate Court when an appeal has abated only in part and a decree on merits has been given as against the other respondents. In such circumstances, there is clearly a decree capable of execution passed by the appellate Court. The legal representatives of the deceased respondent would presumably be required when filing an application to execute the trial Court's decree, to produce a copy of the appellate Court's decree in order to prove that the appellate Court had not modified the decree so far as the deceased decree-holder was concerned. When the decree in question, like that which is now under consideration, is a preliminary decree for partition and possession of a fractional share, the result of allowing an amendment in the trial Court altering the fraction of the deceased respondent's share would necessarily be that there would be two conflicting decrees. The preliminary decree of the trial Court gave to the plaintiff $\frac{7}{24}$ of $\frac{7}{24}$ of the entire properties. The amendment suggested would give him $\frac{7}{24}$ th of the whole properties—a very different share. The appellate Court's decree which binds all the parties, except perhaps the legal representatives of the deceased respondent, confirms the former decree for the lesser share. It seems to me to follow that if there is to be an amendment which has the effect of enlarging the plaintiff's share, that amendment must necessarily be carried out in the appellate Court's decree if a conflict between the two decrees is to be avoided.

It is objected that this would put the legal representatives of the deceased respondent in the position having no locus standi to pray for the amendment of a decree affecting them, such decree being clearly vitiated by a clerical error. I do not think that this objection is insuperable. Granted that for the purpose of coming on record in a pending appeal, there is a special period of limitation provided, when we are at the execution of the final decree stage, the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder can be brought on record at any time when the decree is alive, so far as is necessary for the purpose of prosecuting their rights. If once it is conceded that the decree which is to be executed is in substance the appellate Court's decree, there being no statutory prohibition against the amendment of this decree at the instance of the legal representatives of a deceased decree-holder, it seems to me to follow ex debito justitiae that the appellate Court must have the power to carry out the necessary amendments at the instance of the legal representatives of the deceased party.

And in this view I dismiss the revision petition with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), S. 115 and O. 23, r. 1 (2) (a) and (b) —Leave to file fresh suit—Order granting—Need for exercising power sparingly—Court not considering question of jurisdiction in making order—Interference by High Court in revision.

As O. 23, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, lays down a principle which is an exception to the general rule that a fresh suit cannot be filed on the same cause of action it should be exercised very sparingly. And the grounds referred to in r. 1 (2) (b) of O. 23 must be, if not ejusdem generis with the ground specified in r. 1 (2) (a), at any rate analogous to it.

If the lower Court has considered whether there was a formal defect or not and had decided it wrongly the High Court will not interfere in revision. Where, however, the trial Court not only acts without jurisdiction in granting leave in a case in which it has no power to grant such leave, but further never purports to consider whether it had jurisdiction to do so, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the order granting leave to file a fresh suit.

Petition under S. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore dated 13th December, 1938 and made in I. A. No. 299 of 1938 in O. S. No. 68 of 1933.

The Court delivered the following

Jagadambal
v.
Sundar-ammal.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is a minor represented by a next friend; and she has brought this suit as a reversioner against the widow of the last male owner, in possession, alleging acts of waste and mismanagement. A number of specific acts of waste and mismanagement were set out in the original plaint, which was filed on 2nd October, 1933. In 1934 an application was put in by the plaintiff to be allowed to amend the plaint on the ground that fresh acts of waste had come to the notice of the next friend. That petition was allowed in the High Court. In 1938, another application was put in to amend the plaint, alleging further acts of waste and mismanagement. That petition was refused on the ground that it was very belated and that the facts alleged must have come to the notice of the plaintiff's next friend long before the time alleged. The order dismissing the second application to amend was brought to the High Court in revision; and the revision petition was dismissed. The plaintiff has now filed an application to withdraw the suit with permission to file a fresh suit on the same causes of action. That petition was allowed and the defendants have preferred this revision petition against that order.

Permission can be given to a plaintiff to file a fresh suit on the same cause of action where, in the words of O. 23, r. 1 (2), the Court is satisfied (a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect; or (b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim. It has been consistently held by this Court that the sufficient grounds referred to in r. 1 (2) (b), must be ejusdem generis with the ground specified in r. 1 (2) (a), that is, there must be some formal defect. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., sitting with Oldfield, J., in *Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal*¹, doubted whether this was the case; but Oldfield, J., reviewing the previous decisions of this Court, was satisfied that that was the rule. In all the Madras cases since then, as well as in the decisions of other High Courts, it has been held without exception that the grounds in r. 1 (2) (b) must be, if not ejusdem generis with the ground in r. 1 (2) (a), at any rate analogous to it. *Palikanji Chettiar v. *Veerasami*¹, *Niamathulla Khan Sahib v. Abdul Rasack Sahib*², *Cherukuri Nagamma v. Cherukuri Lakshminarasu*³, *Ramrao Bhagwantrao v. Babu Appanna Samaga*⁴ and *Jumna v. Ram Sahai*⁵, are among the cases quoted, where this principle has been laid down and confirmed. No cases to the contrary have been cited. It is true that a Bench of this Court in *Krishnan Somayajipad v. Raman Nair*⁶ allowed an amendment of a plaint where the defect was apparently not a formal one; but the question whether such an amendment could be allowed or not, did not there come up for decision and the point was not considered. In *Doraisami Pillai v. Thungasami Pillai*⁷, where a suit of a minor was withdrawn because the next friend was not possessed of sufficient funds to further conduct the suit, the Court set aside the order dismissing the petition to review the order of dismissal of the suit on the ground that the minor ought not to be prejudiced by making it impossible for him to agitate a genuine grievance merely because his next friend did not have any money. The suit was restored. Whether or no an application was put in to withdraw the suit with permission to file a fresh one we do not know; but that was a case in which it might be said that there was a formal defect or something analogous to it.

The principal argument of Sampath Aiyangar for the respondent is that this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the learned Subordinate Judge's order. He very rightly points out that the mere fact that the lower Court made a mistake in law is not a sufficient ground for interference by this Court. I also with respect agree with the learned Judges in *Balthasar & Son v. E. M. Abowath*⁸ and *Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshar Das*⁹, that if the lower Court had considered whether there was a formal defect or not and had decided it wrongly, this Court should not interfere in revision—although Mr. Sampath Aiyangar has not been able to find any Madras decision that goes so far. I am, however, satisfied that not only did the lower Court act without jurisdiction in granting leave in a class of case in which he had no power to grant leave to file a fresh suit; but that he never purported to consider whether he had jurisdiction or not. If he had been aware of the fact that he could only grant leave to file a fresh suit if there had been something like a formal defect and he had come to the conclusion that there was only a formal defect in the plaintiff's case, then I would have doubted whether I had jurisdiction to interfere with the lower Court's order. The petition asking for permission to withdraw with permission to file a fresh suit is very vague in its terms; and the learned Subordinate Judge does not really attempt to consider whether a case had been made out for granting permission or no. He merely says:

"It is stated in the affidavit that numerous matters came to be known to plaintiff's next friend by proceedings taken after the suit was instituted and that these have to be shown in the plaint. Under these circumstances, I hold that plaintiff should be given leave to withdraw the suit regarding A schedule properties with liberty to sue afresh."

It is therefore seen that the learned Subordinate Judge did not indicate any ground for granting permission; and there was no finding that there was a defect in the suit which prevented the plaintiff from going on. This is therefore a case in which this Court can interfere in revision.

The remaining question is whether this Court should interfere in revision. In the many cases cited above, the learned Judges of this Court felt that they ought to interfere. No doubt in some of those cases the case for granting permission was even weaker than in the present case. Evidence had been let in or there was some action on the part of the plaintiff which amounted to a fraud on the Court. But as O. 23, r. (1) lays down a principle which is an exception to the general rule that a fresh suit cannot be filed on the same cause of action, it should be exercised very sparingly. In the present case, the object of the plaintiff's next friend in asking for permission to withdraw the suit and to file a fresh one is undoubtedly to circumvent the orders passed by the lower Court on the second amendment application and of this Court in revision. It would be improper, I consider, to allow a fresh suit to be filed under these circumstances. As pointed out in the order on the amendment application, the plaintiff can file a fresh suit on such causes of action as have arisen since the filing of his earlier suit, and evidence regarding them may even be relevant in the present suit, although I do not purport to decide that point. I am therefore satisfied that this is a proper case for interference.

Civil Procedure Code (V of 1908), O. 21, r. 63—Attachment in execution—Mortgagee's petition praying that sale may be subject to mortgage—Order that existence of mortgage should be notified to bidders—Suit on mortgage against auction purchaser after one year of order—If barred—Limitation Act, Art. 11—If applicable.

In proceedings before the Registrar of Co-operative Societies the appellant obtained an award entitling him to recover Rs. 1,116-6-2 from the second respondent. On 18th May, 1931, the appellant attached in execution two items of property which the second respondent had mortgaged to the third respondent. The third respondent on 15th December, 1932, filed a petition praying that the attached properties may be sold subject to his mortgage. On 25th January, 1933, an order was passed saying "The mortgage is said to be collusive. Its existence and decree-holder's allegation about it will be notified at the time of the sale which comes on on 27th February, 1933." The property was duly sold and purchased by the appellant. The assignee of the interests of the mortgagee filed a suit on 7th April, 1936, to recover the amount due on the mortgage. The appellant contended that the mortgagee's petition in the execution proceedings was a claim petition and that the order of the 25th January, 1933, amounted to an order within the meaning of O. 21, r. 63 and the suit not having been filed within twelve months of the order the rights under the mortgage were lost.

Held, the order in the execution merely directed that the existence of the mortgage should be brought to the notice of the bidders at the auction. The order does not fall within the purview of O. 21, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code and is not within Limitation Act, Art. 11. The assignee of the mortgagee is entitled to a mortgage decree.

JUDGMENTS. The Chief Justice.—On the 7th April, 1936, the first respondent filed the suit out of which this appeal arises in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore to recover the sum of Rs. 7,248-10-8, which he claimed to be due on a mortgage created by the second respondent in favour of the third respondent, who had assigned his interest to him. On the 2nd March, 1931, the appellant, who was the third defendant in the suit, obtained in proceedings before the Registrar of Co-operative Societies an award entitling him to recover Rs. 1,116-6-2 from the second respondent. On the 18th May, 1931, the appellant attached in execution proceedings in the Court of the District Munsif of Ellore two items of the properties covered by the mortgage in suit. On the 15th December, 1932, the third respondent filed a petition asking that the District Munsif should direct the properties attached by the appellant to be sold subject to his mortgage. On the 25th January, 1933, the District Munsif passed this order on the third respondent's petition:

Leach, C. J.

"Heard pleaders. The mortgage is said to be collusive. Its existence and decree-holder's allegation about it will be notified at the time of the sale which comes on on 27th February, 1933. No further order."

The attached properties were in due course put up for sale by auction and the appellant purchased the second respondent's equity of redemption in them. The appellant defended the mortgage suit on the ground that the first respondent had lost all interest in the two items by reason of the fact that the suit was not filed within twelve months of the order dated the 25th January, 1933. His argument was that the petition filed by the third respondent asking that the property be sold subject to his mortgage was a claim petition and that the order of the 25th January, 1933, amounted to an order against him within the meaning of O. 21, r. 63. The Subordinate Judge rejected this contention and granted the first respondent a mortgage decree for Rs. 3,475 with interest and costs.

O. 21, r. 58 provides that, where any claim is preferred, or any objection is made to an attachment on the ground that the property attached is not liable to attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection. R. 60 deals with the circumstances in which the Court shall release the property from attachment and r. 61 the circumstances in which it shall disallow the claim. R. 62 says that, where the Court is satisfied that the property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, and thinks fit to continue the attachment, it may do so, subject to the mortgage or charge. R. 63 says that where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of a suit, the order shall be conclusive. Art. 11 of the Limitation Act provides that a suit to set aside an order falling within O. 21, r. 63, shall be filed within one year from the date of the order. If the order of the 25th January, 1933, is an order which falls within the purview of r. 63, the suit is out of time. The first respondent, however, contends that the order of the 25th January, 1933, is not an order against him and that therefore the case does not fall within Art. 11 of the Limitation Act.

Society,

For the appellant great reliance is placed upon the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in *Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma*¹. In that case a Zamindarini applied for the removal of the attachment of property which was about to be sold in execution, claiming it as her own. The District Munsif passed an order on this petition in these terms:

"As this petition was filed late, this claim is ordered to be notified to the intending bidders."

A further petition was then presented and the District Munsif passed this order:

"The allegations of the Zamindarini will be notified to the bidders with the remark that the Zamindarini did not take steps for her claim being enquired into during the last ten months."

The Full Bench, which consisted of Wallis, C.J. and Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., held that the second order amounted to a rejection of the Zamindarini's claim on the ground that it had been filed late. The Court was there considering a particular order and the decision which it gave must be confined to the facts of that case. It is true that Seshagiri Aiyar, J., said that an order on a claim petition which expresses no final judgment upon the right put forward, but simply directs the sale after notifying the claim, is an order against the claimant and the claimant is bound to institute a suit under Art. 11 of the Limitation Act, but that was not the decision of the Court. The decision of the Court was expressed in the concluding words of the judgment of Wallis, C.J., which are these:

"Though the order only was that the allegations of the Zamindarini would be notified to bidders, we think it amounted, and was understood to amount, to a rejection of the claim on the ground that it was filed too late."

Both Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ., agreed with this statement. This decision has been read in the same way in *Abdul Kadir v. Somasundaram Chettiar*¹, *Aisamma v. Moideen*², *Kandasami Mudaliar v. Sivagurunatha Mudaliar*³, *Manicka Mudali v. Abdul Karim Sahib*⁴ and *Seetaramayya v. Subramanyam*⁵.

Before Art. 11 of the Limitation Act applies, there must be an order against the applicant, whether claimant or decree-holder. If the order is not adverse, Art. 11 of the Limitation Act can have no application. The observations of Varadachariar, J., in *Manicka Mudali v. Abdul Karim Sahib*⁴, are very much in point. After he had discussed the Full Bench decision in *Venkataratnam v. Ranganayakamma*⁶, the learned Judge went on to say:

"Neither the learned Chief Justice nor any of the other Judges of the Full Bench suggested how a mere rule of conclusiveness as against a successful claimant is to be evolved or implied from a previous order which merely refused to investigate the claim. It seems reasonable to conclude that the conclusiveness even as against a defendant can arise only if an order on the merits had been passed under rr. 60, 61 and 62. Even assuming that a dismissal may be interpreted as an implied adjudication against a claim, it will be unreasonable to regard an order like that passed on the first occasion in the present case merely recording the petition as an implied adjudication on the merits against the claim, so as to preclude the executing Court on a later occasion from investigating the claim on the merits."

Now, can it be said that the order of the 25th January, 1933, passed in this case is an order dismissing the third respondent's petition or an order prejudicial to him? It obviously cannot be construed as an order of dismissal and I am emphatically of the opinion that it is not an order against him. The third respondent did not ask for the attachment to be removed. All that he wanted to make sure of was that his position as mortgagee was not going to be prejudiced by the sale. Whether the property was sold expressly subject to his mortgage or whether it was sold without reference to it would not be detrimental to him. All that the Court could confer upon the auction-purchaser was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor and all that the judgment-debtor possessed at the time of the sale was the equity of redemption in the property put up for auction. The District Munsif satisfied the third respondent by directing that the existence of the mortgage should be brought to the notice of the bidders at the auction. As I am of the opinion that the order does not fall within the purview of O. 21, r. 63 it follows that I do not regard it as being within Art. 11 of the Limitation Act. To hold otherwise would be to do immense injustice to the first respondent who is the assignee of the mortgage. Each case must be decided according to its own facts. If the order is of the nature of that considered in *Venkataratnam v. Rangayakamma*¹, the Full Bench decision will be binding, but not otherwise.

I would dismiss the appeal of the first respondent with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This petition raises a question of the court-fee payable on an appeal preferred by the plaintiff against an order requiring him to pay a sum of Rs. 3,000 and odd being his share of debts binding the property, the possession of which has been decreed to him subject to this payment. The question is whether the plaintiff should value his appeal on the same basis as he valued his suit, namely, as if possession were the subject-matter, or whether he should value it on the basis of the value of the order which he seeks to get rid of in the appeal. Obviously, a contention such as that which has been raised before me would never be raised were it not for the fact that the suit itself has been filed on a fictitious value much less than its real value. Consequently, it is to the advantage of the petitioner to get the appeal relating to only a portion of the subject-matter of the suit valued at the value of the whole of the subject-matter of the suit. The absurdity of this position should not, in my opinion, govern the decision of the question at issue.

What is it which the appellant seeks to get rid of by means of his appeal? Quite clearly, it is not a decree refusing him possession, but a decree which, while recognising his right to possession, requires him to pay Rs. 3,000 and odd as a condition precedent to getting possession. Logically, therefore, the appeal should be valued at the value of the payment the necessity for which he desires to remove. Once this necessity is removed, the decree for possession which has already been granted to him remains.

Numerous cases have been quoted before me. Those upon which the petitioner relies are all of them cases in which the defendant has been granted a certain sum as compensation and appeals against the decree generally, asking for a larger sum of compensation or alternatively for the dismissal of the suit.

Abdul
v.
Abdul
Gani.

In such cases, quite clearly since the defendant asks for the dismissal of the suit the subject-matter of the appeal must be the subject-matter of the suit, the amount payable as compensation being merely incidental thereto. Such cases are: In re *Seethayammia*¹ and *Pathumma Umma v. A. Mohideen*². The first case quoted contains an obiter dictum to the effect that even though the only question raised in the appeal is the value of improvements the subject-matter of the appeal would be the possession of the property. The decision has been frequently quoted and in several instances, it has been pointed out that his observation is obiter and need not be followed. On the other hand, I have been referred to three cases in which the plaintiff is the appellant and seeks to get rid of that portion of the decree which requires him to pay a sum of money as a condition precedent to the enforcement of his decree for possession which amount has been held to determine the value of the appeal. The case in In re *Porkodi Achi*³ is the decision of a single Judge on facts almost identical with those before me. The decision of the Bench in *Mahadevi v. Veerarayan*⁴ relates to a Malabar Compensation case, but the point is essentially the same, the plaintiff being the appellant. The learned Judges who decided this case criticise the obiter dictum in the case in Reference under Court-Fees Act, S. 5.⁵ They also follow another bench decision in a case arising out of the redemption of a kanom where the plaintiff appealed against the order requiring him to pay compensation for improvements—vide In re *Paidal Nayar*⁶. This latter decision also criticises the obiter dictum referred to and approves the decision of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in In re *Porkodi Achi*³ that the value of the appeal is the value of the payment to which the appellant objects.

Thus it will be seen that there is ample authority for adopting that which appears to me to be the logical view, namely, that the appellant-plaintiff who seeks only to get rid of an order for payment of a sum of money should value his appeal at the amount of that sum of money. This is the view taken by the Court below. The revision petition therefore is Trust—Completed dedication of property—Effect of misapplication of income by donor—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 134—Applicability—Simple mortgage of trust property and sale to mortgagee in 1924 in discharge of the debt—Suit for recovery of the property on behalf of the trust—Art. 134 as amended in 1929 applicable.

Where there is a complete divestiture by reason of an absolute dedication of properties for religious purposes, the subsequent misapplication of the income by the donor would not affect its validity and reinvest the property in the donor.

Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Sanatan Dharam High School Trust, Indaura v. Managing Committee, Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Rajput High School, Indaura, (1938) 1 M.L.J. 359: L.R. 65 I.A. 106: I.L.R. (1938) Lah. 63 (P.C.), followed.

Certain properties dedicated by a father for religious purposes, were mortgaged in 1916 and 1921 by his son as his absolute property. There was a mortgage decree on 7th March, 1924 and a sale of the properties to the mortgagees on 11th October, 1924, in satisfaction of the decree and the mortgagees were put in possession. A suit was filed by the sons of the mortgagor on 23rd April, 1934, claiming possession of the properties as endowed properties. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that Art 134 of the Limitation Act as it stood before the amendment of 1929 was applicable and the 12 years' period of limitation began to run from the dates of the mortgages.

Held, as the mortgages were simple mortgages and the mortgagees were not put in possession until 11th October, 1924, when the property was conveyed to them the old Art. 134 is not applicable and the article as amended is applicable.

Mulla Veetil Seeti Kutti v. K. M. K. Kunhi Pathumma, (1917) 33 M.L.J. 320: I.L.R. 40 Mad. 1040 (F.B.), relied on.

T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar and V. Radhakrishnayya for Appellants.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—There are two questions raised in this appeal. The main question is whether certain immovable property has been dedicated absolutely for religious purposes or only made subject to a charge. The second question is whether the suit out of which the appeal arises is barred by the law of limitation. The plaintiffs in the suit were the first and second respondents, both of whom were minors at the time of the institution of the suit on the 23rd April, 1934. The first respondent attained majority soon after the plaint was filed. The grandfather of the first and second respondents one Munnalur Narasimhalu Chetti, was a resident of Madras and possessed three lots of immovable property within the City, namely, a house known as Nos. 101 and 102 in the Devaraja Mudali Street, seven houses and shops known as Nos. 133 to 139 in the same street, and a garden known as Nos. 27 and 28, Munda-kanniamman Temple Street. The suit was filed to recover possession of the property known as Nos. 101 and 102 in Devaraja Mudali Street. It was the respondents' case that this property was dedicated by their grandfather in 1890 to the deity Sri Tholasingaperumal Swami of the Sri Parthasarathi Temple, Triplicane, and that he constituted himself the trustee of the property. The grandfather died in the month of December, 1892, leaving a widow and an adopted son Venkata-raghavalu Chetti, the father of the first and second respondents. All the properties owned by the grandfather came into the hands of the adopted son, who by a deed of mortgage dated 28th September, 1916, mortgaged the property in suit for Rs. 10,000 to the appellants, treating it as his own property. On the 10th January, 1921, he mortgaged the same property to the appellants to secure a further advance of Rs. 15,000. He was unable to discharge these mortgages and the appellants filed a suit to enforce them. A mortgage decree was passed on the 7th March, 1924. On the 11th October, 1924, with the consent of the Court the mortgaged property was conveyed to the appellants absolutely, the consideration being the satisfaction of the mortgage decree. The appellants were unaware that there had been any dedication of the property for religious purposes, but admittedly nothing turns on this.

On the 21st October, 1890, the grandfather applied to the Deputy Collector of Madras for the issue of an 'A' form certificate declaring the title to the property to be in the deity. Such a certificate is of the nature of a patta and sets out the name of the owner of the property and the land-tax payable to Government. The application was made because the grandfather had decided to dedicate this property to the deity mentioned. The application has been put in evidence and prays:

"That an A form certificate may be issued to Tholasingaperumal of Triplicane after the usual enquiry under the rules of the Registration Department."

The application also embodies the following statement:

"The certificate of the house herein mentioned is in my name and as I set apart this house as a perpetual gift to Tholasingaperumal of the Parthasarathi temple, Triplicane, I request your honour to issue the certificate in the name of Tholasingaperumal of the Parthasarathi Temple of Triplicane. The property herein mentioned is one of my self-acquired properties and the income (deducting the taxes and the necessary repairs) to be derived from the house herein mentioned is to be used and spent to the daily charities and the second Vdayati Utsavam of the aforesaid Tholasingaperumal of Triplicane. The abovementioned charities are to be conducted by me till my death and afterwards by my heirs, executors, administrators, assigns or legal representatives under the supervision of the aforesaid Tholasingaperumal's Trustees or Dharmakarthas."

The application was granted and on the 21st February, 1891, the grandfather "for Tholasingaperumal Swami Temple, Triplicane" executed a deed in favour of the Secretary of State undertaking to pay the land-tax due to Government in respect of the property. This document constituted the 'A' form certificate. There can be no doubt that this deed was executed by the grandfather as trustee of the temple. In addition to there being the words which I have just quoted the witness clause is in the following terms:

"Signed, sealed and delivered by the abovenamed Munnalur Narasimhalu Chetti for Tholasingaperumal of Parthasarathiswami Temple, Triplicane, in the presence of"

The grandfather at the same time made a similar application in respect of the property known as Nos. 27 and 28, Mundakanniamman Temple Street and although the document has not been produced it is not disputed that he also signed a similar deed in respect of that property.

The grandfather died leaving a will dated 26th November, 1892. The appellants claim that the will shows that there was not an absolute dedication of the property to the deity, but that the property was only charged for the purpose of providing funds for specified religious services. It is therefore necessary to examine in some detail the provisions of the will on which this argument is based. In the first paragraph of the will the testator sets out and describes his immovable properties. The second paragraph reads as follows:

"The Deputy Collector's Office Certificate bearing No. 2826 for the houses and bazaars having door Nos. 101 and 102 in Devaraja Mudali Street, and the Deputy Collector's Office Certificate bearing No. 2825 for the garden having door Nos. 27 and 28 in Mundakanniammal's Street, Mylapore, out of the above immovable properties were issued in the name of Triplicane Singaperumal on 21st February, 1891 A.D. In the aforesaid Singaperumal's temple shall be conducted from and out of the balance left after deducting from the income coming from these aforesaid houses, bazaars and gardens, expenses for repairs, taxes, gumastas and others, Nityapadi or daily offerings of three-fourths of a measure of sandal or boiled Bengal gram including the offering at Thirumalvada time at a cost of Rs. 4 (Rupees four) per mensem, one palam of Chandanam or sundal paste at a cost of Re. 1 (Rupee one) per mensem, thirtham or blessed water and spices therein and light at Tholasujammah plant at a cost of Rs. 1-8-0 (Rupees one and a half), cardamoms and cloves at a cost of As. 8 (Annas eight) per mensem, and Netti Pushpomala or garland of flowers round the head of the Swami at a cost of Rs. 2 (Rupees two) per mensem. These charities shall be conducted daily. Moreover, in the second Vidayati Utsavam in Vidayati festival following Brahma Utsavams the offerings of eight gunus of Akkaravadisal (sugar rice), eight gunus of Bakalabath (curd rice), six Pongal Taligas, three-fourths of a measure of Dosays (rice cakes), two measures of sundals, three-fourths of a measure of Vadapadi, one measure of Vadapappu, one viss of jaggery for panakam, and pattis, chandanam, spices and abhishekam and all the expenses shall be conducted at a cost of Rs. 125 (Rupees One hundred and twenty-five). From and out of the balance left after deducting from the income of immovable properties which are in the name of the aforesaid Triplicane Tholasingaperumal, the taxes, repairs, gumasta and other charges, the charities written above shall be performed permanently and without obstruction by my heirs, executors and administrators. Should there arise any increase or decrease in the income of the said houses, shops and gardens by any reason other than the default of the said persons it shall on such occasions be conducted suitably to such amounts as are realised."

In the next paragraph the testator directs the money required to defray the costs of other religious charities which are specified should be paid out of the income of the house and shop known as No. 138 in Devaraja Mudali Street. As I have indicated in this block of property are seven houses and shops but only one of the buildings is charged with these expenses.

Any excess of income from this property is to be enjoyed by the testator's "heirs", etc. The testator then directs that if his adopted son should prove to be wise and behaved properly the estate should be delivered to him upon his attaining 25 years of age. If at that time he was in "wicked ways" he should only be paid Rs. 15 per mensem for his maintenance. In paragraph 7 the testator gives these directions:—

"My wife Lakshamma should enjoy for her life the balance left after deducting taxes and other charges from the income of the houses and bazaars having Nos. 133 to 139 in Devaraja Mudali Street and she may appropriate as she pleases the jewels which she is at present wearing."

There are other provisions but these have not been stressed in the arguments.

The suit was tried by Wadsworth, J., who held that the testator before his death had made an absolute dedication of the property in suit and that the will so far as the dedicated property is concerned should only be read as containing directions for the guidance of future trustees in the administrations of the trust. The plea of limitation was raised by the appellants before the learned Judge but rejected. The appellants admit that if the property has been dedicated absolutely the only other question is that of limitation.

There is no evidence of the manner in which the income of the property in suit was applied from the date of the "A" form certificate, namely, 21st February, 1891, to the date of the testator's death, nor is there any evidence as to what became of the income after his death until about the years 1919 or 1920. There is evidence that for five or six years before 1926 the income was applied for the purposes declared by the testator but it is not disclosed whether the income was applied in whole or only in part. If the grandfather's application for a certificate in form "A" and the certificate can be read as completing the dedication it matters not what became of the income. If there was a completed dedication the misapplication of the income would not affect its validity. In *Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Sanatan Dharam High School Trust, Indaura v. Managing Committee, Sunder Singh-Mallah Singh Rajput High School, Indaura*¹, the Judicial Committee accepted, subject to a qualification, the following statement of the law made by the Lahore High Court:

"It is not disputed that for the foundation of a charitable endowment by a Hindu in the province no writing is required. What is necessary is that the purpose be clearly specified and that the property intended for the endowment should be set apart as dedicated to that purpose. It is necessary that the donor should divest himself of the property. Whether he has done so is to be determined by his subsequent acts and conduct. All these propositions are well established. It is not disputed that a valid endowment once created cannot be revoked by the donor."

The qualification of the Board was in these terms:—

"Their Lordships agree with this statement, except that the evidence of divestiture may be contemporaneous, as in this case, and, in such a case, the subsequent acts and conduct of the donor are irrelevant and cannot reinvest him."

Now what is the position here? The grandfather, the absolute owner of the property in a written application to the Collector stated that he had set apart the property as a perpetual gift to the deity and asked that a certificate should be issued showing that the title to the property was in the deity. This application was granted and a deed was drawn up and executed by the grandfather as the trustee of the property vested in the deity by which he covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, personal representatives, and assigns to pay the land-tax to the Secretary of State for India. These documents clearly show that the grandfather had divested himself of all personal interest in the property and obtained from the Secretary of State recognition that the title was in the deity. This is not a case of a colourable transaction. It is true that here we do not know whether the grandfather utilised the income for the trust purposes but this does not matter as there was complete divestiture.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastri on behalf of the appellants has contended that in view of the provisions of the will the proper construction to be placed on the application to the Collector and the "A" form certificate is that there was merely an intention to dedicate. He has argued that a contrary construction would mean that there would be nothing left for the heirs and the testator could never have intended this. I am unable to agree that this would be the case. Of the seven shops and houses known as Nos. 133 to 139 only one was charged for religious purposes and the wording of the will indicates that it was anticipated that there would be surplus income even from this one item of property. In any event there were six houses and shops entirely uncharged. It is true that the testator directed that his widow should enjoy the income of this property for her life and there is no reference to any provision for the adopted son. The adopted son was at that time a boy and it may very well be that the testator considered that the income from the uncharged property was sufficient to support both the mother and son. But be this as it may, the second paragraph of the will is in itself opposed to the contention that there was to be merely a charge. The words "should there arise any increase or decrease in the income of the said houses, shops and gardens, by any reason other than the default of the said persons it shall, on such occasions, be conducted suitably to such amounts as are realized" mean in my opinion that if there was more income than was anticipated more should be spent on the religious objects which the testator had in mind and if the income showed a decrease less should be spent. Then in paragraph 3 where the charge on No. 138, Devaraja Mudali Street, is created there is a special direction that the balance left over after meeting the expenses referred to should be enjoyed by the testator's heirs. There is no such provision in the clause relating to the property in suit. For these reasons I am unable to accept Mr. Venkatarama Sastri's argument that the will shows that in 1890 and 1891 the grandfather had only an intention of dedicating the property and that the dedication which only amounted to a charge was given by the will. The application to the Collector itself negatives this argument and by the deed of the 21st February, 1891, the intention was carried into effect. Accordingly I hold that there was a completed dedication and that the appellants acquired no title to the property. There is no doubt that they were misled. The father of the first and second respondents when the property came in his possession, succeeded in getting an A form certificate which disclosed merely a title in him, but the appellants if they had taken the prudent course of searching the registers in the Registrar's office before accepting his title would not have been in the predicament which they are now in.

The point of limitation does not require much discussion, as there is the authority of this Court which bound the learned Judge and binds us. The appellants say that the article of the Limitation Act which applies in this case is Art. 134 as it stood before its amendment by the Indian Limitation Act, 1929, which came into force on the 1st January of that year. Before the amendment the article provided that the period of limitation for a suit to recover possession of immovable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for a valuable consideration was twelve years from the date of the transfer. The amending Act makes the period run from the date when the transfer becomes known to the plaintiff. It is conceded that if the article as it now stands applies the suit was in time but it is said that it cannot apply and that the mortgages stand as the suit was filed more than twelve years after the mortgages had been entered into. The mortgages were simple mortgages and the mortgagees were not put in possession until the 11th October, 1924, when the property was conveyed to them. In Mulla Veetil Seeli Kutti v. K. M. K. Kunhi Pathummal, which was decided before the amendment of the Limitation Act, a Full Bench of this Court held that Art. 134 of the Limitation Act did not apply to a transfer from a trustee or mortgagee under which possession was not taken by the transferee. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri has conceded that in the face of this ruling he cannot maintain in this Court that the old Art. 134 applies.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs in favour of the first and second respondents. The fourth and fifth respondents will be granted their costs out of the trust property and we fix the amount at Rs. 50.

Madras Borstal Schools Act (V of 1926), S. 7—Submitting proceedings to Joint Magistrate under S. 7 (1) with opinion that the convicted persons were proper persons to be detained in a Borstal School—Joint Magistrate's powers under S. 7 (2).

A conviction has to be recorded before the proceedings are submitted by a Sub-Magistrate under S. 7 (1) of the Madras Borstal Schools Act and when the proceedings reach the Joint Magistrate he has to deal with a person who has been convicted. The powers conferred by S. 7 (2) of the Act are neither appellate nor revisional and only such order as can be passed upon a convicted person is permissible. It is not permissible for the Joint Magistrate to acquit the accused.

Appeal under S. 417 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, against the acquittal of the aforesaid respondents (accused) by the Joint Magistrate of Tuticorin in C. C. No. 173 of 1939 on his file.

N. T. Ragunathan for Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents were convicted by the Sub-Magistrate of Tuticorin for offences punishable under Ss. 323, 324 and 114 of the Indian Penal Code and the proceedings were submitted to the Joint Magistrate of Tuticorin under S. 7 (1) of the Madras Borstal Schools Act with the opinion of the Sub-Magistrate that the respondents who are adolescent offenders as defined in S. 2 (1) of the Act are proper persons to be detained in a Borstal School. The Joint Magistrate acquitted the respondents and the question is whether this is permissible.

The proceedings were submitted under S. 7 (1) of the Madras Borstal Schools Act which provides that when a Magistrate not empowered to pass sentence under that Act is of opinion that an adolescent offender is a proper person to be detained in a Borstal School he may without passing sentence record such opinion and submit his proceedings and forward the adolescent offender to the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate to whom he is subordinate and the Joint Magistrate to whom the proceedings were submitted has to dispose of the case as prescribed in S. 7 (2) of the Madras Borstal Schools Act. That section provides that he may make such further enquiry if any as he may think fit and pass such sentence or order dealing with the case as he might have passed if the adolescent had been tried by him, and as pointed out in *The Public Prosecutor v. Malaipathi Gurappa Naidu*¹, with reference to the analogous provision in S. 380 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it is not permissible to the Joint Magistrate to acquit the accused. A conviction has to be recorded before the proceedings are submitted under S. 7 (1) of the Madras Borstal Schools Act as otherwise there would be no "adolescent offender" and when the proceedings reach the Joint Magistrate he has to deal with a person who has been convicted. The powers conferred by S. 7 (2) of the Madras Borstal Schools Act are neither appellate nor revisional, and the order permissible under S. 7 (2) is only such as can be passed upon a convicted person. The order of acquittal is therefore set aside and the case will go back to the Joint Magistrate for disposal according to law.

* A. A. O. No. 42 of 1937.

District Munsif of Cannanore. Under S. 67 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Chief Commissioner of Coorg has promulgated a rule to the effect that 'lands, houses and other buildings and all immovable property shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution of decrees of Civil Courts in Coorg with the exception of such immovable property as shall have been mortgaged or otherwise specifically pledged as security for the debt which is the subject-matter of the decree sought to be executed.' The argument of the appellant is that this rule must be read as restraining the execution of a Coorg decree for money by the sale of lands even when the decree has been transferred for execution in British India. As the rule stands, the words 'in Coorg' might be read either as qualifying 'decrees of Civil Courts' or as qualifying the words 'shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution.' The former interpretation is possibly the more natural reading of the English words. But I am of opinion that it cannot be the proper interpretation of the clause. The reason for the rule is doubtless the curious tenures in Coorg whereunder the person in separate enjoyment of land commonly has no power of alienation without the consent of distant relatives, who are all notionally regarded as having an interest in land given for enjoyment to each member of a large family. Sub-S. (1) of S. 67, Civil Procedure Code, expressly restricts the power of making special local rules regarding the sale of any class of interest in land in execution of decrees for money, to those cases in which the interests are so uncertain or undetermined as, in the opinion of the local Government, to make it impossible to fix their value. Sub-S. (2) does not contain any such restriction but it empowers the local Government to re-enact any special rule already in force before the Code came into operation in the Province. It is reasonable to suppose that the object of the second sub-section is to deal with cases substantially similar to those dealt with in the first sub-section. Having regard to the language of S. 67 (2), one must, I think, read this rule as a rule merely governing the execution of decrees within the province of Coorg, for the power to re-enact such special rules seems to contemplate only the enactment of rules restricting execution of money decrees within the local area. One may even doubt whether any local rule purporting to restrict or control the execution of decrees in another province would have any validity, having regard to the provisions of S. 40

which prescribes that where the decree is sent for execution in another province, it shall be sent to such Court and executed in such manner as may be prescribed by rules in force in that province. Clearly the Code contemplates the exercise of the rule-making power with reference to execution in any province by the Government of that province. One must therefore read this special rule in the light of the general provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and in so far as it is ambiguous, it must be interpreted having regard to the powers which the local Government of Coorg could legally exercise under the Code of Civil Procedure. In my opinion, the local Government of Coorg had not the power, nor is it likely to have intended to frame rules to restrict the execution of its decrees when transferred to a Court in the Madras Presidency.

I am therefore of opinion that the rule embodying the restriction upon sales of land in execution of decrees of Civil Courts, applies only to sales of land within the jurisdiction of the local Government of Coorg. It follows therefore that the Courts below are right in holding that the decree-holder can execute his decree in the Madras Presidency by the sale of land situated there, in spite of the restrictions under the special rule upon its execution within the province of Coorg. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

Madras Elementary Education Act (VIII of 1920), Ss. 34 and 36—Education-tax levied by District Board—If tax levied by Government—Local authority if Government.

Where a lease deed leasing five villages in a Zamindari, provided that the lessee should be liable for the road cess and the mahimai payable in respect of the villages and further provided that the lessee "shall deliver the account asked for as well as the tax, etc., levied from time to time by the Government", the lessee is not bound thereby to pay the education-tax imposed by the District Board under the powers vested in it by the Madras Elementary Education Act, 1920, as the District Board is not "the Government" and the tax is levied not for the benefit of the Government but for the purpose of elementary education in the particular district.

Petition under S. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga dated 28th July, 1936 and made in S.C.S. No. 462 of 1935.

T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar for Petitioner.

C. Narasimhachari and M. E. Rajagopalachari for Respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

The Chief Justice.—On the 20th March, 1887, the respondent's predecessor-in-title granted to the petitioner's predecessor-in-title a lease in perpetuity of five villages in the Sivaganga Zamindari in the Ramnad District at an annual rental of Rs. 5,000. The deed provided that the lessee should be liable for the road cess and the mahimai payable in respect of the villages. It contained the further provision that the lessee should "deliver the account asked for as well as the tax, etc., levied from time to time by the Government." At the time of the execution of the document the only local tax was the road cess, but as the result of the passing of the Madras Elementary Education Act, 1920, the District Board imposed an education-tax. The respondent was compelled by the local authority to pay this tax and he filed the suit out of which this revision application arises in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sivaganga to recover from the petitioner what he had paid by way of education-tax for faslis 1342, 1343 and 1344. He averred that by reason of the terms of the document the petitioner was bound to pay the tax. The Subordinate Judge held in favour of the respondent and granted him a decree for Rs. 250. This suit was a small cause suit and as no appeal lay, the petitioner filed this application in revision. His contention is that the Subordinate Judge has misread the document. He says that it imposes no liability on him to pay the education-tax.

Leach, C.J.

The petitioner's case is well founded. The document states what the petitioner shall pay. He has to pay the road cess and any tax levied from time to time by the Government. The education-tax is not a tax levied by the Government. It is levied by the District Board. It is true that S. 34 (2) of the Madras Elementary Education Act, 1920, provides that a District Board must obtain the previous sanction of the local Government, unless it is directed by the local Government to levy the tax, but in any event the levy is by the District Board and not by the Government. The tax is levied not for the benefit of the Government, but for the purpose of elementary education in the particular District. S. 36 read with S. 34 (2) provides that the tax shall be deemed to be an addition to a tax levied under all or any of the following heads, namely, land cess, profession-tax and house-tax. But in no sense is the tax levied by the Government.

Mr. Narasimhachariar has asked the Court to hold that the word "Government" should be interpreted as including the District Board. To do so would in my opinion be to distort the true meaning of the word. Moreover S. 3 (21) of the General Clauses Act, 1897, says that "Government" or "the Government" shall include the local Government as well as the Government of India. No reference is made to local authorities. There is a further answer to Mr. Narasimhachariar's argument. If one turns to the sentence which precedes the provision in the deed with regard to the levy of tax by the Government one sees that the parties used the word "Government" in its proper sense. The lessee shall "monthly, deliver in the taluk cutcherry the accounts relating to Avari (indigo), cotton, etc., regarding the said villages to be submitted to the Government." These accounts have not been submitted to a local authority. No provision having been made in the document for the payment by the lessee of any local tax other than the road cess the respondent cannot in law claim to recover his payments in respect of the education-tax from the lessee by virtue of the deed, and the decree passed against the petitioner on the basis of the deed is contrary to law.

Mr. Narasimhachariar has asked that he be given leave to amend his plaint in order to plead the right to recover half the amount under the provisions of S. 88 of the Madras Local Boards Act, 1920. Mr. T. M. Ramaswami Aiyar, the learned advocate for the petitioner, has no objection to the amendment being allowed provided he is allowed to plead to the amended plaint. As a matter of fact, in the grounds of appeal he raised the same contention himself as an alternative to his plea of complete non-liability. In these circumstances we will grant the respondent leave to file an amended plaint in the trial Court with liberty to the petitioner to amend his written statement should he so desire.

The case will be remanded to the trial Court to be dealt with according to law after amendment of the pleadings. The decree which has been passed is set aside and the petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Court. The costs in the trial Court will abide the further hearing.

C filed a suit in a District Munsif's Court for a declaration that a certain alienation was a fraud on creditors and a similar suit in respect of another alienation in the Subordinate Judge's Court. The suit filed in the District Munsif's Court was transferred to the Subordinate Judge's Court and both the suits were tried together and both were dismissed by a common judgment. C then filed an appeal to the High Court against the Subordinate Judge's Court suit and an appeal was filed to the District Court against the decree in the suit originally filed in the District Munsif's Court paying a Court-fee of only Rs. 15 under Art. 17-A treating it as a decree of the District Munsif. The District Judge accepted the Court-fee paid as being correct. The appeal was transferred to the High Court for being heard with the other appeal and the High Court then called on the appellant C to pay deficit Court-fee of Rs. 85 treating the decree as one of the Subordinate Judge only.

Held, that the decree was a decree of the Subordinate Judge and not that of the District Munsif though passed in a suit first instituted before the District Munsif and the proper Court-fee is Rs. 100 under Art. 17-A of the Court-Fees Act, as the value of the suit is less than Rs. 10,000.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore dated 22nd November, 1937, in O. S. No. 176 of 1937.

K. V. Ramachandra Aiyar for Appellant.

T. Krishna Rao for The Government Pleader (B. Sitarama Rao) for Government.

The Order of the Court was delivered by

Leach, C.J.

The Chief Justice.—This appeal has been placed before us to-day on a question raised with regard to the Court-fee payable. The memorandum of appeal bears a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 15 and the Deputy Registrar has called upon the appellant to pay an additional fee of Rs. 85. on the ground that the memorandum should be stamped with a fee of Rs. 100 under the provisions of Art. 17-A of the Second Schedule of the Court-Fees Act. As the appellant questioned the validity of the Deputy Registrar's decision a notice was issued to the Government Pleader. The facts are these. The appellant filed a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Dharapuram for a declaration that a certain alienation was a fraud on creditors. He filed a similar suit in respect of another alienation in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore. The suit filed in the Court of the District Munsif was subsequently transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge and tried along with the suit which the appellant had filed in that Court. By a common judgment the two suits were dismissed. The appellant then filed an appeal to this Court against the decision in the suit which he had filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and filed an appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Coimbatore in respect of the decree of the Subordinate Judge in the suit which was originally filed in the Court of the District Munsif. This is the appeal which has given rise to the question of stamping.

The memorandum of appeal was stamped with a fee of Rs. 15 when it was presented to the Court of the District Judge and the District Judge accepted it as being correct. Art. 17-A provides that the Court-fee on a memorandum of appeal in a suit for a declaration without consequential relief in a District Munsif's Court shall be Rs. 15. The District Court, however, erred in accepting the memorandum as having been properly stamped. The decree which was challenged was a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge and not of the Court of the District Munsif and Art. 17-A clearly states that in the case of a memorandum of appeal against a decree of a District Court or a Sub-Court the fee shall be Rs. 100 if the value for purposes of jurisdiction is less than Rs. 10,000, as in this case. The argument of the appellant that the fact that the suit was originally filed in the Court of the District Munsif makes it a decree of that Court cannot be accepted. The decree was passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge and is rightly declared to be a decree of that Court.

Leach, C.J.

The learned Advocate for the appellant has suggested that this Court has no jurisdiction to require payment of the difference between Rs. 15 and Rs. 100 by reason of S. 12 of the Court-Fees Act. He says that there was no question raised when the appeal was filed in the Court of the District Judge and, not having been raised there, it cannot be raised here. This argument ignores the facts and the wording of the section. The District Court in accepting the memorandum of appeal at Rs. 15 did decide that that was the proper fee. S. 12 (ii) gives an appellate Court power when an appeal comes before it to correct a mistake made below, and this mistake was corrected by the direction of the Deputy Registrar. There is no substance in the appellant's objections and they must be overruled. As he has insisted on these questions being argued and as the Government Pleader has been served the appellant must pay costs which we fix at Rs. 50. The appeal will not be accepted until both the Court-fee and the costs which we have now awarded have been paid.

profits—Whether barred—Civil Procedure Code, S. 149—Grant of time for payment of deficit court-fee after claim barred by limitation—Effect.

After an earlier successful suit for cancelling a certain lease the plaintiffs filed a suit for past mesne profits. It was contended that this suit was barred by Civil Procedure Code, O. 2, r. 2 on the ground that the claim for mesne profits should have been included in the earlier suit inasmuch as it arose out of the same cause of action. In the plaint in the earlier suit the plaintiff had stated that he intended to bring a separate suit in respect of past mesne profits.

Held, following Ponnammal v. Ramamirida Aiyar, (1914) 28 M.L.J. 127: I.L.R. 38 Mad. 829 (F.B.) and Kkuddus v. Mahammad Hussain, (1926) 51 M.L.J. 252, that the claim for mesne profits need not be included in a suit for recovery of possession of property in respect of which mesne profits are claimed by reason of O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code.

Held, further, whatever the reasons for the Courts granting time for payment of deficit court-fees, the effect of the grant of time, even if it is after the claim is barred by limitation, is that the plaint takes effect as if it had been presented along with the full court-fee on the date of its first presentation.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang
Row, J.

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an appeal by defendants 1 and 3 to 6 from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore dated 11th October, 1937, in O. S. No. 4 of 1933, a suit to recover mesne profits for fasli 1333 in respect of certain properties together with interest thereon. There was an earlier suit between the parties which related to these very properties for cancelling a certain lease granted in respect of them by the plaintiff's great-grandmother (second defendant) on the 8th of August, 1923, for three years in favour of the first defendant. The properties in question belonged to the plaintiff who was then a minor under the testamentary guardianship of the second defendant, the great-grandmother who had been appointed to manage the properties by the will of the plaintiff's father, one Thangaswami, dated 6th July, 1915. The testator died a few days later and in the previous suit there was no dispute as to the genuineness of the will. That suit was decreed and the appeal from the decree of the first Court was dismissed by the High Court on 30th August, 1932. There was some attempt made to take the matter to the Privy Council but the idea was finally abandoned and the decree of the High Court which dismissed the appeal with costs was the final decision in that suit. The present suit was instituted on the 14th of October, 1932, that is to say, one and a half months after the High Court had decided the suit in favour of the plaintiff who claims to have attained majority, being till then a ward of the Court under the Guardian and Wards Act, only after attaining her 21st year which, according to her, was on the 15th October, 1929. The present suit was thus instituted just before the lapse of the period of three years after attaining majority. The suit has been decreed by the Subordinate Judge and the present appeal is, as stated already, by defendants 1 and 3 to 6.

As in the Court below, in this appeal also, a good deal of argument has been directed to the point of the alleged bar imposed by O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, to the present suit, the appellants' contention being that the present claim for mesne profits for fasli 1333 should either have been included or had actually been included in the earlier suit inasmuch as it arose out of the same cause of action. This point has been discussed by the Court below somewhat briefly and rightly so because the point is really concluded by the Full Bench decision in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹, which has been subsequently followed in *Khuddus v. Mahammad Hussain*² and it may also be added that no other High Court has taken a different view, and on the other hand there are several decisions of other High Courts which take the same view, namely, that a claim for past mesne profits need not be sued for in a suit for recovery of possession of the property in respect of which mesne profits are claimed by reason of O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. The only important reason given to us by the learned advocate for the appellants for not accepting the view of the lower Court on this point which merely followed the Full Bench decision in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹ is that in view of certain observations and the decision in a later Privy Council case *Naba Kumar Hasra v. Radhashyam Mahis*³, it must be held that the view taken by the Full Bench in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹ is not correct. No doubt, it was also argued that as a matter of fact the claim to past mesne profits had been made in the earlier suit and therefore the present claim was not maintainable. There is, however, no substance in this contention. A perusal of the plaint in the former suit makes it perfectly clear that in so many words the past mesne profits due to the plaintiff in respect of the plaint properties was not included in the suit and that the plaintiff intended to bring a separate suit in respect of the same. In view of this specific statement, and in the absence of any language in the prayer portion of the plaint to show that any claim to past mesne profits was included in the plaint, it is impossible to accept this contention.

As regards the main argument, namely, that the Full Bench decision in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹ is not good law, it is enough to say that nothing in the Privy Council judgment in *Naba Kumar Hasra v. Radhashyam Mahis*² is really contrary to what has been stated by the Full Bench decision in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹. The Privy Council case does not deal with a claim to mesne profits in the first place. Secondly, it is a case in which the prayer that was made in the subsequent suit, namely, for taking accounts, was a prayer that could have been made on the same foundation of fact and law as the claim in the earlier case which was to declare that a certain trust existed and for reconveyance of certain properties. It is not as if this contention that the Full Bench decision in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹ is not correct in view of the Privy Council decision in *Naba Kumar Hasra v. Radhashyam Mahis*² is a new argument put forward for the first time. A similar contention appears to have been pressed in *Ramiah v. Thathiah*³ and repelled in that case by Venkataramana Rao, J. It is not necessary to repeat the reasons given by the learned Judge for repelling this contention. We are in general agreement with what he has said in that case and we need only repeat some of the references which he has made in the judgment, namely, *In re Kantheeswaram Ekanathalingaswami Koil through its trustee Vedanayagam Pillai*⁴, *Rama Kallappa v. Saidappa Sidrama*⁵ and *Ram Karan Singh v. Nakchhed Ahir*⁶. In the last of these cases, there is a comparatively full discussion of the subject. It is enough to add that the law as laid down by the decision in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹ merely reiterated and reaffirmed the law prevailing in Madras since *Tirupati v. Narasimha*², which is a case of 1888 and the Full Bench decision in *Ponnammal v. Ramamirda Aiyar*¹, which is a case of 1914 has held the field without any judicial expression of any doubt regarding its correctness all these years. A further point is that no other High Court has sounded a different note, and on the other hand there are several decisions which take the same view. In these circumstances and having regard to the state of the authorities which are practically unanimous for so many years, it is impossible for us to accept the contention put forward on behalf of the appellants in this case. We therefore find that there is no bar imposed by O. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, on the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits in this case.

The other points raised in this appeal on behalf of the appellants can be disposed of somewhat briefly because there is really no substance in them. One of the two points is one of limitation which was sought to be based on two grounds. These are dealt with in paragraphs 64 to 86 of the lower Court's judgment and paragraph 88 respectively, and there is little to add to what the lower Court has said on these points. The first ground is a pure question of fact, namely, the date of the birth of the plaintiff. There is an extract from the Birth Register which is not attacked on the ground of forgery or the like which shows that the plaintiff was born as alleged by her on 15th October, 1908. This practically unimpeachable evidence and other evidence which points in the same direction has been sought to be attacked on the ground that the Birth Register extract relates not to the plaintiff but to a younger sister of hers who died a few days after birth. This story has been sought to be established by the evidence of witnesses who were not accepted by the lower Court as witnesses of the truth. No attempt was made to file any extract of the Birth Register or Death Register relating to this alleged younger sister of the plaintiff, and as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, if for any reason such an extract could not be got, it was open to the appellants to have examined at least the Village Munsif of the village in which the plaintiff, according to the appellants, is alleged to have been born, namely, the village of Movur. On the whole, we see no reason to differ from the conclusion come to by the trial Judge on this pure question of fact and in respect of which the unimpeachable documentary evidence is all on the side of the plaintiff and there is only unreliable oral evidence on the side of the appellants.

As regards the other ground, very little was said to us in support of the contention and obviously the contention is without force. The contention is that the suit is barred by limitation because the Court gave improperly and without sufficient cause time for payment of court-fee after the plaint had been presented. Whatever might have been the reasons for the Court's granting time, the effect of the grant of such time is clear, namely, that the plaint takes effect as if it had been presented along with the full court-fee on the date of its first presentation, a proposition put beyond doubt by S. 149 of the Code—vide also the decision in *Basavayya v. Venkatappayya*¹. The contention therefore that this claim is barred by limitation has no substance and must be repelled.

The remaining point of any substance is that the value of paddy fixed by the Court below is excessive. The value has been fixed at Rs. 2-10-0 per kalam, a kalam being said to be 24 measures. This estimate is, in our opinion, in accordance with the weight of the evidence which has been fully discussed. There has been no omission on the part of the Court below to deal with any material part of the evidence bearing on this point and we do not see any error of judgment in assessing the value to be given to the evidence on both sides. It is a point worthy of mention that the first defendant himself when he claimed rent in respect of these very properties from his sub-tenants claimed the value of paddy at Rs. 4 and at Rs. 3-8-0. Even allowing for some exaggeration, it is impossible for it to be contended now that Rs. 2-10-0 is excessive. The estimate is mainly based on the evidence given in the previous suit by a clerk of a paddy merchant whose disinterestedness is not questioned and his evidence was obviously based on the accounts which he had in his possession. That is really the best evidence available in the present case on this point, and the lower Court could not be said to have gone wrong in relying mainly on that evidence.

Something was said to us on the award of interest on the amount of mesne profits, calculated on this basis, namely, at Rs. 2-10-0 a kalam in the lower Court's decree. The definition of 'mesne profits' in the Civil Procedure Code itself shows that interest is included; in other words, interest can rightly be awarded by the Court as mesne profits.

It was also stated that by the delay in the filing of the present suit, the claim on the score of interest has proved to be much larger in amount than it would otherwise have been. This does not, however, show that the plaintiff is not entitled to the interest which she claims. On the other hand, the appellants, have, in our opinion, not the slightest claim on the indulgence of this Court. Their conduct as found in the previous suit was extremely reprehensible. There was a conspiracy to defeat the rights of the plaintiff who was then a minor to which her testamentary guardian herself was a party. A grosser case of fraud could hardly be imagined and the present suit is practically for mesne profits in respect of the very property, which was attempted to be alienated by means of a lease for a very low rent in favour of one of the appellants, namely, the first defendant.

We see therefore no reason whatever to interfere with the decree of the Court below. That decree is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs of the respondent (plaintiff). We are informed that an application has been made to scale down the decree debt in the Court below, and it is enough to say in connection with this that the decree in this appeal will not prejudice in any way the disposal of the application, if any, to scale down the debt.

If leave can be granted—Minor—If can set aside a decree on ground of mere gross negligence of guardian ad litem.

Leave to appeal to Privy Council could not be given where the only question sought to be raised before the Privy Council was one which was not raised at any time in the trial Court or in the appeal before the High Court.

Semble.—A minor can challenge a decree passed against him on the ground of the gross negligence of his guardian ad litem without proof of fraud and collusion.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Pandrang
Row, J.

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree of this High Court made in Appeal No. 330 of 1936 on the 14th February, 1939. That decree merely confirmed the decree of the trial Court, the finding of both the Courts being concurrent on the main question in the suit, namely, whether there was gross negligence on the part of the Court guardian appointed to defend the suit in which a decree had been passed against the minor, the present litigation being one to have that decree set aside as against the minor. The entire litigation proceeded in the trial Court as well as in this Court on the basis that gross negligence, if proved, would be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to have the earlier decree set aside, and neither in the grounds of appeal in this Court nor during the arguments at the hearing of the appeal was it stated that gross negligence by itself would not be sufficient in the absence of fraud and collusion. But it is this point and this point alone that is sought to be raised in the present application for leave to appeal. The petitioner wants an opportunity of having this question settled by the highest judicial tribunal and it would appear that they have been emboldened to do that by reason of a Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court reported in *Krishna Doss v. Vithoba*¹, which appears to have been reported only after the High Court's judgment was pronounced. That however is a detail which need not affect our decision in this matter. Even in that case it is pointed out that there is a preponderance of authority among the High Court Judges in India in favour of the view that a minor can challenge a decree passed against him on the ground of the gross negligence of his guardian ad litem. This majority view appears to have been dissented from by the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court on the ground that the majority view was based mainly on the consideration that such an action would lie under the English law, and the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court was of opinion that under the English law itself no such action would lie. We find however that apart from the dictum in *Gregory v. Molesworth*² of Lord Hardwicke which is quoted in some of the reported cases in India, at least since 1874 when *In re Houghton*³ was decided by the Vice-Chancellor Malins, it has been understood to be well settled law in England that such an action would lie. It is sufficient to refer in this connection to the passages quoted from Macpherson on Infants and Simpson on the Law of Infants in *Brij Raj v. Ram Surup*⁴ and also to the passage from Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 17, page 138 on the same page. We find also in the later edition, that is, the Hailsham edition of the Laws of England, the same proposition of law laid down; that is to say, that an infant is as much bound as an adult by a judgment unless there has been fraud or gross negligence on the part of his next friend. We feel therefore some hesitation in expressing the view that under the English law an action would not lie in the case of gross negligence only of the guardian. We are unable to accept the position as being one in which any real doubt remains about the maintainability of a suit of this kind. We however do not base our final decision which is to dismiss the petition on this ground. It is enough for our purposes to say that leave to appeal could not be given in a matter like this for the simple reason that leave is asked for for the purpose of raising for the first time a question which was not raised at any time while the litigation was pending in this country; that is to say, either in the trial Court or in this Court. The resort to the provisions which permit a party to apply for leave to appeal for a purpose like this, namely, for raising a point for the first time after the whole case has been disposed of, would be, in our opinion, an abuse which should not be encouraged. It might also be mentioned that if this new point had been raised earlier, the plaintiffs would have had an opportunity of meeting this point by alleging as an additional ground of claim actual fraud and collusion.

In the circumstances we feel that there is no other alternative than to refuse leave to appeal. The petition is therefore dismissed with costs.

Societies Registration Act (XXI of 1860)—Charitable purposes—One of the objects of the society to manage affairs of a mosque—Valid registration—Committee can hold muthavalli's rights—Adverse possession—Right to manage acquired.

Where there can be no doubt that the paramount object of a society registered under Act XXI of 1860 is charitable, the fact that one of the purposes is the management of the affairs of a mosque cannot take away from it the character of the society as a charitable society.

Where the objects of the plaintiff society were the following:—
“Towards the expenses for conducting all the affairs of the said Masjiday, the jamaitdars capable of giving subscriptions for ever, must pay subscriptions for the maintenance of the Masjiday. From the amount of the subscriptions received from the jamaitdars the expenses mentioned in columns 1 and 2 should be met with, and the remaining balance amount should be utilised for the propaganda of Islami education, for rendering possible pecuniary help to the poor, mussafars and worthy Alims and Ulemas, for removing their difficulties, for other necessary and proper charities, settled then and there by Hanafi and Shafi and for conducting all affairs and for purchasing immovable properties for the perpetual maintenance of the said Masjiday”.

Held, that it could not be denied that the improvement of Islamic education and rendering of pecuniary help to the poor musaffars, etc., were charitable purposes. The fact that one of the objects of the society was also to conduct the affairs of the mosque which did not involve the performance of any religious service by the members of the society could not render the society, a society formed for religious purposes. Therefore the plaintiff society was a charitable society within the meaning of the Act and the registration thereunder was perfectly legal and valid.

A muthavalliship can be held by a single individual or two or more individuals [vide Mahomed Ghouse Siddikk v. Sheikh Moideen Siddikk, (1913) 18 M.L.T. 48 at 53] or by a body of persons constituting a committee (vide Tyabji's Muhammadan Law, 2nd edition, S. 499 at p. 607). There is nothing to prevent an incorporated society performing functions of a muthavalli. A corporation can be a trustee of a charity (Tuder on Charities, p. 284).

Held, further, the plaintiff society having been for a period of 14 years in undisputed management of the mosque in derogation of the right of the defendant should be deemed to have acquired that right. Having surrendered his right in favour of the plaintiff society and lost it, the defendant was not entitled to interfere with plaintiff's management (vide Jamiat Dawat v. Mohammad Shariff, A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 869 at 877).

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned City Civil Judge restraining the defendant by a perpetual injunction from interfering with the plaintiff's right of management, control and possession of the mosque, Masjiday Mahmood Jamait, situate in Pudupet, Madras. The facts relating to the suit out of which this appeal arises may be briefly stated. The said mosque was founded about 85 years ago. It is the plaintiff's case that it was built out of public subscriptions collected from the residents of Pudupet and was primarily intended for the benefit of the residents of the said locality. The defendant's case is that it was built by one Gulam Mohammad, but there is no reliable evidence in support thereof except some evidence of tradition. But it is immaterial who founded it because the evidence establishes that it was the Mohammadan residents of the locality who were taking interest in the said mosque and contributing to its upkeep. There is no deed of foundation prescribing any rules for the management of the affairs of the mosque or for the appointment of a muthavalli or any servant of the mosque. From a document of 1863 (Ex. VII), it is evident that there was a muthavalli to the mosque and he was one Kasim Ali who was maternal grandfather of the defendant. Kasim Ali appears to have died in 1888. The defendant states that a year before his death the said Kasim Ali executed a will (Ex. I) in favour of the defendant in and by which he appointed the defendant as the muthavalli and on the death of Kasim Ali in pursuance of the will the defendant succeeded to the office of muthavalli and was functioning as such. It appears from the evidence that Kasim Ali was the Pesh Imam of the mosque and on his death the defendant continued to be the Pesh Imam and was doing the duties as such till the date of suit. The genuineness of Ex. I is challenged by the plaintiff. The learned City Civil Judge did not record any finding in regard to it but in a later suit between the parties it was found not to be genuine. It is no doubt a document more than thirty years old, but there are certain improbabilities which cast some doubt on the genuineness of the document. It is stated that the defendant was appointed muthavalli with the consent of Ghulam Mohammad who is alleged to have signed the document. From the stone inscription, a copy of which has been filed as Ex. B in the case, the mosque appears to have been built in 1849, and Ex. I is dated August, 1887. It is very improbable that Ghulam Mohammad was alive on that date and there is no reliable evidence of his having been alive on that date. The defendant was admittedly a minor of 12 or 13 in 1887 and it is hardly likely that a minor was appointed either as a muthavalli or Pesh Imam and under Mohammadan Law such an appointment would be invalid. Further, if Ghulam Mohammad had been alive, there is no necessity for Kasim Ali to make the appointment and the appointment could have been made by Ghulam Mohammad himself. Some of these improbabilities render it unsafe for any Court to act on it. If this document cannot be relied on, there is nothing to show how the defendant came to be appointed and was functioning as muthavalli and Pesh Imam. The probabilities are that he, being the daughter's son of Kasim Ali, was permitted by the congregation of Pudupet to do the duties of the said offices. There is no denying the fact that, at any rate from 1890 until 1918, for a period of nearly 30 years the defendant was managing the affairs of the mosque and collecting subscriptions and making disbursements thereof and generally attending to the affairs of the mosque. He was also functioning as Pesh Imam. In 1918 the then circumstances necessitated a change of management of the mosque and it was thought desirable by the jamait or congregation of Pudupet to have the management put on a sound and legal basis. The main reason which apparently led to it was the trouble they had from the Hindu residents of the locality who wanted to put up a Bajana Mandir near the mosque in respect whereof a litigation was commenced, O.S. No. 484 of 1918 on the file of the High Court, Madras. The plaint in the said suit was filed on the 11th November, 1918. In view of this common danger everybody including the defendant conceived the idea of forming a society and getting it registered under the Societies Registration Act and vesting the management of the mosque in a governing body of the society. Accordingly a society was formed and registered under the name and style of Masjiday Mahmood Jamait Managing Committee with twelve members, the defendant being one of them. It was registered on 2nd December, 1918. The memorandum of association is marked as Ex. A-2 in the case and the rules and bye-laws as Ex. A-3. It is clear from them that one of the main objects of the association was to conduct the affairs of the mosque by collecting subscriptions, pay the salaries of the servants and incur expenses for the upkeep of the mosque and do everything which a manager of a mosque is required to do. From the date of the incorporation down to the date of the suit the said society was in undisputed management of the affairs of the mosque and the defendant ceased to function as muthavalli. It was the society that was collecting subscriptions, paying salaries of the Pesh Imam, Muzzein Sahib and the sweeper and directing the performance of the services in the mosque and paying taxes, effecting repairs and generally doing everything which a manager or a muthavalli of a mosque would do. The defendant was only acting as a Pesh Imam under directions given by the society from time to time and he or his son was for sometime acting as a bill collector. In or about June, 1932, misunderstandings arose between the defendant and the Secretary of the Society, apparently due to the fact that the Shafi element in the Committee became predominant and wanted to control the institution. At the inception of the society and for some time thereafter the Committee members consisted of equal number of representatives from each of the two sects, namely, Hanafi and Shafi. In consequence of the preponderance of the Shafi element in the Committee, there seemed to have been some attempt at innovation in regard to the recitation of prayers which was resented by the Hanafi section to which the defendant belonged. Ultimately the disputes between the Committee members led to the resignation of the defendant from the membership of the society. He tendered his resignation on the 5th July, 1932 and began to dispute the authority of the Committee and purported to abolish it. It may also be noted that meetings and counter-meetings were held by the two factions in the Committee and one of the factions purported to call a meeting of the Jamait and abolish the Committee—vide Ex. XXXI. In consequence of these disputes the plaintiff had to file this suit because the defendant began to interfere in the management of the affairs of the mosque by asserting his powers as muthavalli. The defendant's case is that it was only with his consent that the society was formed and it could not have been constituted the sole and exclusive manager of the mosque in derogation of his right as muthavalli, that he was the duly constituted muthavalli and continued to be such. The society according to him was not a validly incorporated society and the initial registration thereof under Act XXI of 1860 was illegal and ultra vires; further he says that, as the Committee had been abolished, even if he ceased to function as muthavalli during the period the Committee was in management, his powers of muthavalli never terminated and therefore he could function as such and nobody has any right to interfere with his management. He further submits that the Committee has also become defunct because the original members who formed the society are all dead and they have not been validly replaced. The plaintiff's case is that the society is a duly incorporated body and that the defendant not having exercised the management for a period of six years from 1918 his rights as muthavalli, if any, were lost, that he accepted the subordinate position of a servant under the mosque while continuing to be a member of the Committee and that he is estopped from questioning the right of the plaintiff to manage the mosque. On the evidence the learned City Civil Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff society was properly registered under Act XXI of 1860, that the defendant lost his rights as muthavalli and that the plaintiff would therefore be entitled to the injunction prayed for.

The main ground on which Mr. Rajah Aiyar the counsel for the defendant-appellant assailed the decision of the learned City Civil Judge is that the plaintiff society is not competent to sue for or claim the relief sought in the plaint. He formulated his contention thus: (1) the society was a religious society and therefore incapable of incorporation under the Societies Registration Act as only charitable societies could be incorporated thereunder; and (2) even if the society was a validly incorporated society it could not acquire by prescription the office of muthavalli, as the right of a muthavalli is a personal right which the muthavalli is incapable of surrendering or relinquishing and the defendant never divested himself of it. In regard to the first contention Mr. Rajah Aiyar submits that both according to the preamble and S. 20 of Act XXI of 1860, it is only a society formed for a charitable purpose that could be validly registered under the Act, that the plaintiff's society was formed for a religious purpose, namely, the management of the affairs of the mosque and that the purpose being solely religious, the society can in no sense be considered to be a society formed for a charitable purpose or a charitable society within the meaning of the Act. He was frank enough to bring to our notice a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in *Anjuman Islamia of Muttra v. Nasir-ud-din*¹, which is against the view he is contending for. That was a case of a religious society called the Anjuman Islamia of Muttra registered under Act XXI of 1860. It was contended in that case that the registration of the society was not legal because it was a society formed for religious purposes and not for charitable purposes. This contention was negatived and it was held that a society for religious purposes would ordinarily be a society for charitable purposes and the society in question was a society for charitable purposes and therefore the registration of the said society was legal. Mr. Rajah Aiyar however submitted that that case proceeded upon a view which is not tenable, namely, that the Indian Legislature made no distinction between religious and charitable purposes. In support of his contention that this view is erroneous he referred to a number of statutes framed by the Indian Legislature subsequent to 1860 where the Legislature drew a distinction between charitable and religious purposes in drafting for the purpose of those enactments. The question therefore for our decision is whether the plaintiff society is a charitable society or a society formed for charitable purposes within the meaning of Act XXI of 1860. We are not sure that the Legislature in using the word 'charitable' in the Act meant to draw a distinction between a charitable purpose and society and a religious purpose and society. The Act was passed in 1860 when according to English Law a gift for the advancement of religion or promotion of public worship or providing or maintaining a place of public worship would be a charitable purpose and a society formed for such a purpose would be a charitable society. According to that law therefore a religious society would be a charitable society, the only condition required was that it should be for the benefit of the public. Most of the enactments relating to that period were framed by English lawyers well conversant with English law. The Indian enactments which related to the charitable and religious endowments before 1860 were the Bengal, Bombay and Madras Regulations, the Madras Regulation being Regulation VII of 1817. In the heading of the Madras Regulation, the language used is "for the support of the mosques, Hindu temples and colleges or other public purposes" and in the preamble "for the support of mosques, Hindu temples, colleges and choultries, and for other pious and beneficial purposes." It will be seen from the context that the words 'public' and 'pious' were meant to connote both religious and charitable institutions. In 1817 according to the law of England public purposes connoted charitable purposes including religious purposes and the word 'pious' was not confined purely to religious purposes because religious purposes were one class of charitable purposes. (Vide Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income-tax v. Pemsel.) No doubt in statutes enacted subsequent to Act XXI of 1860 the legislature used both the words 'charitable' and 'religious' but the definition of those words was expressly stated to be for the purpose of those Acts. The subsequent legislation could hardly therefore be a guide for the interpretation of the term 'charitable' in Act XXI of 1860. The question is, what did the term mean in 1860? We however think it unnecessary to go into the question whether an exclusively religious purpose is a charitable purpose and whether a society formed for such a purpose would be a charitable society within the meaning of the Act, because in our opinion where a society is formed for certain purposes whose paramount object is charitable, the fact that some of the purposes may not be strictly charitable but religious would not render the society any the less a charitable society, if the purpose was one intended to benefit the public or a considerable portion of the public. In the present case the objects of the society are outlined in paragraphs 2 and 3 of Ex. A-2 thus:

"Towards the expenses for conducting all the affairs of the said Masjid-day, the jamaitdars capable of giving subscriptions for ever, must pay subscriptions for the maintenance of Masjid-day.

From the amount of the subscriptions received from the jamaitdars the expenses mentioned in columns 1 and 2 should be met with, and the remaining balance amount should be utilised for the propaganda of Islamic education, for rendering possible pecuniary help to the poor, mussafars and worthy Alims and Ulemas, for removing their difficulties, for other necessary and proper charities, settled then and there by Hanafi and Shafi and for conducting all affairs and for purchasing immovable properties for the perpetual maintenance of the said Masjid-day."

It cannot be denied that the improvement of Islamic education and rendering pecuniary help to the poor mussaffars, etc., are charitable purposes. The fact, that one of the objects of the society was also to conduct the affairs of the mosque which does not involve the performance of any religious service by the members of the society cannot render the society, a society formed for religious purposes. The society concerns itself only with the management of the secular affairs of the institution. So far as religious services are concerned which only consist in the recitation of prayers in the mosque, they are done through the Pesh Inam who is paid a salary. What the society does is what exactly a muthavalli could have done and a muthavalli is only concerned with the management of the secular affairs of the mosque. The society itself does not concern itself with the performance of prayers. There can therefore be no doubt that the paramount object of the society is charitable and therefore the fact that one of the purposes is the management of the affairs of the mosque cannot take away from it the character of the society as a charitable society. We are therefore of the opinion that the plaintiff's society is a charitable society within the meaning of the Act and the registration thereunder is perfectly legal and valid.

In regard to the second point that the plaintiff's society has not acquired right of management we are equally of the opinion that it is also untenable. A muthavalli according to Mahomedan Law is only a manager or a superintendent of a religious institution. As already pointed out, he administers the temporal affairs of the institution. His liability is that of a trustee. A muthavalliship can be held by a single individual or two or more individuals, *Mahomed Ghose Siddikh v. Sheik Moideen Siddikh*¹, or by a body of persons constituting a Committee. (Vide Tyabji's Mohammadan Law, 2nd Edition, S. 499 at p. 607). In the Advocate-General of Bombay v. Moulvi Abdul Kadir Jitaker, a committee of ten persons was entrusted with the management of a mosque with rules framed to fill up vacancies on the death or removal of any one of them. Therefore there is nothing to prevent an incorporated body performing the functions of a muthavalli. A corporation can be a trustee of a charity. (Vide Tudor on Charities, page 284.) It is conceded by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that the right of muthavalli can be . . . lost by adverse possession. There can be no doubt in this case that the defendant has lost his right. It is also not disputed by Mr. Rajah Aiyar that the right to manage a religious institution is a right which is recognisable and enforceable in a Court of law. Such a right can be acquired by prescription. The plaintiff society, having been for a period of 14 years in undisputed management of the mosque in derogation of the right of the defendant must be deemed to have acquired the said right. Having surrendered his right in favour of the plaintiff and lost it, the defendant is not entitled to interfere with the plaintiff's management. (Vide Janiat Dawat v. Mohammad Sharif.)³

Another contention that was advanced was that the society must be deemed to have become defunct because most of the original members died and there is no rule providing for filling up vacancies in case of death. It was contended that the only rule for filling up vacancies was r. 6 which does not provide for the contingency of death. We are not inclined to agree with

1. (1913) 18 M.L.T. 48 at 53.

2. (1894) I.L.R. 18 Bom. 401.

3. A.I.R. 1938 Lah. 869 at 877.

this contention. R. 6 runs thus:

"At the desire of two-thirds of the members of the Committee, and on a motion made by one jamaitdar and seconded by the others, the Committee shall have power to remove one person from one of such sides and appoint another person in his place."

What is contended is that this only confers power of removal and appointment in the vacancies resulting from that removal. It seems to us that the principle underlying this rule is that a power is vested in the Committee to co-opt members who are liable to be removed, no matter for what cause; it may be death. In fact from time to time vacancies were filled up and the Registrar of the Joint Stock Societies was informed of the change in the membership. The defendant himself was a party to several resolutions filling up vacancies in case of death. We must presume that it was done in pursuance of the power conferred on the Committee by r. 6. We must therefore overrule this contention also.

Lastly it was urged that the understanding come to when the society was formed was that equal numbers of Shafis and Hanafis should be members of the Committee but now the Shafi element preponderates and dissensions have arisen which if allowed to continue would be the ruin of the society and it was contended that there is no provision in the rules as to what should be done in case of dissensions and how the matter should be regulated. All these are matters with which we have no concern. They may be properly agitated before the learned Judge who would be trying the suit which has been filed under S. 92 for framing a scheme for the proper management of the mosque. It is open to the learned Judge to take note of all the facts and circumstances and consider whether it would be in the interest of the mosque that this society should be allowed to continue in management or whether any scheme should be framed vesting the management in a committee of individuals instead of in an incorporated society. (Vide Tudor on Charities, p. 581.)

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Mahomedan Law—Mohammadan Mosque—Office of peish imam—Registered society—Power of dismissal whether vesting in the committee of the members of the mosque staff—Nature and the powers of the committee.

In a mosque founded by a Muhammadan and financed from its inception by public subscriptions, a committee began to exercise the functions of mushavalli as a result of the action of the leading members of the congregation forming themselves into a registered society for the purpose of managing the affairs of the mosque and raising subscriptions to finance it. The plaintiff, one of the peish imams of the mosque was dismissed by the committee for having repudiated the authority by the committee. On the question whether such a disciplinary action over a peish imam of the mosque was permissible under the circumstances,

Held, that in spite of the surrender originally of the functions of mushavalli by the plaintiff himself to the committee, as alleged, it could not vest the committee with a power of dismissal over the plaintiff, which he himself could not have exercised.

The committee having been an independent self-constituted society owing no formal allegiance to any general body, it could not therefore have any disciplinary powers over the staff of the mosque by force of the Mohammadan Law.

Ameer Ali 'Mahomedan Law' (4th Ed.), p. 465, referred to.

Moreover there having been no acquisition during the period in which the committee had been functioning of a power to dismiss a peish imam of the mosque, the committee was not clothed with such a power. The plaintiff was entitled to restrain the committee by injunction which he sought of the Court.

Wadsworth, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the first respondent for an injunction restraining the defendants (appellants) from interfering with him in performing his services as peish imam in the Masjiday Mahmood, Pudupet, Madras. He also prayed for damages. The suit was decreed and the defendants appeal.

We are this day passing judgment in a connected appeal (C. C. C. A. No. 36 of 1935 *Muhammad Hussain v. M. M. J. Managing Committee, Pudupet*¹) from a suit brought by the present defendants against the present plaintiff for an injunction restraining him from interfering with the defendants' management of the same mosque and from collecting subscriptions in the guise of muthavalli of that mosque. It is alleged that the Pudupet Mosque was founded by one Ghulam Mohammad in 1849 and has been financed from its inception by public subscriptions. It was founded to serve the needs of the Mohammadans living in the neighbourhood of Pudupet. The first muthavalli was the maternal grandfather of the plaintiff. The plaintiff bases his title to the offices both of muthavalli and peish imam on what is called a towliatnama (Ex. I) of the year 1887 in which the plaintiff's grandfather purports to assign to the plaintiff the offices of muthavalli and peish imam. The instrument purports to be attested by Ghulam Mohammad, the original founder of the mosque. The lower Court has given various reasons for rejecting this document as a forgery. Besides those reasons set forth by the learned Judge, there are two circumstances which in our opinion go to confirm this conclusion. One is the improbability that Ghulam Mohammad who founded this mosque in 1849 would have been alive in 1887. There is of course no evidence of his death, but ordinarily the founder of a mosque would be a man of some standing in the community and it is unlikely that in 1849 he was very young. Even if he was in early middle age, it is hardly probable that he would have been alive 38 years later. The more decisive circumstances is the fact that the plaintiff at the time of his towliatnama appears to have been only about 12 years old and it is not very probable that the offices of muthavalli and peish imam would have been conferred upon an immature boy. The probability therefore seems to be that this document is not genuine.

In our opinion, however, this does not seriously affect the plaintiff's case, for it is common ground that the plaintiff did exercise the functions of muthavalli and peish imam of this mosque without challenge to his title for very many years up to the year 1918, when the leading members of the congregation including the plaintiff himself formed themselves into a registered society for the purpose of managing the affairs of the mosque and raising subscriptions to finance it. It is indubitable that this society known as the Masjiday Mahmood Jamait Managing Committee was in control of the business affairs of the mosque from 1918 until the quarrels started in 1932. During this period it appears that the office of muthavalli was treated as having lapsed, the function of the muthavalli being performed by the Committee. The plaintiff, though he ceased to describe himself as the muthavalli and ceased to exercise the functions of that office, continued to be one of the two peish imams of the mosque and in that capacity he was paid a salary by the Committee. He also functioned for a considerable period as the Assistant Secretary of the Committee and received additional emoluments for that office. In 1932 quarrels began and the plaintiff resigned from the Committee and repudiated its authority. He also attempted to revive the office of muthavalli which he had not in fact exercised for a period of about 14 years. In the connected appeal we have held that the Jamait Committee, whatever be the defects of its original constitution, has prescribed for the right to manage the secular affairs of the mosque and to perform those functions which had hitherto been performed by the muthavalli and that it is not open to the present plaintiff to revive the lapsed office of muthavalli by virtue of which he claims the right of exercising those functions which have in effect been established as the legitimate functions of the Jamait Committee.

It is contended for the appellants in the present appeal that once their Committee is recognised as the legitimate successor of the muthavalli with his powers of control over the mosque and its servants, it follows that the Committee has the right to dismiss the plaintiff from his office of peish imam of the mosque; and that the plaintiff having repudiated the authority of his master, there can be no question as to the propriety of his dismissal. It seems to us that this argument overlooks the weakness of the position of the Committee based as it is on prescription. It does not appear that any powers were conferred upon the Committee at its inception otherwise than by the general consent of the congregation of the mosque including the plaintiff himself. The nature of the objects with which this Committee started its work can be ascertained from its memorandum of association. Quite clearly it was intended firstly to collect subscriptions for the maintenance of the mosque and secondly to pay the expenses of the Committee and of the mosque and utilise any balance for religious, educational and charitable purposes connected with the mosque and for the creation of endowments for the mosque. The rules purport to carry out these objects, but do not expressly confer upon the Committee any disciplinary powers. The proceedings of the Committee throughout the following years indicate that the Committee has exercised a general control over the servants of the mosque including the two peish imams, has required that they should not absent themselves without leave, has reproved them for unpunctuality and has paid the wages and when subscriptions were insufficient to meet the wages, has decided on the proportionate reductions. There is a record of the removal from service of an acting muazzin, but even that is not clearly shown to have been a disciplinary act. Taking the history of this period as shown in the records, it must be conceded that there is no instance of an assertion by the Committee of a right to punish the peish imam, though there are instances of the exercise of a general supervision over him along with other servants.

It is contended that if the Committee has power to supervise and control, it must necessarily have a power of dismissal in case its authority is flouted. It is doubtful whether this proposition is sound. The peish imam was certainly not appointed by this Committee. Whatever be the origin of the plaintiff's appointment, he had certainly been in unquestioned enjoyment of the office of peish imam for very many years before the Committee came into being. Although the Committee took over the functions hitherto exercised by the muthavalli, it never described itself as a muthavalli of the mosque and there are obvious difficulties in asserting that the surrender by the plaintiff himself of the functions of muthavalli to the Committee automatically invested this Committee with the power of dismissal of the peish imam. Doubtless it is customary in many mosques for the muthavalli to exercise full disciplinary powers over the servants of the mosque. But this power cannot have vested in the muthavalli of the suit mosque, for the muthavalli was himself the peish imam and it is absurd to contemplate the exercise of the power of dismissal by the individual who is himself liable to be dismissed. It seems therefore necessary to postulate that at the time when the plaintiff was the muthavalli, the disciplinary control over him in his capacity of peish imam must ultimately have resided elsewhere, whether in the congregation as a whole or in the descendants of the founder or in the Court as representing the Kazi. The natural conclusion therefore is that the surrender by the plaintiff of his functions as muthavalli to the Committee cannot have invested that Committee with a power of dismissal over the plaintiff, which he as muthavalli could not have exercised.

Ameer Ali in his Mohammadan Law (4th Edition, p. 465) states that in the absence of a muthavalli the power of nomination and appointment of an imam to a mosque is given to the wakif's descendants and the members of his family preferentially to others. At p. 467 it is suggested that if the person appointed by the wakif is incompetent or unfit, the congregation have a right to select a more fit person but with the proviso that an application will have to be made to the Kazi for the removal of the incompetent servant and the appointment of the person selected by the congregation. Now, in this case though the Committee has doubtless for many years functioned with the consent and approval of the congregation, it is not constitutionally a representative body acting for the congregation, but an independent self-constituted society owing no formal allegiance to any general body. It cannot therefore have any disciplinary powers over the staff of the mosque by the force of Mohammadan Law. Any powers which it has must have been acquired by prescription or by grant. There is no evidence of any valid grant of powers to this Committee. The extent of its powers must therefore be governed by the extent to which it has established those powers by the exercise of them during the fourteen years during which those powers were unquestioned. There having been no acquisition during this period of a power to dismiss a peish imam of the mosque, the necessary conclusion is that the Committee is not clothed with such a power.

* It is contended that the absence of such a power will make the proper control of the mosque impossible. The answer to that contention is that there is now pending a suit for framing a scheme for the proper control of the mosque in which any defects in the system whereunder it is administered can be put right. For the present we are only concerned with the powers of the parties as they stood at the time when these disputes began. Our conclusion must be that the plaintiff was in lawful possession of the office of peish imam and was entitled to perform its functions and receive its emoluments and that the defendants were not clothed with any authority to remove him from that office.

It follows therefore that the dismissal of the plaintiff was without authority and that the plaintiff is entitled to the injunction which he seeks. It is represented that the plaintiff does not press for the nominal damages of Rs. 25 awarded by the trial Court. The decree will therefore be modified by the exclusion of the relief of damages. In other respects the appeal is dismissed with costs. We desire to observe that this judgment in no way affects the relation between the Committee and the other peish imam who is not a party.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to a claim for arrears of rent by the respondent and a claim by the present tenant (the appellant) that by his payment of the rent due for Faslis 1346 and 1347 all those arrears have been wiped out under S. 15 of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act. The appellant was not the original tenant but an assignee from him in 1936. The question is whether the arrears of rent claimed by the respondent are 'rent payable' by the appellant. It is true that appellant is not personally liable to pay rent for the period before the assignment to him, but it is to my mind clear that, apart from the Agriculturists' Relief Act, respondent could in the final accounting between himself and appellant insist upon the appellant's paying him the whole of the arrears as a set off against whatever might be payable to appellant as compensation for his improvements. In a very real sense therefore the whole of the arrears is 'payable' by appellant; and I cannot accept respondent's further argument that money claimed by him as rent and payable by appellant ceases to be rent when he pays it merely because he was never personally liable to pay it. I am of opinion that S. 15 of the Act is a section of which the appellant can take full advantage and regard it as clearly in accordance with the policy of the Legislature that an assignee should be in no worse position in this respect than an original lessee. The appeal will be allowed and the order of the District Munsif restored with costs throughout.

LORD JUSTICE GODDARD.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Allahabad dismissing an appeal by the present appellants and allowing an appeal by the first three respondents from a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Agra. The action was brought to recover Rs. 44,000 the principal sum secured by a mortgage dated 17th August, 1924, with interest thereon at 5½ per cent. This mortgage was in fact the last in a series by way of renewal of an original mortgage dated 22nd July, 1892, whereby Durjan Sal, the father of the first appellant and great grandfather of the second and third appellants, had mortgaged some of his ancestral lands to one Bhoraj the father of the fourth respondent, for Rs. 25,000. The consideration for the mortgage is stated in the deed to be the discharge of two promissory notes with interest amounting to Rs. 6,221-8-0 and Rs. 18,778-8-0 cash, for payment of a debt due under a bond. On the same day the mortgagor executed a bond for Rs. 2,000 payable in two years in favour of the mortgagee. This mortgage was renewed on 26th April, 1895, again on 29th July, 1910 and finally on 17th August, 1924, by the mortgage which is the subject of the present suit. The execution and completion of the original mortgage and the receipt of Rs. 6,221-8-0 were admitted by the mortgagor in the presence of the Sub-Registrar, who certified that the cash payment of Rs. 18,778-8-0 and the two promissory notes were given to the mortgagor in his presence. Between August, 1912 and January, 1917, various payments, four in all, were made on account of interest due on the mortgage. On 30th September, 1932, the respondent Khetpal in whom the mortgage was then vested assigned all his rights therein to the father of the first and third respondents.

Seven issues were framed, but for the purpose of the present appeal, only the first is material and was the only one argued, namely: "Was the bond in suit executed for consideration and is it not binding on the defendants?" The case made for the defendants was that the original mortgage was not made for any legal necessity, but to procure money to enable the mortgagor to pursue a course of immoral living and debauchery, and that the true consideration was not Rs. 25,000 in as much as the promissory notes were merely fictitious documents, the sum of Rs. 6,200 never having been advanced at all, nor had the Rs. 2,000 ever been paid to the mortgagor. The Subordinate Judge found against the defendants on their plea as to there being no legal necessity for the borrowing, and his finding on that point was upheld by the High Court and is not now the subject of appeal. But the Subordinate Judge held that the sum of Rs. 6,221-8-0 never was advanced on the promissory notes and that there was no consideration for the bond for Rs. 2,000, and there was thus a failure of consideration to the extent of those two sums. He accordingly granted a decree for the amount of the principal and interest less these two sums, and, having recalculated the interest, he deducted in all Rs. 25,488. On this point the High Court reversed the learned Subordinate Judge and granted a decree for the full amount claimed.

Now there seems to have been some misunderstanding as to the onus of proof in this case. In their judgment the High Court said: "We are of opinion that the burden of showing that consideration had passed under the mortgage of 1892 had been discharged by the plaintiffs and the defendants did not produce any satisfactory evidence to show that the money was returned to the mortgagee". But in the opinion of their Lordships the onus of proof on the question whether there was consideration, or whether the full consideration stated in the mortgage had in fact passed, is wholly on the defendants and it is not for the plaintiffs to prove this matter affirmatively; on the other hand when the question is whether there was legal necessity for the borrowing, the onus of proving that there was is on the plaintiffs. Now the only evidence that part of the consideration stated in the mortgage was not in fact paid, was that of a witness named Ganesh Prasad, a man, 73 years old, formerly in the service of the mortgagor, who stated that he had been present when the transaction was completed. In substance he deposed to three matters, firstly as to the immoral life of the mortgagor; secondly that the money which the Sub-Registrar certified was paid over to the mortgagor in his presence was never paid at all and thirdly that the Rs. 2,000 secured by the bond for that amount was produced in two bags and given by the Sub-Registrar to the mortgagor who did not keep it but returned it to the mortgagee. The learned Subordinate Judge rejected this witness's evidence on the first two matters to which he deposed and accepted it as to the Rs. 2,000. The High Court rejected this witness's evidence entirely and their Lordships do not think it necessary to add anything to the reasons they gave for so doing as it is obvious that no reliance could be placed upon it. So far as the fictitious character of the two promissory notes was concerned, there was really no evidence of this at all, but the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have based his findings on certain circumstances which appeared to him suspicious and which need not be set out in detail because even if they gave rise to suspicion there was no evidence which would justify a finding that the sums secured by the notes had not in fact been paid. Ganesh Prasad's evidence having been rejected as untrustworthy there was nothing left in the case, and it was really unnecessary for the plaintiffs to have called any evidence on the issue as to consideration, for, as has already been pointed out, the burden of proof was entirely on the defendants. Not only did they wholly fail to discharge this onus, but the evidence which was called by the plaintiffs was indeed overwhelming. Had the defendants led any evidence sufficient to shift the onus of proof, that produced by the plaintiffs would, in their Lordships' opinion, have afforded a complete answer.

The second appellant who was a minor when the suit was heard has presented a petition asking that the case might be remitted for rehearing. He bases his application on the ground that his guardian was negligent in failing to make proper inquiries into the facts of the case and to procure evidence to prove that a part of the money was borrowed for gambling in litigation, and for immoral purposes, in not taking steps in time to procure the examination of the first defendant and in failing to apply for a summons for the production of the mortgagee's account books. Both the petition and the affidavit in support are in the vaguest possible terms.

There is not the smallest indication of the identity of the witnesses whom it is alleged might have been called, nor to what they could have deposed if they had been. The first defendant deliberately abstained from giving evidence and to pretend that it was the duty of the guardian to have forced him to testify is fantastic. Nor is there any substance in the complaint as to the mortgagee's account books more especially as during the case the defendant Khetpal, who ought to have had them had there been any, swore they were not in existence.

It is impossible to entertain an application for re-trial on such vague and unsubstantial grounds as these.

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that both the appeal and the petition should be dismissed. The appellants will pay the costs of the respondents Nos. 1 to 3 (plaintiffs), who alone appeared.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

Venkataramana Rao, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit to enforce two deeds of mortgage dated 24th June, 1924 and 24th April, 1930, executed by the deceased father of defendants 1 to 3 to the plaintiff. Both the deeds of mortgage not only gave security to the plaintiff over the immovable property comprised therein but also over the produce realised therefrom every year. The operative portions in the deeds of mortgage run thus:

Venkata-
ramana
Rao, J.

"The produce realised therefrom every year have been hypothecated to you."

The question for decision in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is not entitled to enforce his mortgage security over a sum of Rs. 364 which was deposited into Court during the pendency of the suit being the net sale proceeds of the crops of Fasli 1345 on lands which are items 1, 2, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of Schedule A to the plaint comprised in the deeds of mortgage. The question arises in this way. On the 14th of May, 1933, the father of defendants 1 to 3 executed a registered lease deed of the said lands in favour of defendants 7 and 8 for a period of five years commencing from Fasli 1343. The rent reserved thereunder was 10 putties of paddy and 80 bundles of hay worth Rs. 10. The sixth defendant in execution of a money decree obtained by him against defendants 1 to 3 as representatives of their father in O. S. No. 149 of 1934 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Nellore attached the immovable properties which were comprised in the deeds of mortgage. Objections were raised as regards the sale of the properties in pursuance of that attachment and the matter was compromised by the mother of defendants 1 to 3 executing a deed of transfer of the said lease in favour of the sixth defendant for the unexpired period of three years in satisfaction of his decree and the sale and other proceedings were stayed. The deed of transfer is dated 24th September, 1935. The sixth defendant full well knew that the property comprised in the lease deed was subject to the two mortgages in favour of the plaintiff because it was distinctly recited in the counter-affidavit filed by the guardian of defendants 1 to 3 objecting to the sale that the property was subject to two mortgages in favour of the plaintiff.
